Let the hope be born and nurtured that reform will not stop there, but that the members of the U. F. O. and the Labor party will set a worthy example to the members of the older parties and abandon the silly custom of wearing their hats while the House is in session except on the rare occasions when the rules compel them to uncover, such as when they are speaking or entering or leaving the chamber. This is a prerogative which has always been jealously insisted upon by statesmen in Parliament or Legislature. It seems to be regarded as a custom which sets the members apart from ordinary mortals. Perhaps in some cases the man entitled to the privilege of wearing his hat while the multitude was forced to remain uncovered did invest himself with an air of more or less profound mystery and wisdom. After making a speech, the manner in which the average statesman reached for and crowned himself with his hat was an indication of personal character. Styles in headgear, too, differed. Some assumed the slouch hat, which was as a rule worn pulled down over their eyes, giving the wearer a sleuth-like appearance. Others ran to silk tiles, slanted rakishly over either ear or perched on the back of the Jove-like head.

Ask the average statesman why this custom has been followed all these years and he will probably say that it has been adopted as part of the established procedure of the British Parliament. That cannot be gainsaid, but whence the origin? It is generally admitted now that the fashion dates from the strenuous days when in the interests of personal safety, men slept either actually on their arms or in close proximity to their weapons of warfare. Even while engaged in the peaceful affairs of state they were not immune from sudden attack, but deemed it the part of wisdom to remain armed and hatted, ready at a moment's notice either for offensive action or precipitate flight.

THE GLOBE'S DEATHBED REPENTANCE.

THE GLOBE has developed a most gratifying spirit of political righteousness, but unfortunately its repentance comes as late as that of the man who refuses to make a move to set his spiritual house in order until his physician has warned him to prepare for the worst. The Globe says that Premier Drury is asking elected members of the U. F. O. party to retire in favor of members of his Cabinet who are now without seats, and as an inducement is offering them appointive positions. The Globe then quotes a section of the criminal code and by easy interpretation makes it appear that Premier Drury is violating the law.

Manning Doherty, the new Minister of Agriculture, was defeated in Peel by a Conservative. The Brampton Conservator, a newspaper edited by a Unionist member of Parliament, charges that the Conservative legislator-elect was approached by a member of the Board of Works and offered a position if he would resign to make room for Mr. Doherty. On the very face of it the story looks fishy. The U. F. O. would hardly be anxious to provoke another sharp contest by opening a constituency so overwhelmingly Conservative as Peel, and so risk the defeat of one of its Cabinet Ministers. Anyway, if the elected member were approached, there is nothing to show that the negotiations were authorized by Premier Drury.

From the earliest days of Canadian political history men have resigned office to make way for others, and reward for the apparent sacrifice has not been lacking. It is, however, refreshing to note that the Globe is becoming righteous even if its apparent conversion is somewhat belated.

CANADA'S NAVAL POLICY.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN says he has not changed his views with regard to the naval policy of this country. That means that he still believes, as he did in 1913, that Canada should make a cash contribution to the British Admiralty to defray the cost of constructing the war vessels which are deemed Canada's fair share of the burden of the naval defence of the Empire. This policy is favored rather than the alternative of having Canada construct her own offering to the Imperial navy.

Back in 1912 Premier Borden consulted with the British Admiralty, and it was at that time decided that Canada, by contributing three modern dreadnoughts to the battle fleet, would be discharging her full obligation in this regard. This agreement would have been carried out to the letter but for the partisan action of the Canadian Senate, as a result of which this country had no adequate part in the naval defence of the Empire during the late war.

It seems that the responsibility of each dominion in naval equipment for the general good is again to be settled in conference. Canada's share will be allotted by mutual agreement. It is likely that the three dreadnoughts that she will be required to furnish will be constructed in the British yards instead of at home. It is estimated that the plant necessary for the building of modern war vessels would cost at least six million dollars. It would not, surely, be considered good business policy to spend that amount for the construction of three battleships, the plant to be practically scrapped on the completion of the work, because no further use for it would exist. As a commercial proposition alone, the Borden idea of having the vessels built in the established British plants will commend itself. Canada will continue the construction of trade vessels, but the plant needed for this purpose is vastly different from that required for the construction of war vessels.

Had the Borden policy been given effect in 1913 Canada would have been represented in the war by three modern naval fighting machines, perhaps not from the beginning, but at least in the earlier stages of the conflict. Three of the warships built by England in 1913 and 1914 would have been Canadian vessels paid for by Canadian money. It was never intended that the British navy would have been increased to the extent of three vessels by Canada's contribution. The British taxpayers were simply to be relieved to the extent of thirty-five million dollars as a result of the implementing of the agreement made between Sir Robert Borden and the British Admiralty.

WINTER EVENINGS BY THE FIREPLACE

(Rob. Roy, in Farmers' Sun)

Now stir the fire and close the shutters fast,
Let fall the curtain, wheel the sofa round,
And while the bubbling and loud hissing urn
Sends forth a steaming column
And the cup that cheers, but not inebriates, wait on each,
Then let us welcome peaceful evening in.

COWPER.

One of the real sort of fireplaces is only found in the country. These foolish little contrivances in towns and cities are only make-believe, bought in departmental stores to use electricity, burn gas in fictitious logs of soft coal, it is all the same, —only a pathetic striving after the actual joy of the hearthstone.

Not only must it be in the country, but in a farm house, an old fashinoed house with large living room, whose beamed ceiling has looked down on many a happy gathering. Then it must not be built of fancy bricks or in fact any kind of bricks. Gather boulders from all over, in lumber wagon, buggy or motorcar, even if miles from home. Never pass an attractive looking boulder. You will soon become an expert on stones and will wonder at the variety to be found on almost every country road. Get all the different shades you see, light dark, fool's gold, and flint, and mix them promiscuously when building. Then build on massive lines. Get immense flags for the hearth, and build it lareg enough to burn logs four feet long.

Whne building be sure and don't forget to put in the crane. Get the blacksmith to make it, and don't let him spoil it with any fancy touches, and indiscriminate use of the file. Then get a black iron kettle and griddle for making pancakes. Do [illegible] get the blacksmith to make a poker out of 5-8 inch stuff about four feet long, with ring for hand hold and trun of six inches at bottom.

Get in your supply of wood. On most farms wood is plentiful and help is scarce and a winter's supply for a large fireplace can be got up in a short time. "When chill Novembers' surly blast makes field and forest bare," will be the start of your best season on the farm. After a hearty farm supper, stir up your fire and invite your guests for an evening's enjoyment.

Who are your guests? Along the ordinary concession line do you find material for pleasant and profitable evenings,

Around the quaint old room the light from the fireplace shows several bookcases with rows and rows of books. Let us look for a moment in poet's corner. In the place of honor we find the work of the ploughboy-poet, Bobby Burns. The book is almost worn out, giving mute testimony of happy evenings of the past.

Besides we find Tennyson, with In Memoriam, Locksley Hall, Maud, The Lotus Eaters, Idylls of the King, and others which have often been studied about the old fireplace. Then Longfellow has given many splendid nights, Hiawatha, Evangeline, being the favorites. Cowper, Keats, Scott, Byron, Bryant, Lowell, Shakespeare, Browning, Moore, Goldsmith, Mrs. Hemans, are all shown by the light of the fire. James Whitcombe Riley with That Old Sweetheart of Mine, The Raggedy, Raggedy Man, When the Frost is on the Punmpkin, and the Fodder in the Shock, has made bright many an evening hour. And Pauline Johnston's Flint and Feathers, The Song My Paddle Sings, Yasda, and others—what a wealth of companionship we have in the poets' corner.

You must have a set of Dickens' expensive if you can afford it, but if not, a $5 set will do. On a farm where over 70 head of cattle were kept the children were Dickens lovers and called the calves after favorite Dickens characters. Then get a set of Thackeray's works. "Becky Sharp" will enliven many a winter evening.

Hawthorne must not be forgotten. The Scarlet Letter. Twice told Tales, The Marble Faun, The House of Seven Gables, will all be welcome. Then George Elliot; start with The Mill on the Floss, and you will want them all. Hall Caine is sometimes gruesome but never dull. Marie Corelli wil surely have a welcome.

Talk of the loneliness of farm life. Beside the fireplace you can entertain the best not of this age or country, but of every age and every land.

NO POMP NOR COURT DRESS AT THE NEXT OPENING OF THE LEGISLATURE

Premier Drury Will Abandon All the Frills Which Were Wont to Mark Such Occasions Under Former Regimes

Toronto, Dec. 4.—The frills, pomp and display which age-old customs have fastened upon the ceremony that marks the opening of the Ontario Legislature are to be done away with by the United Farmer-Labor Government. At the next session of the Legislature most of the tinsel and show, and the atmosphere of social exclusiveness which in the past has been characteristic of the ceremony attendant upon the opening day of the House, will be disregarded. Instead a simpler ceremony, from which the social element will in a sense be lacking, and which in the judgment of the Government will be more in keeping with the democratic ideals of the people of the province which carried them to power, will mark the first sesion of each Legislature.

When the House first meets in Feburary next, the booming of cannon, the attendance of Governor and officialdom general in court uniforms of other days, the presence of a throng of officers in fullest military regalia, and of women in jewels and evening dress, will be lacking. The occasion will be simple and unostentatious. In comparison with the glory, gorgeousness and formality of former years, it will be markedly sober.

It has been the custom for the Lieutenant-Governor to attend the opening of the House dressed in Windsor Court uniform. This attire, among other things, includes a Nelsonian naval hat, such as was formerly associated with the dress uniform of an admiral in the Royal Navy. White silk stockings, coat heavily braided in gold, silk trousers and white shoes with sparkling buckles ordinarily bedeck the Governor of the Province for this occasion.

The Old Order Changeth.

The rest of the ceremony is fully in keeping with gorgeousness of the attire of the King's representative in this Province. From Government House to the Parliament Buildings the Governor is driven at a stately pace, escorted along the full route by mounted soldiers in full military uniform. Upon the arrival of the retinue at the Parliament Buildings it is customary for the Governor, in his braided coat and white silk stockings to inspect the escort in their showy rather than serviceable uniforms. Then a number of guns boom out a general salute, and the Lieutenant-Governor enters the Parliament Buildings, where the ceremony is continued in the Legislative Chamber with equal regard to tradition and formality.

The Government has decided to delete from this ceremony so much that very little of it will remain. The Governor, on the day of the opening of the next sesion of the Legislature, will be freed from the peril of disporting himself in flimsy silk, and will wear clothes more in keeping with present-day ideas of how a Legislature should be launched on its busness career. The pavements between Government House and the Parliament Buildings will not resound with the clicking of the shoes of the Governor's cavalry escort and the cannon at Queen's park will look silently and dully on while the Governor, almost unattended, leaves his motor car and enters the great hall.

What will become of the state coach, the uniform of silk, stockings, silk trousers, and gold-braided coat? Will they be presented to the Ontario Museum as curios or retained by some individuals of the old school, who will cherish them, for their associations and history, as keepsakes? At any rate, their usefulness is gone for the present, and most likely for all time to come. The old order, once swept away, is not likely to be restored.

Mennonites Must Obey Lord or Move On to Another Country

Regina, Dec. 4.—Charges that discrimination was made in the making of appointments and in the apportionment of road work in the constituencies of Opposition members, except where recommendations came from defeated candidates, were stamped as "absolutely untrue" by Hon. S. J. Latta, Premier Martin and Hon. Geo. Langley, in the Saskatchewan Assembly.

Hon. Geo. Langley said in the House that the Government had determined that the Mennonites "would either have to send their children to our schools or else find another country in which to live."

Mainly About People

Among thrift talkers Theodore Roosevelt used to be quoted along with Ben Franklin. In his opinion the first duty of a man to his family was to get ahead of the day's need to lay up something in the way of investment.

Recently the complete inventory of property he left was made public by the New York state tax authorities. It furnishes an interesting story in diversity, for there are represented fifteen stock issues and theirty-eight bond issues!

Roosevelt either knew a good security or followed good counsel. Of the fifteen stock issues passing to his estate only two are set down as of no value—and of one of these he held only three shares. Three New York bank stocks and the stocks of such railroads as Pennsylvania. Atchison preferred, and Great Northern preferred showed the conservatism of his investment policy.

His heaviest bond investment was in the goverment liberty issues—the first, third and fourth. He had put $75,050 in them. He held, also, $1,000 of the Canadian Victory loan, due in 1923, and $10,000 of the Anglo French bonds.

Three thousand dollars invested in Mexican bonds was written off as a loss, and $20,000 Rock Island bonds of an old issue were set down as of no value. On the whole, probably not three per cent of Roosevelt's investments turned out worthless.

By far the larger part of his bonds were railroad bonds—Union Pacific, Atchison, B. & O., Central and New Jersey, Central of Georgia, Burlington, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Wabash, Southern, St. Paul, Alton, etc. Generally speaking, they were the sort of bonds our savings banks buy; income on them ranged from 3 1-2 to 5 per cent.

Safety first was obviously the Roosevelt policy in making investments. [illegible] of $565,000, the income from which was between $20,000 and $25,000 a year—not much above 4 per cent.

He was a successful man which in his life illustrated his own fine teachings. He wasn't rich in the sense that is understood in Wall street. Probably the larger share of the $811,000 he left was inherited. But he did add something to the accumulation to be passed on.

He did not make money getting his chief interest or even one of his chief interests. In that respect he was representative of the best in America, of the best in the world. But he used diligence and sound sense in the handling of the "ten talents," which had passed into his care. He spent freely because he earned largely. He was generous, He lived in comfort, cared nothing for the luxuries. He saw to it that the larger life he loved was amply financed. Dying, he not only left the world richer because of his life, but he passed on a material inheritance a little larger than he had received.

LADY ASTOR CLAIMS TO BE REGULAR WOMAN

NOT A MERE CURIOSITY AS SOME PAPERS REPRESENT HER

London, Dec. 4.— In a letter published in London newspapers, Lady Astor, M. P., asked that she be regarded as a "regular working member of Parliament and not a curiosity." FIGHT STARTS AT POLICE STATION

MAN CHOOSES PECULIAR PLACE TO GET REVENGE FOR MEAN ACT

Whoever is prepared first wins out was the theory that was proved at the police station this morning a short time before the court opened.

One man was walking quietly from the stairway to the outside office and was passing through the doorway when he was the recipient of three well placed blows, two on the right hand side and one to the left of the jaw. He made some sort of effort to retabiate but by this time Detective Cookman had separated the pair.

The suddenness of the attack appeared to appal the few people who were standing around at the time and the expression on their countenances gave one the impression that they were wondering if their turn came next.

It was learned afterward that the alleged attack was provocated by the fact that the defendant had induced the wife of the other man to leave him and had thus been largely responsible for the breaking up of his home. Under those circumstances the surprise attack may be considered by some as justifiable.

Both men are from Belleville and there promises to be some smoke flying if the two men meet anywhere out in a police station.

FRIENDSHIP HARD TO EXPLAIN

Scientists Unable to Account for Companionship of Australian Death Adder and the Rat.

Though scientifically regarded as "the most dangerous and probably the most deadly" of Australian snakes, the death adder has to its credit many everyday proofs to the contrary; so many, indeed, that some are inclined to class it as comparatively harmless, the reasons for such opinion being: (1) the small size of the creature, reducing the risks of its being interfered with inadvertently; (2) its amiability; (3) the fact that unless the sensitive membrane at the end of the tail, to which the curved spine is the culminating point, is trodden on or otherwise insulted, the chances are that there will be no active resentment.

Many years ago a locality in Australia suffered from a raid by bush rats, which congregated in great numbers. Similar plagues have often been recorded from the western downs; but the coastal visitation was singular, for it was associated with death adders, which seemed to be on good terms with the rats. One of the settlers was growing sweet potatoes on a fairly large scale for pig food, the plow being used for the harvesting of the crop. Seldom was a furrow run for the full length of the field without turning both adders and rats.

Suddenly the rats migrated, and then the death adders disappeared, few of either being seen for a decade, when the association between them was again sensationally illustrated. The daughter of a settler rose at dawn, and with others ran off to the vegetable garden for salads for breakfast. While she was looking for a seemly cucumber, a rat was disturbed, and almost immediately after she was bitten by a death adder which had lain inert at the very spot whence the rat had fled. The child recovered, while the deceptive snake, which will not submit to have its tail saluted even by the airiest of treads, was killed. This illustrates afresh the singular association between an adder and a rat. Why and for what purpose does this apparent amicability exist?

MISSIONARY WORK AMONG THE ESKIMOS

REV. G. F. WALTON DELIVERS LECTURE IN ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL HOUSE

Over one hundred and fifty ladies were gathered in St. John's Sunday school house yesterday afternoon to hear a lecture by Rev. G. F. Walton on his missionary work among the Indians and Eskimos of the Hudson Bay country.

Mr. Walton said there had been great distress among the Eskimos during the early stages of the war, owing to a migration of the caribou and the general hardships brought about by the war. So great, indeed, was the distress that Mr. Walton appealed to the Women's Auxiliary for assistance in his mission. No less than ninety bales and crates of food and clothing were received in the first shipment, and this was followed by several more, which had been the means of saving numbers of lives and providing for the extreme need of the people.

Mr. Walton said he could not adequately express his gratitude to the Women's Auxiliary for the splendid way in which they came to the rescue.

After the address contributions were handed in for the work among the Eskimos.

DR. ARNOLD REA, DIED IN CALGARY AFTER FIVE DAYS ILLNESS

(Special to The Review.)

Omemee, Dec. 4. News of the death of Dr. Arnold Rea (dentist), of Calgary, reached Omemee last week. Dr. Rea was well and favorably known in Omemee, having spent his childhood days on his father's farm four miles west of the village. Dr. Rea was a victim of "sleeping sickness," being ill only five days. He was a young man of great promise and in his death Calgary loses one of her prominent citizens.

Dr. Rea was the younger son of the late William Rea.

Left to mourn his untimely death is a sorrowing young widow and one little child, as well as two sisters and four brothers. Messrs. Weldon and William Rea, living in this vicinity, are brothers. To the sorrowing wife and children and to the family is extended the sympathy of the entire community.

CONGRESS GIVES PRESIDENT FULL AUTHORITY TO DEAL WITH MEXICO

Determined to Hurry to an End Intolerable Conditions in That Country—New and Serious Charges Are Made Against President of Mexico.

Washington, Dec. 4.— Impressed with the firm stand the State Department has taken Congress will not only give the administration a free hand in dealing with the impending Mexican crisis but will give its full support to the aggressive policy which the administration has decided.

Leaders in both the Senate and House of Representatives, assured that the Government is determined to bring to and end the intolerable conditions in the southern republic, today indicated their purpose to back [illegible] first move Senator Fall, of New Mexico, chairman of the sub-committee which has been investigtaing Mexican conditions, and who has just returned from the frontier, will introduce a resolution dealing with the situation. At the same time, he said, he will lay before the Senate unquestionable evidence that the Carranza Government is actively promoting the I. W. W. movement in the United States and that Mexico has become a base of operations for radical agitators who are working to overthrow the American Government.

So long as the executive branch maintains its purpose to deal firmly with Carranza Congressional leaders are not disposed to interfere. The impression is now clear that such a purpose will be carried out. In the event of a refusal by Mexico to release William O. Jenkins, the imprisoned American Consular agent at Puebla the United States is already prepared for the next step, and this will be of a decisive character, although military intervention it not immediately in sight.

Fall Confers With Lansing

With this conviction leaders in Congress are inclined to hold on abeyance their demand for an agressive policy and to content themselves with approving the course already chosen. This stand was taken after Senator Fall, a member of the Senate Foreign Relation Committee, and Representative Porter, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, conferred with Secretary of State Lansing, on the steps under contemplation. Senator Fall, saw Secretary Lansing immediately upon his arrival in Washington and laid before him much of the evidence he has gathered on the border. He did not disclose what was said but indicated that he was satisfied with the attitude of the State Department. He declared the investigating committee of which he is chairman, is co-operating "very closely" with it.

The administration's policy of watchful waiting has heretofore found its bitterest critics in Congress where the demand for a firm Mexican policy has been general. The fact that Congress and the administration are now of the mind puts the present situation in the gravest light. If there is any wavering there is little doubt but that Congress will take the initiative in attempting to force the issue, but this not now regarded as necessary in view of the policy that will be pursued of Carranza, with his customary truculence, refuses to comply with the Aemircan demand.

Mediation will not avert a crisis. No direct offers have yet been made but informal suggestions from various sources, have brought out the announcement from the State Department that it will be inapplicable in the present case. Only the release of Jenkins can prevent a break. Unofficial reports have been received that the A. B. C. Mediation Commission, Argentine, Brazil and Chili, which stepped in when a crisis between the United States and Mexico was imminent before, would be willing to act in the case. In view of the attitude of the State Department it is not probable that even an informal offer will be made.

Case Rests on Notes.

Similarly arbitration will be unavailing. The Government today rested its case on the two notes which have been sent to Mexico. There is but one reply that Carranza can make to avert a break and that is to release Jenkins. There is some doubt that even this will relax the tension that has been created. The grave charges made by the State Department in its second not that Carranza has been unwilling, as well as unable, to punish the bandits responsible for the kidnapping of Jenkins still remains.

FRENCH GOVERNMENT COMBATS THE HIGH COST OF WEARING APPAREL

Paris, Dec. 4.—The "national costume" for men, manufactured by the Government to combat the increasing price of clothing, made its appearance on the Paris boulevards on Dec. 1, as promised by the authorities. The suit is not such as to draw the attention of promenaders either by its elegance or its shabbiness, and but for a little strip of lining inside the coat marked "National garment," one would never know that the suit had anything different from others daily turned out of the so-called fashionable tailoring houses.

Wearers of the suits, however, [illegible] of the coat to friends and strangers in the cafes and theatre lobbies. There is one thing alone in which the national garment differs from others, and that is the price, as the suits sell for 110 francs.

At the present rate of exchange the price of the "National costume" is 110 francs, the equivalent of about $11 in American money.

To Consumers of BITUMINOUS COAL

The Fuel Controller for Canada having succeeded in securing a daily allotment of Bituminous Coal for Canada, is obliged, in view of the great demand, to confine shipments to public utilities and hospitals.

All other users of Bituminous Coal must secure their requirements from the stocks of coal now in storage in Ontario until such time as public utilities and hospitals have secured a supply sufficient to carry them through the Winter, or until the United States Government increases the present allotment.

IMMENSE BUSINESS IN SHIP BUILDING

CANADIAN YARDS PAY OUT FORTY-TWO MILLIONS YEARLY IN WAGES

Ottawa, Dec. 4. — Of 57 cargo steamers ordered by the Canadian Government from Canadian shipbuilding companies for operation in connection with the National Railway System, 18 are now in commission, and it is asserted that four more will be in service by the end of the year. One of the latest ships to be commissioned, the "Canadian Aviator," is the first Government vessel to sail for Australia. She has cleared from Vancouver with a cargo of paper for the sister Dominion. Two others steamers, which were also built at Pacific Coast Yards—the "Canadian Volunteer" and the "Canadian Trooper"—have also sailed from Vancouver to Great Britain via the Panama Canal with cargoes of British Columbia lumber, of which the British Government is purchasing some 70,000,000 feet.

For more than a year now the 13 shipyards of the Dominion have been engaged in the construction of steel freighters for the Government. Now has come the time when the Government has to consider what shall be its future policy toward the industry. The shipbuilding plants themselves represent an investment, it is stated, of $47,000,000, employ more than 20,000 men, and have been paying wages at the rate of $42,000,000 a year.

Auxiliary industries such as those engaged in the building of ships' engines and boilers, and fittings, it is said, employ upward of 23,000 men, and have annual pay-rolls aggregating to $40,000,000. The Government is being urged, on the strength of these figures, particularly as to employment of labor, to give encouragement to the shipbuilding industry. Requests for further orders have come to Ottawa from some companies.

Chicago, Dec. 4.—Howard Freleigh, of Forest, Ontario, won the championship award with his Junior Aberdeen Angus bull, at the International Live Stock Show. He also won first prize for a senior yearling bull of the same breed.

Two Canadians were included in the sheep awards, R. C. Armstrong, of Teeswater, Ontario, winning first prize for aged Leicester rams and James Snell, of Clinton, Ontario, first and second prizes for yearling Leicester rams.

J. E. Brethour, of Burford, Ontario, won the championship for a pen of Yorkshire barrows.

COAL OUTLOOK IN CANADA SERIOUS

DRASTIC REGULATIONS OF FUEL USE MAY BE EXPECTED SHORTLY.

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—"I am informed that some of the emergency coal supply allotted to Canada is moving at the present time, but of course I cannot say definitely how long that movement will continue," said Fuel Controller C. A. Magrath yesterday when asked about the statement of Canadian Railway War Board officials to the effect that not a car had been received.

Officials of the fuel section of the Canadian Trade Commission are in constant touch with Washington in an endeavor to have more coal released to Canadian users.

It is understood that unless there is a decided change for the better in the course of a very short time drastic regulations covering the use of coal for non-essential purposes may be put into effect.

Relief for some Ontario firms was secured by the fuel administration when the Public Works Department turned over 3,000 tons of coal on the Welland Canal to the fuel section, and they in turn handed it over to Fuel Administrator Harrington who was able to spread it out among industries which showed the greatest need for fuel.

The coke situation is very serious and it is feared that 75 per cent. of the industries in Canada using coke may be forced to cease operations

London, Ont., Dec. 4.—George S Gibbons, son of the late Sir eGorge Gibbons, and son-in-law of Sir Edmund Osler, left an estate valued at $20,000 according to his will, which was filed here for probate. When his father died a little over a year ago, he left an estate of approximately $900,000.

"the razor that sharpens itself"

"DO you prefer a dull or a sharp razor for shaving?" That is the simple question you are called upon to answer when choosing a safety razor. Nearly every razor is claimed to have a sharp edge. How was it obtained? There is only one process—stropping. Shaving as it does, day after day, how is a razor to be kept sharp? Again only one process—stropping. Then it is more important to choose a razor that strops itself and keeps itself sharp than merely a razor that may come to you sharp, but remains so only because it worries you constantly for new blades.

The AutoStrop Safety Razor is the only razor that strops itself. It cannot be stropped wrongly. Ask your dealer to demonstrate it to you. Don't be content to look at it in the store window or show case. See how it works—how simple it is! If you wish, try it for Thirty Days. Only then will you realize what it means to possess a razor that can be stropped and cleaned without removing the blade or taking anything to pieces.

See the AutoStrop Razor assortment at any store where razors are sold. You will find a style to suit your desire. Prices $5.00 and upwards.

PREMIER DRURY

is being done to my political convictions by the acceptance of the Speakership.

"I have not entered into this negotiation without the knowledge of Mr. Dewart, the Liberal leader, nor shall I agree to accept the office of Speaker without the goodwill of my constituents, whom I shall call together for consultation immediately on my return home."

Had Thousand Majority

Nelson Parliament was returned by a majority of nearly a thousand in what he claims is now a Conservative constituency. He was first elected to the Legislature in 1914 by a majority of 97. He was born at Ameliasburg, March 11, 1877, and educated at Belleville College. His ancestors were of United Empire Loyalist stock. He is a farmer and a Methodist.

Mr. Parliament's election to the Speakership will deprive Hartley Dewart of a supporter, and leaving him out the folowing will be the composition of the new Legislature:

Thus the U.F.O., Labor and Independent vote combined will be 57 giving a majority of four over the 53 Liberals and Conservatives.

Luis Odorico pleaded guilty in Woodstock Police Court to being in possession of appliances for making liquor and was fined $200.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:

"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to invest than in Life Insurance.

As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $46.20 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

GREAT BRITAIN OWES CANADA $200,000,000

ADJUSTMENT OF WAR ACCOUNTS IN PROGRESS NOW AT OTTAWA

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—An adjustment of accounts between the Canadian and British Government resulting from the war is now in progress. The British Government has financed Canadian operations on the other side while the Canadian Government has established Imperial credits here. The only credit now operating is for the purchase of timber, though arrangements regarding the wheat crops are to be made. As the balance now stands Great Britain owes Canada $200,000,000, interest on which is being paid at 5½ per cent.

Of the hundred millions appropriated in equal proportions as credits to Roumania, Serbia, Greece and Belgium, about $16,000,000 has been advanced to Roumania, but very little to the others. Roumania recently paid interest on the advances.

Because he sold potatoes by weight not by measure, a St. Thomas grocer was fined $10.

AUTOMOBILES IN COLLISION

Car Owned by Dr. Pulkinghorn Gets Worst of Encounter

At 5:15 last evening an automobile accident occurred at the corner of Brock and George strets when a closed Ford driven by Dr. Pulkinghorn crashed into the fender of a street car driven by Cliff Lowes. Dr. Pulkinghorn's car was badly damaged, the rear wheels being totally wrecked and the back of the body of the car also showing considerable damage. The other car escaped without damage except for a slightly twisted front axle.

The two cars collided on the right side of the road and Dr. Pulkinghorn's car was turned completely around and crashed into the sidewalk backwards in front of Matthews-Blackwell store.

Fortunately, except for a bad shaking up, the occupants were unhurt. Undoubtedly the slippery condition of the pavement had much to do with the accident. Both parties claimed to be on the right side of the road at the time.

Hugh Jhonston, druggist aged 59, and resident of Tilbury for 29 years, died of croncho-pneumonia.

DOES SANTA CLASS WEAR CLASSES ?

Santa Claus is a wise old man, and it is safe to say that if he needs glasses he wears them; also that they are "PEBLO" quality, because he wouldn't have anything but the best that's made. He would advise Dr. Fowler's "PEBLO" Glasses in handsome gold mounts as Christmas gifts to your elderly friends, to whom a more modern pair of glasses would be highly acceptable.

See Dr. Fowler about it.

GREATEST EMPLOYER OF LABOR IN THE WORLD FAVORS SIX-HOUR WORK DAY

Toronto, Dec. 4.—Lord Leverhulme who came to Toronto to address the Empire Club of Canada today, is the largest employer of labor in England. He is the soap king of the world and his latest hobby is the establishment of a sixhour day for labor, the economic principle upon which he works being "sweat the machine and not the man."

He is a small man with an erect carriage, a smooth-shaven and careworn countenance, grey eyes, and silver-white hair brushed straight back from a high and broad forehead. Though he smiles easily his stare reveals a mental strain that is seldom relaxed. Every gesture of his hands, every swift glance of his eyes, every movement of his body suggests an active mind—a thinking man at work. These personal traits are perhaps somewhat more prominently marked because of the fact that Lord Leverhulme is slightly deaf. But he does not talk loudly as most deaf people do. He walks with his head pushed forward as though facing a storm. High-shouldered and deep chested, he looks powerful and impressive and when he speaks in his low, smooth voice there is a tone of sincerity about it.

Works All Day Himself

Lord Leverhulme threw a bombshell among his fellow captains of industry when he came out flatly in favor of a six-hour day for workmen, as against an eight-hour day or ten-hour day, especially where skilled labor is concerned. He contends that when a man or woman has had to mind a highly perfected and intricate piece of machinery, six [illegible] He claims that after those six hours the brain ceases to function properly and that in consequence thereof the work suffers. But strangely enough he himself works from morning till night. He has everything that men desire, but is still building, buying, planning, enlarging, worrying for increase upon increase. Though nearly seventy he is still in the full swing of his energies.

The most remarkable fact about Lord Leverhulme, is that while he is the most strenuous capitalist in Great Britain, he is at the same time one of the most popular. He has everyone's goodwill and in general is not only respected, but is trusted as well.

Port Sunlight Model Village.

The model village of Port Sunlight covers 223 acres and includes 833 houses and cottages, 8 stores, a number of recreation halls, a public library, public museum, hospital, parks, private gardens and public gardens. After a certain length of service each employee becomes a profit-sharer. The houses are rented, not at a profit, but at surprisingly low rates, which are intended merely to cover the cost of repairs and upkeep. This is what Lord Leverhulme calls "prosperity-sharing" and he says that it is better than "profit-sharing" a term which he soundly abhors.

Lord Leverhulme was first known as plain William Lever and later as Sir William Lever. He was elevated to the peerage in June, 1917. He is the founder and head of one of the greatest soap producing concerns in the world and has acquired in addition to his fortune as a manufacturer, fame as one of the world's foremost believers in bettering the conditions of the workingman. It was he, who built the model town of Port Sunlight for housing the army of men and women employed in his factories, and it was he who originated the system of dividing profits among workers under a "co-partnership" plan. His latest "hobby" is a six-hour day for the great nine tenths, and let the machinery be worked to death.

Lord Leverhulme is enthusiastically optimistic. That is a typical attitude for a man whose great headway is due entirely to his own [illegible]tions. His motto for years was, "If at first you don't succeed, try again." For the last ten years, this king of soap makers has been collecting factories much as an antiquarian collects old coins. His method is not to buy them outright, but to control them by the purchase of their common stock. He takes the risk plus the control. He has bought not only soap factories, but margarine factories and polish factories. He follows the trail of grease wherever it goes. Give him the fats of a nation and his worries are over.

INCOMPARABLE

Dr. Norvall's Stomach and Tonic Tablets are really incomparable. They have been imitated and substitutes have been prepared which looked like them and even tasted about the same, but there is no other tablet which has the same beneficial effect, the same gentle laxative and tonic effect. For constipation, dyspepsia, biliousness and sick headache, Dr. Norvall's Tablets have no equal and are in a class by themselves. All dealers sell them.

MILL OWNERS MUST HAVE PROTECTION

Toronto, Dec. 4.—Mill owners in the Napanee district are appealing to the Attorney General for protection to the dams at their reservoirs.

Yesterday B. S. O'Loughlin, A. W. Benjamin, I. E. Salisbury, W. J. Findlay and H. W. Woodruff, representing the mill owners, interviewed the Attorney General asking him to see what could be done to get at the people who are destroying their dams.

"They are being interfered with by the settlers up there," said one of the men. "They don't just take out the key logs, but they are blowing them up with dynamite. There has been a lot of friction for some time, and we were asked to put in log dams, and did. Still there is trouble."

WANT TO COME HOME

Four Hundred Discharged Canadian Soldiers in England

London, Dec. 3.—The Canadian Associated Press learns that an informal census has been taken regarding the Canadian soldiers who have taken their discharge here and now find themselves in want. The total number who seem genuinely anxious to be returned to Canada through want of work here appears to be about four hundred, although there may be more who have not proclaimed themselves stranded.

Fon du Lac, Wis., Dec. 4.—A total of $51,000 wa sobtained for 177 head of registered Holsteins at the annual fall sale of the Holstein Breeders' Sale Company. The average price was $288. Korndyke Press brought the top price of $975.

The next convention of the South-Western Ontario Town Planning Association will be held in London.

MOTHER HAD TO PROP HER SON UP IN BED

COULD HARDLY GET HIS BREATH AT TIMES — IS NOW THE PICTURE OF HEALTH.

"My son Francis is the picture of health since his recovery through the use of Tanlac," said Mrs. Annie Haxby, living at 12 Walker street, Kingston Road, North Beach, Toronto, Ont.

"My boy had been suffering for several years," she continued, "with all the symptoms of asthma and catarrh, and couldn't stand the least exposure without catching cold. His bronchial tubes and nasal passages seemed to be completely stopped up and at times he would have such awful spells of coughing that I would have to prop him up in bed at night before he could get a good breath. I had him treated for years, but he only found a little temporary relief.

"As everything else had failed to help him I thought I would give him Tanlac, and it's simply wonderful the way it helped him. His catarrh is about gone and every symptom of asthma also and his health is better than it has been in years. In fact, he is just like a different boy, is going to school regularly and is feeling fine."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

LORD MAYOR TALKS PLAINLY TO LABOR

"TELL YOUR MEN TO QUIT LETTING OFF HOT AIR

London, Dec. 4.—Alderman Tom Fox, recently elected the first labor Lord Mayor of Manchester, received a deputation of unemployed who protested against the withdrawal of the unemployed grant. When a member of the deputation spoke of "not being responsible for what might happen," the Lord Mayor replied: [illegible] keep order. Make no mistake, I am prepared to take action with all possible energy. I have been unemployed myself. When you go back to your men tell them to stop letting off hot air."

DRUNK ON BEEF, IRON AND WINE

COST THOMAS CLAREY $17.10 FOR HIS FUN ACCORDING TO THE MAGISTRATE

An array of beef, iron and wine and Florida water occupied the magistrate's desk at Police Court this morning during the trial of Thomas Clarey. He was charged with being in an intoxicated condition on Hunter street and pleaded guilty.

"Is that the stuff you were drinking?" asked the Magistrate.

"Yes," replied the accused.

"Well, $1 a bottle makes $3, $4.10 costs and $10 fine makes $17.10 for the stuff," commented the magistrate as he imposed the fine of $10 and costs.

MUCH AFTER-WAR ARMY MATERIAL

FRANCE AND BELGIUM BID FOR BRITISH SURPLUS SUPPLIES

London, Dec. 5.—Surplus army material belonging to the Empire is lying in many parts of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Egypt, Salonica, Palestine and Mesopotamia. Surplus army material is filling ports and harbors.

The total realizable value of this material has been estimated by a Disposals Board official at somewher about £300,000,000 ($1,500,000,000).

France and Belgium have both made offers for the best of the British salvage, and the latter country has bought barges and railway material at fair prices; but the Americans spoiled the market by practically giving away immense stores, and the War Office is sticking to its price and shipping everything for which that price cannot be obtained.

The total result appears to be that while England is already loaded up with unrealizable stores, more stores are pouring in by way of the train-ferries, and buildings are being crowded which ought to be cleared and sold.

In estimating the realizable stores at £300,000,000, the Disposals Board make the proviso that the actual total cannot be arrived at until the Government has determined what the after-the-war strength of the army, navy and air force shall be. Vigorous reduction of these war services will throw upon this overloaded market still more stores.

MONTREAL STILL DECIDEDLY. WET

DRUNKS IN POLICE COURT UN-[illegible] INCREASE

Montreal, Dec. 4. — Drinking in Montreal has not been abolished by the "dry" laws. In the three months of August, September and October, 1918, the number of convictions under the heading of drunk, drunk and disorderly and drunk in charge of vehicles were 1,260. For the same three months in 1919 these figures have increased to 2,139.

There has been a falling off in drunkenness among females for the three months of 1918, 135 women being arrested for being drunk and drunk and disorderly, while in 1919 the number of convictions for the corresponding three months had dropped to 109.

TO COLLECT FOR BILL BOARD PRIVILEGES

LICENSE FEE IN BRANTFORD IS GRADED UP TO $100.

That Walter Stocker must pay a tax for bill board privileges, either by license or assessment, was the conclusion reached by the city's Finance Committee last evening.

Mr. Stocker assured Council some time ago that he was quite willing to pay a reasonable license fee and the Finance Committee is going to have this matter adjusted for recommendation to Council Monday night.

Objection is taken to issuing a license, as that course would give Mr. Stocker a monopoly. Several cities and towns in Ontario have been communicated with as to how they regulate bill posting and bill distributing, with the following results:

Kingston charges a yearly license fee of $5. At Guelph no license is issued, neither are bill boards assessed. Windsor collects a license fee of $25, the bill boards are not assessed.

Brantford has a bylaw which covers all contingencies. Any resident ratepayer is privileged to distribute his own hand-bills, circulars, etc., and post his own posters free of license or assessment. This rule also applies to churches, for professional bill posters the license is graded as follows: A minimum fee of $25 up to 1,000 lineal feet; upwards to 5,000 feet, $50; above 5,000 feet and not exceeding 10,000 feet, $75; beyond 10,000 feet, a fee of $100.

Walter Stocker has 3,000 feet of boards.

Remit Poll Tax.

The city treasurer will be instructed to remit James F. Garvey (a returned soldier) the $5 poll tax he has paid.

Transfer Rating.

On motion of Ald. Phelan, the assessment of the Opera House will be changed from "Public School" rating to that of "Separate School."

SUBSTITUTE Y.M.C.A. FOR LINDSAY MEN

BOARD OF EDUCATION WILL ALLOW COLLEGIATE GYM TO BE USED ON A PAYING BASIS

Lindsay, Dec. 4.—In view of the fact that there is no Y. M. C. A. in Lindsay, the Board of Education are willing to open the Collegiate gymnasium, recreation room and shower baths to the young men of the town if it can be placed on a self-sustaining basis financially. A thoroughly competent instructor wil also be provided.

If, therefore, a sufficient number of men will signify to Mr. J. M. Knowlson, secretary, their desire to join such a class and pay an entrance fee of five dollars, the matter will be taken up by the board at once.

LADY FILM STAR OWNS 400 SUITS

BUT FOR ALL THAT LORD ANGLESEY'S WARDROBE WAS LARGER

A lady film star has confessed to owning over 400 different costumes, many of which she has worn once only, says Pearson's Weekly.

No lady of fashion would dream of possessing 100, let alone 400, dresses. She would not have time to wear half of them before the fashion had changed and they were out of date.

The only rivals to the film lady in respect of giant wardrobes are, it must be confessed, men. The most wonderful dressers of recent years were the late Lord Anglesey and the great Italian dramatist and flying man, Gabriele d'Annunzio.

Just before the war d'Annunzio confessed to possessing seventy-two pairs of gloves, a hundred and fifty ties, forty-eight nightshirts and seventy-two day shirts, twenty dozen handkerchiefs, about forty pairs of shoes, and between sixty and seventy suits of clothes.

Big as this list is, it is nothing compared to the wardrobe of Lord Anglesey, whose clothes after his death were auctioned in 900 different lots. Among them were thirty bath gowns and over forty dressing gowns. There were a dozen smoking suits, the jacket of one being made entirely of Persian lamb.

The waistcoats were numbered by the score, and were of silk, leather, wool and costly furs.

As for boots and shoes, they were innumerable, and ranged from snow and skating boots and patent leather jack boots down to shoes of white crocodile leather. Incidentally there were 200 overcoats.

But even Lord Anglesey's wardrobe failed in several respects to match that of the late Baron de Reuter. He left 100 dress suits and 150 pairs of spats.

For sheer value the clothes of George IV. hold a record. They were disposed of after his death for £15,000. Among them were all the coats which he had purchased during a period of very nearly half a century.

"A SOLDIER'S OATH" FEATURE AT GRAND

Last night at the Grand a special variety program was introduced to the picture fans of Peterborough. It comprised William Farnum in a war drama entitled "A Soldier's Oath," a most amusing comedy, vod-a-vil movies, Mutt and Jeff cartoon, and Canadian news weekly. This, together with the Grand orchestra, makes a most interesting entertainment.

The Sunshine comedy with Tom and Jerry Mix is a rollicking cowboy picture. Some very laughable situations are provided and some clever riding shown.

The remainder of the program is of the same high order and should be seen to be appreciated. The orchestra played several selections in its usual finished style.

This excellent bill will be repeated tonight and should attract a large audience.

Customs receipts for eight months ending with November were $7,029,506 greater than last year in the corresponding period.

ENGLISH OPERA CO. AT THE GRAND

FOR TWO NIGHTS AND MATINEE UNUSUAL OFFERINGS NEXT WEEK

The management of the Grand Opera House with commendable enterprise, has secured for a run of two nights and matinee, Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 10 and 11. The Gallo English Opera Company, in splendid revivals of the standard English and French comic operas. The Gallo organization has just completed an extremely successful engagement at the Royal Alexander Theatre, Toronto, and comes here in entirety, using for its opening bill William S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan's masterpiece, "The Mikado."

Opera lovers of this city know thoroughly well what sort of opera Fortune Gallo has given them in the past with his San Carlo Grand Opera Company, and when it is stated that the new organization has been formed for the purpose of giving comic opera on the same splendid scale as the grand opera company, it can readily be seen what treats are in store. Headed by Hana Shimozumi, the sensational Japanese prima donna, whose hit in New York exceeded anything the metropolis has known in years, and the well-known opera comedian, Jefferson De Angelis, the list of principals includes Daniel Denton, Louis Casavant, Albert Parr, Karl Stoll, Frank Ridsdale, Rosamond Whitside, Greta Risley, Ethel Mae Bagnall and others of ability and reputation, while a magnificent chorus and orchestra is under the baton of Max Bendix.

Following "The Mikado," we will have the pleasure of hearing "H M S Pinafore" Thursday afternoon and "The Chimes of Normandy" Thursday night.

THE LOVE CHEAT A REAL DELIGHT

SEE THIS ROMANTIC COMEDY AT THE EMPIRE THEATRE TONIGHT

Albert Capellani's production of "The Love Cheat," which was opened today as the week's attraction at the Empire Theatre is a picture which will no doubt enjoy popularity for a reason apart from the one that it is delightfully acted and shows the careful hand of a painstaking director. That reason is that while essentially a love story, it is a love story of a type too seldom encountered on the films. It is human through and through, a you-and-me sort of a play without problems and triangles and villains and vampires. And right well it is presented.

Creighton ale and June Caprice, whom you remember so pleasantly from "Oh, Boy!", another Cappellani-Pathe production, have the principal parts. Others in the company are Alfred Hickman, who was the original "Little Billie" in "Trilby"; Edward Davis and Charles Coleman, three actors of strong supporting calibre.

But a bare outline of the plot is necessary to reveal its attractive qualities. A poor young man makes love to a girl under false pretenses. (How many a man, by the way hasn't "four-flushed" a bit in his courtship days?) This young man in question really loves the girl who is heiress to millions. To help in the bluff a business adventurer who has dark motives, finances the hero for the current expenses—you can imagine what it would require to make love to a millionaire's daughter. Eventually the hero becomes disgusted with his own deceit. He's just that much in love. Thereupon he confesses the miserable sham to which he has been a party. But with the revelations come the indisputable evidences of his innate honesty and the sincerity of the love he bears. Only one reward for a confession so courageous as that. He gets the girl and more real money than he ever pretended to have.

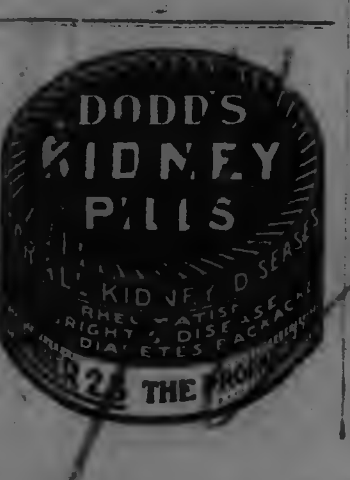
Mr. Hale acts the hero in praiseworthy manner. He is good to look upon, is a manly chap, anyhow, and he is an experienced actor sufficient to impart the proper sympathy and repression which the role requires. Miss Caprice is charming as the millionaire's daughter. "The Love Cheat" proved to be one of the season's best offerings.

SAYS STRIKERS WERE TRAITORS

CROWN ATTORNEY AT WINNIPEG ALLEGES THAT THEY PLANNED REVOLUTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Dec. 4.—At the strike trial this morning, J. J. Andrews, Crown counsel, presented arguments for the admission of evidence of various labor conventions throughout the country, including those at Calgary Edmonton and Quebec. The Crown claims, he said, that the evidence is material in connection with the intentions, as alleged, of the accused Russell and those connected with him of stirring up strife, setting class against class with the object of starting a revolution; to bring about in Canada the soviet form of government by means of a general strike. The purpose of the convention, the Crown claims, was to make possible the holding of this general strike, and therefore was admissable as evidence at the trial.



SAYS ONTARIO REALLY VOTED FOR LIQUOR

TORONTO BRANCH OF LIBERTY LEAGUE SAYS REFERENDUM WAS UNFAIR

Toronto, Dec. 4.—That prohibition was won by a trick ballot and the unscrupulous methods of the Methodist organization of Ontario was the claim of several of the speakers at the meeting of the Citizens' Liberty League held last night in Foresters' Hall.

C. O'Donnell of the Trades and Labor Council said that Tammany Hall could learn a few things from the Methodist organization. Faulty organization of the league, he believed, was one of the causes of defeat. He exhorted the gathering to go out after members and organize on better lines to carry on the fight for personal liberty. Labor, he said, was unanimously against prohibition from coast to coast.

Handbills were distributed at the meeting attempting to illustrate how, though four men would really vote wet, their ballots, through being compelled to vote on all four questions, would be a victory for the "Noes." According to the illustration, four men voting one "Yes" and three "Noes" and each voting "Yes" to a different question, though each wanted the return of liquor in some manner, would be defeating each other through having to vote on all four questions.

J. Emerson Bill gave figures of referendum returns purporting to show where 41 towns, villages and cities, 17 townships and 60 electoral districts of Ontario voted for the return of liquor, but were defeated by the alleged trick ballot.

Other speakers were R. C. Wood, R. C. Castrucci, and Chas. Townsend Ernest Heaton was in the chair. It was announced that Col. Machin will address the meeting to be held in the Foresters' Hall on Wednesday eve-

FORWARD MOVEMENT AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

MEETING OF MEN LAST NIGHT ADDRESSED BY REV. DR. SEAGER

There was a large gathering of men from St. John's Anglican Church last night to take measures in regard to the Forward Movement of the Anglican Church. Dr. Cameron was in the chair.

A special address was given by Rev. Dr. Seager of Toronto, organiser of Anglican dioceses. Dr. Seager gave a very clear and comprehensive explanation of the aims and objects of the Forward Movement and of the organization of parochial and civic influences necessary to carry the movement out.

Attention will be focussed on the cities and towns rather than on the parishioners in them, and Peterborough, as the largest centre in this diocese, was expected to do great things and maintain the high standard it has already attained, which expectation was founded on the splendid success of the Victory Loan campaign here.

Considerable effort is being raised throughout the country to raise the church to a higher level and to improve its efficiency in every way.

A strong appeal is being made to every single member to do his utmost in this respect bteween now and February. The response so far has been very encouraging.

The movement is essentially a layman's movement and its greatness and the bigness and evident necessity for it were calling for a strong response. In the Anglican Church the need is intensified financially by the withdrawal from this country by English men and money, which had been poured into the country in pre-war days and is now entirely withdrawn. The movement was for missionary objects and money subscribed would be devoted to its furtherance as well as the general equipment of the church.

The local parish committees should get to work without delay and all the strength of the church brought out.

A financial canvas will take place about the middle of February.

Mr. Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., urged that this is favorable time for linking up the causes of labor and the church, each of which needed the other.

Dr. Seager replied sympathetically and said that the social questions were coming to the front in church matters everywhere and occupying the church's atention more and more.

A committee of two from each parish were appointed to form a larger committee for the city of Peterborough. Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. R. B. Grobb.

Gladys Coulter, aged 3, of Chatham Township, was badly scalded when she fell into a pail of boiling water while playing in the kitchen.

GREAT INTEREST IN ENGLAND OVER THE BECKETT-CARPENTIER CONTEST

Will Carpentier Win on Points or Becket Secure Knockout is Question in Thursday's Bout.

It is many years since England has been favored with so attractive a boxing match as that arranged between Joe Beckett, heavyweight champion of Great Britain, and Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe, which is set for Thursday of this week at the Holborn stadium, London.

The bout should be peculiarly pleasing to Englishmen because for the first time in more than a quarter of a century the English titleholder, is a man whose performances in the ring justify the expectation that he at least will give a good account of himself.

Beckett has shown himself to be a rugged two handed fighter, with courage and persistence, who up to the present time has done all that has been asked of him Whether or not he will develop into a heavyweight of the first rank will doubtless be known after his contest with the Frenchman.

The British heavyweight champions of the past have been so disappointing that it is not surprising the enthusiasts of the tight little isle are delighted withthe latest holder of the title.

Gunner Moir, Iron Hague, and Bombardier Wells never added to the pugilistic distinction of Great Britain, as defeat was their portion nearly every time they entered the ring against an opponent of any class.

Faith in Beckett.

Therefore, when Beckett began to beat all his men with whom he was matched the Britons soon became enthusiastic and now are convinced they have a man who can take the measure of any heavyweight in the world, including Jack Dempsey.

Should the Englishman defeat Carpentier in the approaching struggle it will be the best achievement of the new champion since he first tossed his hat into the titular ring.

There is no question as to Carpentier being a better boxer than Beckett and also an effective though by no means destructive hitter.

The vital question as to Carpentier concerns his physical condition, and reports from the other side on that point are conflicting. Recent photographs of the French champion seem to indicate that he outwardly is in good condition, but the only indisputable proof to that effect would have to be furnished by him while he is in action in a ring. If the Frenchman enters the contest in condition to go the pace, he should have little trouble in outpointing the Briton and getting the decision at the end of the twentieth round.

But if Carpentier is the physical wreck he has been pictured then the rugged Beckett should score a knockout before the limit of twenty rounds is reached.

Like Corbett-Jeffries Bout.

The match is not dissimilar in its main aspects to the Corbett-Jeffries bout at Coney Island. Corbett could not have lost if his vitality had not been lowered through neglect of proper training, for he outclassed the boilermaker in the science of boxing. But the former champion after winning twenty-two rounds by a wide margin, collapsed in the twenty-third round and fell a victim to the strength and stamina of his less skillful opponent.

Beckett appears to be a Jeffries in build and he is credited with a knockout punch in either hand Therefore if he lands on the Frenchman and the latter's vitality is at low ebb it will spell defeat for him.

Two boxers who have seen both men at work in recent months have given expression to interesting views as to the outcome of the contest.

Jimmy Wilde declares that Carpentier is in good condition and that he should be returned the winner.

Eddie McGoorty, who was beaten by Beckett and who has trained Carpentier, insists that the Frenchman will win in a few rounds. These pronouncements are interesting because of one English champion predicting the defeat of another British titleholder. McGoorty probably has little regard for Beckett since their meeting in the ring, and the Oshkosh man's opinion as to the winner is not important for the reason that he is the Frenchman's trainer. Under the circumstances devotees of boxin on this side of the pond cannot reach a positive conclusion as to the outcome of the bout.

HOCKEY SEASON OPENS SATURDAY

DENTALS AND PARKDALE LINK UP IN FIRST GAME OF L. P. A. SERIES

Toronto, Dec. 4.—The main point of interest at the present time centres in the first senior S. P. A. game Saturday night, which will usher in the season. Dentals will be ready to defend the trophy which they won last year, but Coach Carroll intimated that he did not think his pets would be in as good condition as they were when they tackled Kitchener last winter. Then again, Parkdale, who will be their opponents on this occasion, will be in far better condition than the former Allan Cup holders. Dentals appear very formidable at this stage of the race, with their team almost intact from last winter and the vacancies filled by capable substitutes, but the Paddlers are no mean aggregation. They will have lots of speed, and defensively appear as strong as any team in the city, and if they can round out a forward line as good as their defence the Teeth Architects will have to step some.

The S.P.A. series certainly proved a good trial horse for the senior clubs last season and will undoubtedly act in the same capacity this year. The consensus of opinion at the present time is that on paper Dentals are unmistakably the strongest team locally, with Granites a close second and the other teams grading downwards. With the exception of Dentals the others are newcomers, and therefore are unknown quantities in the race this year, although Granites apparently have a hand-picked squad that has every intention of sticking toegther. With the players appearing at practice with different teams every other night it is hard to say where they will finally line up, but the certificates will be forthcoming shortly and the players will have to light some where. Anyway, when the S.P.A. series opened last year few figured that the Dents could defeat Kitchener, Tigers would beat Dentals or St. Pats would stop Kitchener, so there is lots of room for figuring on this year's championship.

Springfield, O., Dec. 4.— Binland, 2:02¼ trotting stallion, winner of the Transylvania Stake at Lexington, has been sold by W. Snyder, Springfield, to A. C. Pennock, Cleveland, representing Augusto Butti, Italy. The price was reported to be more than $20,000. Binland will be shipped to Italy for racing purposes, it was announced.

Owing to the fences being blown down four horses wandered onto the railway track at Sheddon and were killed.

THE NATIONAL TROTTING ASSOCIATION CHANGE RULES OF HARNESS RACING

Legal Questions Prevent Amalgamation With American Trotting Association

New York, Dec. 4.— Two hundred and ninety tracks in membership with the National Trotting Association were represented at the biennial congress held last night in the Murray Hill Hotel. Only about forty delegates were present, however, some of them voting thirty or more proxies.

In calling the congress to order, Mr. Welty, as president of the association congratulated its members on the successful season of harness racing just ended, saying more meetings had been held, and more money distributed in purses and stakes than in any past year. About fifteen hundred meetings were held on the half-time [illegible]

As chairman of the committee on amalgamation with the American Trotting Association, he reported to the congress that legal questions involved in the proposed merger of the two organizations had been found to bar any further consideration of the matter. Besides this, Mr. Welty said, there was no good reason for uniting the two associations, and his report was opposed to it from every point of view. The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

Protest From Minority

When it came to adopting some of the proposed amendments to the rules of harness racing, as recommended by the Joint Rules Committee of the N. T. A. and the A. T. A., there was a vigorous protest from the minority, but the steam roller proved to be in good working order and the report went through, rule by rule, and section by section, without the slightest change being made.

The main attack was made on the new time allowance rule which has been published, and which will permit horses with the fastest records to start in 2:12 class on mile tracks and in the 2:16 class on half-mile tracks when two years have elapsed since they have reduced their training race records. Captain W. M. Halsted, president of the Parkway Driving Club, in Brooklyn, pointed out that the new rule would permit Miss Haris M., 1:58 and others like her, to start in the 2:16 class midyear, and predicted that such horses would drive away ordinary pacers, instead of increasing the number of starters, as the sponsors for the rule have predicted. Many other track managers and horse-owners present expressed the same opinion, but on roll call the proxy holders prevailed by a vote of 198 to 44 in favor of the new rule.

LINDSAY TO HAVE TWO O.H.A. TEAMS

FANS CALL ON PLAYERS TO GET INTO CONDITION

(Lindsay Warder.)

Lindsay will have two teams in the O.H.A. this year, with the juniors in harness again under the management of Messrs. Butler and Martin, and the intermediates under new management.

Naturally, according to the new law laid down by the O.H.A. at a recent meeting, both teams will have to be entered under the general supervision of the Lindsay Amateur Athletic Association, which was recently formed. This the juniors have already done, and it is stated that the intermediates will do so before Saturday, [illegible] the annual meeting of the O.H.A. will be held on Saturday.

With two teams in the field, Lindsay fans should have lots of hockey. Although it is early to size up the prospective teams, yet it is known that both teams have plenty of material, and both should make a very favorable impression. Both lack training, and no team can win (no matter how good the players are) without constant training. Training should be started at once, especially among the intermediates, who will take several practices to limber them up and get their wind. The juniors are always more or less under training, as most of them will come from the ranks of the Collegiate Institute, but the intermediates will have to knuckle down to regular practices.

It is to be hoped that both teams will develop sufficient team organization, team play, and general ability to carry them through their districts.

GOOD CHESS THIS

London, Dec. 4.—Jose Capablanca, the Cuban chess expert, played simultaneously thirty-eight members of the House of Commons at the House Tuesday night. Edward A. CUBS WIN HARD FOUGHT CONTEST

DEFEAT THE BANKERS 20 to 19 C. G. E. HELPLESS BEFORE CRESSMANS

The Y. M. C. A. gymnasium floor was the scene of two basketball contests last night. One was very interesting, a circumstance that can not be attributed to the second one on the program.

In the first game, called at seven o'clock, the Cubs won a hard-fought contest by a score of 20-9. Their opponents, the Bankers, put up a hard fight, and were unfortunate in having the extra point go to the Cubs. The half-time score was: Cubs 8, Bankers 6.

In the second game the C. G. E. suffered a severe trouncing at the hands of the Cressman aggregation. The half-time score was 23-4, while at full time the score stood 62-10. De Graw, playing centre for the winners, scored 28 points, and Nichols (forward) scored 20. The line-ups:

Bankers—Dunsford, H. Young, Yeaman, Tudhope, Brownscombe, McIntosh.

Cubs—Beube, D. Young, T. Pogue, R. Pogue, Stevenson, Brooks.

Second Game.

C. G. E.—Lacheur, Cherrett, Rose, Anderson, McLeish.

The last game was a hard fought game all the way, the Business Men winning by 16 pins. For the Quaker Oats, Miller was high man with 520, and for the Business Men, Gillian was high with 518. LAWN BOWLERS IN SECOND PLACE ARE COMING STRONG

In three snappy games the Lawn Bowlers added three games to their winnings when they met the Busy Bunch for the second time in the league. The first attempt to secure Government aid raised the magnificent annual donation of twenty-five dollars for the association. Sir George Ross raised this to $500, and in slow stages it has risen to an annual grant of $7,500 from the Ontario Government. Principal Fitzpatrick has asked the Minister of Education to double this amount annually.

This past summer there have been forty-five instructors working from coast to coast. This winter, there will be seventy. The nearest branches of the Frontier College to Toronto are at a railway extra-gang at Orono, and a Hydro gang at work on a power canal at Niagara. There are seven instructors working among the Hydro laborers. These instructors dig ditches by day and teach English and citizenship in the evening.

There has been no attempt to [illegible] the work into the cities, for the cities have better facilities for Canadianizing the foreigner than the Frontier College. But during the war, one class was formed of Toronto Russians, but the police raided it, cast a score of them in jail, where one died, and since then the Russians have avoided Torontonization.

As a recognized institution the Frontier College will no doubt flourish. It is urging the universities to establish extra-mural courses, by which a student, after doing two years of academic work, may serve his remaining two years as an instructor on Canada's frontier, attending the university only to write his exams.

American University in France.

At Beaune, 175 miles southeast of Paris, is the seat of the new American Army university, which is, perhaps, the most outstanding of the educational work carried on by the American expeditionary force, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine. Housed in what was formerly an American hospital are 15,000 soldier-students and a force of 500 teachers. The curriculum is notable for its agricultural college with a 900-acre farm.

Not All There.

Delbrook was the proud possessor of a brand-new suit of clothes with a small wooden whistle attached to it. Soon after getting the suit, and while the family was dining away from home, his father asked him why he did not wear his new suit that evening. "I can't, daddy," he answered, "'cause the whistle's broke."

Helpful Charlie.

Little 4-year-old Charlie was missing one day. His mother going in search of him finally found him in the library sprinkling a valuable book that was on the table. "Why, my boy, what are you doing spoiling that nice book of dad's?" "I was just wetting it for him because he said it was too awfully dry," he replied.

Why Stings Hurt.

The pain caused by the sting of nettles is due partly to formic acid and partly to a chemical resembling snake poison. Our nettles are comparatively harmless; but in India, Java and elsewhere, there are varieties the painful effects of which last weeks, and in some cases months, like snake-bites.

"Pieces of Eight."

The piece of eight was the Spanish piastre or peso, now called a dollar, thus known throughout the Spanish main in the days of piracy, because it was divided into eight reals. It was a silver coin worth $1 in the United States.

SPEAKING LIKENESSES OF GREAT MEN IS SUBJECT OF LECTURE

Sidney Landon Provides Splendid Entertainment to Capacity Audience in Conservatory Hall in Second Event of Lyceum Course.

The second event of the Lyceum course was held last evening in the Conservatory of Music Hall, when Mr. Sidney Landon addressed a capacity audience on "Speaking Likenesses of Great Men." Mr. Landon as an entertainer is in a class by himself. A pleasing and magnetic personality, from the minute he steps onto the lecture platform until the closing remarks, he can hold the interested attention of his audience can lead them through the treasure valuts of literary gems in a way that is truly delightful. Perhaps this is because he is so thoroughly master of his subject, because he himself possesses such a deep understanding of the characters he would portray.

In order that he might the more intimately acquaint his listeners with the celebrity in question, Mr. Landon, assumes a "make up" so identically like the original, as to excite the admiration of even the most unimaginative. Touching on the complex personality of a man of genius, the lecturer pointed out that this rare gift is frequently if not always accompanied by certain eccentricities of nature, that there is not always the [illegible] balance of ordinary mortals in the intellect of such a man and frequently a super-sensitiveness most distressing.

For instance in the case of that brilliant literary light of Paris, Victor Hugo, this characteristic took the form of egotism. So intensely egotistical was this celebrity as to stand in the public square and acclaim to the multitude that monarchs could claim their prestige but "I am Victor Hugo— "the brains of Paris." This was the mental attitude of that great writer, when in the prime of life. A very monument of pride, he was said to be an atheist— a man who reposed the utmost confidence in his own powerful intellect. But time crept on and that same intellect mellowed with the years. Victor Hugo came to recognize and acknowledge the Hand of God in the universe until, on his eightieth birthday, a white haired, trembling old man, he addressed a gathering in the same city and how changed was his attitude toward life in general. In the portrayal of this character, Mr. Landon achieved one of the master strokes of the evening. Assuming the make up so exactly like the photograph of this great man, he tremblingly addressed his 'friends' with the utmost sincerity and humiliation, saying that he did not fear death, so strong was his confidence in the mercy of God, and his hope in a happy after-life.

Another striking characterization and one which excited much admiration was that of Bill Nye, the great American personage, a lover of boys. Mr. Landon depicted this character with such infinite attention to the minute peculiarities of speech and gesticulation as to drawforth peals of laughter from an amused audience. This, as an illustration that dignity when carried to the extreme, often borders on the ridiculous.

Continuing, Mr. Landon called the attention of the gathering to that imminent idealist with whom all are more or less acquainted through the medium of his poetry, Edgar Allen Poe. His was a personality, which the ordinary individual could hardly understand. There was so much of the myth about him as to cause one to doubt his sanity at times, and while there was much that was undesirable in his latter years, this should be condoned, on the ground of a lamentable eccentricity.

One of the most amusing and original features of the programme was the depiction of "The Old Man From Green's Corners." "Green's Corners," by the way, is a small town down south, where the chief event of each day is when the train comes in. This "unspoiled child of nature" when transplanted to urban surroundings finds himself mystified at the ways of life in a great city and gives voice to his wonder in a unique and entertaining manner. Especially amusing is the old gentleman's sarcastical derision of the foppish, stylish young men of the type who are continually engaged in polishing their finger-nails and donning high white collars which, he affirms, always remind him of a whitewashed fence around an insane asylum.

Another literary celebrity and one whom we all know and love, by reason of his beautiful and inspiring verse, "Kipling" was brought before the audience in a remarkably realistic portrayal. This imminent thinker, this man who stands head and shoulders above his fellowmen in the literary world, is perhaps the most unassuming of all. The most unpretensious in speech, without the least aggression of manner, he was admired by all who had the privilege of knowing him.

Concluding, Mr. Landon thanked his audience for their kind co-operation and their evident pleasure in this ramble through literary fields with him. This instructive and entertaining evening closed with the singing of "God Save the King."

PROGRESSIVE CLUB WINDS UP BUSINESS

MEMBERS PRESENT MISS PECK PRESIDENT, WITH HANDSOME HANDBAG

On Friday, November 28th, the final meeting of the Progressive Club was held at the residence of Mrs. W. R. Morris, with about twenty-five members present.

The president, Miss Peck, briefly reviewed the activities of the club, from its formation in October, 1914, to the present time. In this period, $5,965.47 was expended but the personal effort of the members was the important factor in the carrying on of the huge amount of war work accomplished.

The treasurer reported a balance of $269.77. Of this amount $100.00 was voted to the Women's Auxiliary to G. W. V. A. for relief work, and $169.77 to British Marine sufferers from the war, this money to be forwarded to Lady Jellico.

After a pleasant half-hour over tea and cake the meeting was called to order by the hostess for the very pleasant purpose of making a presentation to Miss Peck, president of the club, during its five years of existence.

Miss Peck's unfailing enthusiasm, energy, and kindliness, were referred to appreciatively, and regret expressed at the parting of friends in the breaking up of the club.

Mrs. Rose and Mrs. Andrews, on behalf of all the members then presented Miss Peck with a handsome leather hand-bag and a bouquet of chysanthemums. Miss Peck who was taken quite by surprise expressed her great pleasure in being thus remembered, and spoke feelingly of the pleasant relations that had always existed in the club.

After singing "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow," "O Canada," and "God Save the King," the gathering dispersed, with evidences of regret at bringing to a close a long and pleasant association.

LAYMEN SPEAK FOR FORWARD MOVEMENT

LARGE UNION MEETING HELD IN TRINITY CHURCH ADDRESSED BY THREE TEACHERS

The great Forward Movement of the churches of Canada was assured the support of the laymen of this city when three of their number, Mr. L. J. Pettit, Mr. M. L. Clarke and Mr. E. F. Ingall, spoke in its favor at a large union meeting held in the Trinity Methodist Church last night.

Mr. Pettit was representing the Baptist Church and made a forceful appeal for more individual worship. He thinks that the greatest assurance of the success of a moral reconstruction of our country and of the world is by the re-establishment of the family alter. There should be more than Sunday worship; there should be worship in the home and private devotion to God. If the forward movement does nothing else than increase family and private prayer it will be well worth while.

Origin From Above.

Mr. M. N. Clarke stated that from a layman's standpoint he regarded the Forward Movement as a great benefit to the individual, to the country and the world. The origin of the movement comes from above, and although a financial objective has been set the spirit is much above any desire for financial gain. The object is to give God a rightful place in the heart of the individual and of the country.

The five allied congregations are working shoulder to shoulder under the one great commander, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Loyalty to Pastors.

Mr Ingall stated that although the pastor was the interpreter of the divine word, it was the duty of every layman to support his pastor in the great Forward Movement of the church. God is making a new world and the question now faces us "Are we prepared to serve in God's new world?"

Mr. Ingall placed emphasis upon the great need for unity. The laymen and the pastors must unite because the church will need all its strength in the days that are before it and it is only Christ's spirit that will be for a greater new world.

ALLIES FORCE GERMANS TO SIGN

VILLA REPORTED CAPTURED BY OWN MEN AND HELD FOR REWARD

Rebels Said to Have Notified Federal Officer That They are Ready to Deliver Their Leader Into His Hands, Big Reward Has Been Offered for His Seizure.

Juarez, Dec. 5.— Francisco Villa has been captured by a force of his own men and is being held for a reward from the Mexican Government, according to advices received here by Superintendent Caballero, of the Chihuahua division of the National Railways of Mexico.

Two Villa rebels are reported to have presented themselves at the federal headquarters at Parral and notified the commander there that Villa had been captured and was being held for surrender to the Carranza forces. The State of Chihuahua has already offered 50,000 pesos as reward.

F. W. Caballero, who received the [illegible] of the reported capture, is [illegible] on an inspection tour with Colonel Paulino Fontes, director general of the National Railways of Mexico.

Although the advices received by Caballero gave no details, it is known that a detachment of federal forces has been sent from Parral to the place indicated by the two Villa rebels.

Cavalrymen Pursuing Villa.

Galveston, Texas, Dec. 5. — Five thousand picked Mexican cavalrymen in five divisions are in hot pursuit of Francisco Villa, according to a statement by Mexican Consul Fierro, who said he received this information today. The men are under command of General Diguez and have orders to apprehend Villa, dead or alive.

The massacre of a regiment of federal troops by Villistas, recently reported form El Paso, was declared false by the consul.

Villa Orders Execution

El Paso, Texas, Dec. 5th. — Orders have been issued by Francisco Villa for the execution of all Carranza officers and men captured by his forces, according to advices received today, as a reprisal for the recent execution of Villa's chief ally, General Felipe Angeles.

The first important federal officer to suffer this fate was Major Leon. Castro, who was operating in the State of Durango under orders of General Gabriel Gavire, formerly commander at Juarez. The Villa of[illegible] responsible for the execution of Castro was Salvado Quevedo.

Villa is planning a new campaign in Chihuahua and Durango, and accordingly the federal garrisons in these two States have been reinforced according to reports.

Shipment of modern rifles and of machine guns are reaching the rebel forces in Mexico, according to reports reaching the border today. A band of Insurgents routed near Tochimilco, Puebla, recently left behind a small cannon and two machine guns of modern type and presumably sent from the United States, it is said. General Pilar R. Sanchez, federal commander of operations in Puebla, has made a report of the matter to the Mexican Secretary of War.

Senators Fall and Hitchcock will consult President Wilson at 2:30 this afternoon. London. Dec. 5.—Experts commenting on last night's fight concur in saying that the victory went to the best man and that Carpentier won by speed and, cleverness. Beckett's manager says Carpentier brought off "a million to one" chance, but this is not the view of experts. The Daily Mail critic accuses Beckett of "sheer stupidity."

STATES NOW ENGAGE IN MINING OF COAL

GOVERNORS SEE THAT THEIR IS SUFFICIENT FOR HOME USE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Dec. 5.—The efforts of the governors of at least ten states to have sufficient coal mined to provide for domestic consumers and essential industries marked the progress of the strike of the bituminous coal miners today. Restrictions have been placed on the consumption of fuel throughout the country from New York to the Sierra Nevada mountains, as the general situation showed virtually no improvement, and the miners maintained their attitude of hostility.

Y. M. C. A. Worker Holds To Old-Fashioned Ideas.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 5.—"One of the biggest perils we are facing today is the passing of the old-fashioned American home with its parental authority," said H. W. Gibson, Y. M. C. A. secretary of boys' work for Massachusetts and Rhode Island, in an address to "Y." workers here.

ALLIES WILL USE TROOPS TO FORCE GERMANS TO SIGN TREATY OF PEACE

MARSHAL FOCH SAYS HE IS READY TO ENFORCE TERMS OF THE ALLIES.

COERCION THE ONLY ARGUMENT

MILITARY LEADERS ARE HOLDING A CONFERENCE AT PARIS TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 5.—There was a persistent rumor on the Stock Exchange this morning that the Supreme Council had threatened Germany that unless final peace terms were agreed to, Allied troops would occupy Essen and Frankfort. The market is not affected so far by the report.

Military Leaders Confer.

Official announcement that Field Marshal Wilson has gone to Paris in response to an urgent summons to consult Marshal Foch in connection with the peace treaty is regarded by some of the morning newspapers as of considerable significance. Printed alongside the address made by Bonar Law last night, in which he said he believed the Allies had the power, and if necessary would exercise it, to insure the ratification of the treaty by Germany, it is suggested that steps to exert pressure on Germany may be imminent.

Supreme Council Act.

Paris, Dec. 5.—The Supreme Council again considered the note to be sent to Germany regarding the signing of the protocol to the peace treaty, but did not complete the document. It also considered the question of the share of the Austro-Hungarian pre-war debt to be borne by Jugo-Slavia. The Council examined the items presented by the Jugo-Slav representatives in the shape of claims for an offset to Jugo-Slavia's share of this debt.

Coercion Only Argument.

According to the morning papers, coercion is the only argument likely to make an impression on the Germans and induce them to sign the protocol. It is said this conclusion was reached at a secret session yesterday of the Council of Five, at which Marshal Foch was present. Ample means exist to pronounce and carry out an ultimatum. It is said the marshal demonstrated this at the meeting, and it is reported that he undertook to put into execution the plan that was drafted last June, the mere threat of which brought the German plenipotentiaries to Versailles.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

In the decision the Privy Council decides that the Canadian Pacific Co. shall share in the proceeds of the sale.

OIL FIND REPORTED IN PEACE RIVER REGION

Tremendous Tracts of Land Have Been Purchased by Three Companies in Which English Investors are Interested Rush Expected as Soon as Navigation Opens.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Prospectors and representatives of the great oil companies arriving in Ottawa from the Great Slave and Peace River countries report great activity in the search for oil in these areas and that the prospects of developing a great oil field are of the best. In addition to the work being done by private companies, there is great activity displayed by the three great oil companies, the Standard, Shell and Anglo-Canadian. Leases covering immense areas have been secured by the Standard and Anglo-Canadian and the former has two outfits in readiness to test the field next spring.

The Standard Oil Company has leases on Great Slave Lake and will make a thorough test of them next year. Adjoining the Standard Oil property a Canadian-American syndicate has located several thousand acres and will send in an outfit next year. In other areas there has been substantial development with considerable success.

English Interests Investigate.

English interests have been in northern Alberta with survey parties for four years. These interests have been consolidated in the Anglo-Canadian Company. A party of seven, headed by A. F. A. Coyne and W. R. Martin, Medicine Hat, are in Ottawa, en route to London, to consult with the British directors. They have under lease 240,000 acres and have made contracts for development work extending over the next five years. This company is prepared to spend a million dollars in definitely locating the oil bearing strata in the northern wilds.

The Shell oil people have, it is stated, several survey parties in the north. This company attempted to secure exclusive rights for a large area, but were not successful. They are now, it is believed, entering into competition with the Standard and Anglo-Canadian Companies to secure oil bearing areas in the north. When navigation opens on the Athabasca River and Great Slave Lake there will be a great rush to these districts. Active operations will be under way by two of the big companies and before the close of navigation the Great Slave oil field will be tested.

LETTER CARRIERS WILL REMAIN ON DUTY AS USUAL SATURDAY AFTERNOON

Half Holiday is Suspended For Next Six Weeks to Take Care of Holiday Rush—Change in Effect Tomorrow.

The letter carriers will work tomorrow afternoon, making deliveries as usual, in order to take care of the holiday rush at the Post Office. This system will be continued for six week, by which time, it is expected, business will have resumed the normal again. The carriers are, by taking this action, giving effect to the agreement that was made with the department when the Saturday half holiday was conceded last sum-

Some time ago an organization in the city complained of the inconveniences caused by the non-delivery of mail on Saturday afternoons and the matter was laid before members of the Board of Trade. It was taken up with a delegation from the Letter Carriers' Association. The postal employes offered to keep one of their members on duty every Saturday afternoon to hand out the mail to any person who might call for it, this arrangement not to affect the inside work of the office or the clerks employed on general delivery. The Board of Trade members approved of the suggestion, a copy of which was forwarded to Ottawa. A telegram from the Deputy Postmaster General was received asking if arrangements could be made to give the carriers kept on Saturday duty a half holiday on some other day in the week and a reply in the affirmative was sent. Since that time nothing further has been heard from Ottawa.

At all events for six weeks, commencing tomorrow business at the Post Office and street delivery will be carried on just as on any other day of the week.

KNOTTY PROBLEM IS SOLVED

County Council Orders New Harness for House of Refuge

Stratford, Dec. 5.—Perth County House of Refuge horses are to have a new set of harness. This momentous question was discussed by the county council. There were objections, and discussion about how long harness should last.

It came out after long and serious deliberation that the present harness had lasted for twenty-four years, was unsafe going down hill, and added nothing to the prestige of the institution, with missing blinkers and rope patches.

It was resolved, therefore, "That a new set of harness be procured, as the old ones, being in use for twenty-four years, are not to be depended on, and repairing would be useless."

405 LIVES WERE LOST AT SEA LAST YEAR

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—The loss of 405 lives at sea during 1918 is reported in statistics bearing on the shipping accidents in Canadian waters compiled by the Dominion Wreck Commissioner. Casualties to vessels numbered 226 and the damage amounted to $1,818,895. Of the total casualties, 180 were to sea-going vessels and 46 to inland vessels. Sixty-seven Canadian, two British and eight foreign vessels were lost in Canadian waters.

Chicago's office buildings went on the six-and-a-half-hour basis and the stores will adopt the 11 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. schedule today. The theatres will be allowed five night and one, afternoon performances a week.

CLAIM DAMAGES FOR ACCIDENT

Thomas Doughty Sues For $80 For Injury to His Car in Collision

At Division Court this morning Thomas Doughty entered an action against Thomas Barrie for $80 for damages received in an automobile accident.

Doughty and three witnesses who were with him at the time swore that on the Sunday afternoon of the accident they were backing out of a lane on George street a short distance south of Sherbrooke street. Doughty sounded his horn, and, according to this evidence, backed slowly out of the lane. On seeing the approach of Barrie's car, driven by Cranston Layfield, they stopped partly on the sidewalk and partly on the road. One witness gave it as his judgment that Layfield was driving about 20 to 25 miles an hour; another put it at 25 to 30 miles, and before the witnesses were all heard it seems the car was travelling in the neighborhood of 35 miles an hour.

The witnesses for the defence claimed they were travelling below the speed of 20 miles an hour and that there was a tree between them and the scene of the accident which prevented them from seeing the car come out. They also thought that by the way their car slewed after the accident Doughty's car was moving backward and ran into theirs.

Textile workers in New England mills are to receive a 12 per cent. wage increase.

CANDIDATES FOR THE MAYORALTY.

ANY MAN who fills the highly honorable position of mayor of Peterborough must be willing and ready to make personal and financial sacrifice. The emoluments allowed by the municipality is merely nominal and the duties are exacting. The mayor is at the beck and call of every organization that stages a social function. His regular official tasks take up a great proportion of his working time and he is frequently called out of the city on official business. It is rather unfair to ask a man of large private interests to sacrifice his connections by serving the city in the capacity of mayor. In public or in private life it is impossible to serve two masters. No man who has tried public service in a lesser capacity than that involved in the mayoralty and who was unable to devote the necessary time to his official duties but was forced to retire lest his private affairs suffer, can be expected to enter public life again in a larger field. Some business man with a fair amount of leisure at his disposal should be chosen for the position. Some man whose business is so well organized that it proceeds of itself during his enforced temporary absences.

The mayoralty was never designed as a training school for politicians, a stepping stone to something higher. It would indeed be unfortunate if anything like partisonship should be permitted to seep into the local situation now. Inordinate lust for office should not be encouraged among the city officials and the mayoralty should not be used as a preliminary exercise, a warming-up canter, for the bigger race in prospect.

THE PAY OF LOCAL TEACHERS.

THE MALE TEACHERS of the city and the member of the Board of Education are still at odds on the question of salary and the matter was again brought to a crisis at the recent meeting of the Board when the principals and vice-principals sent in a new schedule as prepared by themselves. The situation is now becoming so mathematically complicated that none but an expert at figures can hope to make head or tail of the puzzle.

Some time ago the principals asked for a maximum of $2,200 a year instead of the $1,600 allowed at present. The Board fixed a new scale and placed the maximum at $1,900 a year to be reached by yearly stages. Principles of schools of ten rooms or over were to be allowed $50 a year per room after the maximum of $1,900 a year had been attained, up to 15 rooms when the bonus ceased. In this way it was possible for a principal, by long years of service, to reach a maximum of $2,150.

The principals do not object to the idea of an extra room bonus. There are, however, only three of the six schools in the city to which the bonus would apply. What the principals do maintain is that the question of senority of service should be taken into consideration in appointing principals of the larger schools.

The dispute between teachers and school boards is not confined to Peterborough alone, but is general through the Province. The recently perfected organization of ten thousand teachers of Ontario is significant. Rural teachers have sent their ultimatum to the boards of trustees and the new scale is to be general in its application. In London, Ont., members of the newly organized association or union of London School Teachers have put out a semi-official ultimatum that they intend to stand by their guns and insist upon salary increase of $300 all round in 1920 and of $200 additional in the following year.

The Board of Education in London has not taken favorable action on the proposal and the teachers insist that a compromise of $100 to $150 for this year will not avail. Fear is held by some of the members of the Board that the teachers will resort to "direct action" and give the students of all Public Schools and Collegiate and Technical High School a holiday after New Year's.

"Direct action" is a polite term for expressing the idea that teachers may go on strike.

This question that so closely affects the parents and children of the city is surely of sufficient importance to be made an issue in the coming election of members of the School Board.

POLICE COMMISSION BY ELECTION.

THE CITY ELECTS the members of the Board of Education and of the Utilities Commission. The affairs of these departments are, and have been from the beginning, managed with an efficiency and with a devotion to the general welfare that is above serious criticism. The Fire Department, another important branch of the city government, is managed by a council committee elected by the people. Has any one ever heard of such an evil as ward politics creeping into the administrations of these departments? Do the employes of the Utilities Commission, of the School Board or of the Fire Department hold office now at the pleasure of the local political workers?

How then can any misguided newspaper, even if its palpable purpose is the more transparent attempt at time serving, charge itself with the responsibility of declaring that the election of the Police Commission by popular vote is something to be shunned as a pestilence that all manner of rioting and graft would result from such a change? The people who can be entrusted with the duty of electing a mayor, the aldermen, members of the School Board and of the Utilities Commission would not prove unworthy of our extension of that trust to the choice of police commissioners.

To favor the proposed change does not necessarily imply criticism of the commissioners who now hold office under statutory enactment. The system at present maintained is opposed to the democratic spirit of the age, the growing desire for a still greater measure of municipal home rule. As now constituted, the Police Commission is a bureauancy instead of a body representative of the people. Two of the commissioners hold office for life. The only say the city has in the management of the department is through the ex-officio membership of the mayor and that functionary, no matter what may be his personal opinion, is after all little better than a figure-head seeing that he finds himself practically in a perpetual minority.

The people have really no voice in the management of the Police Department. The commission can employ any number of men they please and pay such salaries as they deem advisable. Should such a condition be quietly accepted by the electors?

The operation of the Police Department comes close to the human interest of the people. Their very life and liberty is involved in this branch of the civic government. The department is an expensive adjunct. All these things considered it is certainly not unreasonable to ask that the tax-payers be given some voice in the management of a department that so closely concerns them in other than a merely financial sense.

THE VETERANS AND POLITICS.

THE MEMBERS of the local branch of the G.W.V.A. have decided by a substantial majority not to enter politics as a unit, or in other words not to organize an independent political party. The result of the Dominion-wide plebiscite is still to be learned.

Even if the total vote shows a majority against the proposition this does not imply that the returned soldiers of Canada are not to be a unit to be reckoned with in shaping the political future of the Dominion. If they decide not to form a party of their own subsequent events may prove the wisdom of their course. They might, by so doing, really weaken their influence in politics, finding themselves without a sufficient majority to work out their own policy.

The political status of the Veterans in the years to come can be estimated by a study of what was accomplished by the northern survivors of the American Civil War. The veterans of that conflict organized the Grand Army of the Republic. They never formed either in nation or in the various states an independent party, but they were an influence—often a controlling force—in every election. Military service was insisted upon as a condition of the Republican nomination to the presidency and the soldiers' vote kept that party almost continuously in power for over sixty years. From Grant in 1864 to McKinley in 1900 the party that carried the [illegible] a war veteran at the head of the ticket with the exception of two terms for which Cleveland was elected. In 1884 the Republican chose a civilian in the person of James G. Blaine and lost the election. General Harrison, a battle-scarred veteran, defeated Cleveland four years later. McKinley, a major who rose from the ranks, swept the the country against Bryon in 1896. Roosevelt had a military record but not in the civil war. In his day, by the passing of time, it was impossible to find a survivor of the age suitable for the holding of such a position.

In state politics the American veterans were an influence and many of their number were put in elective and appointive offices. By remaining independent, they were able to secure more than if they had branched out politically for themselves.

The United States did not go to wreck and ruin with this element of the population practically holding the balance of political power. Every soldier may not necessarily be a natural born statesman, but it is certainly unjust to assert as some do that military service until a man for affairs of state. Canadians may here and now face the inevitable and take it for granted that the veterans of the war are to be a political power in the future. And really when the character of these men is considered there is nothing alarming in the prospect. They have been tried by the fire and suffering of sacrifice and have not been wanting.

Mainly About People

Just about the time Mr. Kipling took up his residence in Vermont, a beginner sent a manuscript to Mr. Kipling, with a note detailing his sad experience with "boneheaded" editors, and frankly told him that if the story wasn't a good one he could burn it, and confessed to not being able to write a better one.

Mr. Kipling made corrections and suggestions, and wrote a two-page letter about it. The last paragraph is reproduced. "As the revision of stories is not my work, I must inform you that my fee for a written opinion, suggestions, etc., is $5 (five dollars). I shall therefore be obliged if you will send this sum to The Tribune Fresh Air Fund at your earliest convenience, advising me by letter of the same."

Of course, the author followed Mr. Kipling's suggestions, and the MS. was duly sold for about $30.

On one occasion, an ambitious youth sent Dumas, the great dramatist, the manuscript of a new play he had written, with the request that Dumas become his collaborateur. After reading the production, Dumas became enraged, and, seizing his pen, he replied: "How dare you, sir, propose to yoke together a horse and an ass?" By return of post the author replied: "How dare you, sir, call me a horse?"

Dumas was struck with the wit of the man, and by the next mail he wrote: "Send your play, my young friend!"

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS FOR THE BOYS

The Christmas problem for boys, tiny and large, is not particularly complicated. Boys' tastes are generally simple, but a general guide as to purchases may be acceptable, and here is prepared a helping list of gifts, none of which exceed $1 in in price.

Practical presents among those more frivolous are not unwelcome and all linen handkerchiefs priced at 35 cents and 50 cents each will please the growing man of the family. With smart satin bands are good looking handkerchiefs reasonably priced at 18 cents and 35 cents each.

A real "special" and a gift to a small boy that would be warmly welcomed by his mother are khaki handkerchiefs, which now sell for 5 cents each. A dozen of these would be an inexpensive, practical gift.

Gray mufflers in a silk mixture are sold for 50 cents.

A fine dollar gift is a 50 cent belt and a stunning 50 cent initialed buckle with roller action. Those with tongue buckle are also 50 cents. Other handsome buckles with clearly cut initials are 75 cents. For soft collars are stunning clasp pins with solid gold front. These are priced at 50 cents.

For the kiddie of the family are prettily decorated boxes holding many beautiful shells. What pretty dreams can be his of silvery shores during snowy, shut-in days, and when summer comes he can outline his own little garden with pretty shells—a lovely 35 cent gift.

Two gayly painted pencils are 50 cents.

With plaids and stripes are lovely 40 cent and 60 cent silk ties for the big brother. Sixty-five cents is the price of knitted ones with stylish stripes. Particularly good are two toned neckties in combinations of blue and black, green and gold, and gold and blue. Eighty-five cents is their acceptable price. Windsor ties for little brother, in plain colors and pretty plaids, are 40, 60 and 75 cents.

Socks are ever an alluring subject in the masculine world, and those of silk and lisle, in pretty green, blue and purple shot effect, are a splendid $1 purchase. Silk and lisle socks for 30 cents are in the ever popular drop stitch design. Stunning they are in black and shades of gray, tan, cordovan, purple and a changeable gray.

The latest cry is medium heavy wool hose to be worn with low shoes. These of tan touched with green, of mahogany and tan, and others of tan and cordovan are enticingly priced at 85 cents a pair.

For the same reasonable amount are black socks striped in white and those of blue with white stripes. Black and white cotton stockings, 9 to 12½, sell three for $1.

All sorts of ghostlike information when hands of believing persons are placed in a tiny wooden instrument can be wrested from a board costing 95 cents.

Picture puzzles are 35 cents, 50 cents, 75 cents and $1.00. For older boys are puzzles of smaller cuts costing 50 cents.

Japan has sent fascinating puzzles, whose tiny pieces of wood form cubes, squares and many odd shapes. Fifteen and 35 cents are they.

Boxes of metal puzzles are 25 cents, 50 cents and $1. Separately they sell for 10 cents.

Harmless but fascinating experiments in chemistry and electricity can be had with well planned 60 cent sets. At the same price is a shadow game with a book of plays, figures to be cut out and full instructions as to the filling of many an hour. Cunning tennis racquets are 50 cents.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Mr. Joseph Wearing sent the following letter to Premier Drury today:

Hon. E. C. Drury, Premier,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto.

Sir,—I have been instructed by the Lawn Association of this city to bring to your attention the fact that J. G. Guise-Bagley, a barrister, formerly of Barrie, and lately practicing here, has been found guilty under the Ontario Temperance Act; has been sent up for trial under the Inland Revenue Act for keeping an illicit still; has been charged with performing a criminal operation; and has admitted to the defaliation of several large sums of money.

The fact is that this man did not take the full course in law provided for at Osgoode Hall Law School, but after serving as a solicitor's clerk, was created a barrister and solicitor by a private act of the Ontario Legislature in 1914.

The Law Association respectfully urges that in future no persons be admitted as solicitors and barristers in this manner. The Law Society of Upper Canada is a properly constituted body for dealing with all applicants for the Ontario Bar and all students who graduate from Osgoode Hall must satisfy the Benchers of the Law Society that they are of such a character as to be worthy of practicing before the Ontario courts. Admission to the Bar by private acts of the Legislature is likely to lead to abuses and the creation of barristers and solicitors who are both incompetent and undesirable.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOSEPH WEARING,
Secretary,
Peterboro Law Association.

TEACHERS ARE AFTER MORE PAY

CLAIM THEIR SALARIES DO NOT MEET THE INCREASED COST OF LIVING

The appointment committee of the Board of Education are having troubles of their own these days. The public school teachers of the city feel that their salaries are not adequate to fill the ever increasing high cost of living. The male teachers applied for a material increase and it now appears the unanimous opinion of the lady teachers, expressed through their guild is for a raise to help them meet the high cost of living. They have asked the committee of appointments to meet a delegation from them to discuss the salary question. They have some claims that will be difficult to dispute such as being lower paid than teachers of other cities this size and have figures to show how dificult it is for them to make ends meet under present conditions.

LIVE IN PRACTICAL SLAVERY

Esthonians Little Better Than Serfs to the Germans, Who Own Nine-Tenths of Land.

Esthonians, or Esths, who have repulsed repeated attacks from the Bolsheviki, and recently drove a force under Trotzky to ignominious flight, are described by Dr. Edwin A. Grosvenor in a National Geographic society bulletin as follows:

The Esths are a Finno-Ugrian people, once savage and adventurous, terrifying the Baltic with their piracy, constantly attacking and attacked by the Danes and Swedes. Their final subjection by the Brothers of the Sword and their enforced acceptance of Christianity crushed their spirit and rendered them serfs to the German masters.

The Esths outnumber the Germans in the old province of Esthonia 29 to 1; yet nine-tenths of all the land is held by Germans.

In the former province of Livonia the Esths constitute nearly half the population, while the Germans are less than one-fifteenth. There the land is divided into estates averaging over ten thousand acres in extent, none owned by an Esth or Lett but almost [illegible]

The Russian government at times endeavored by agrarian laws to alleviate the condition of the peasant. Such efforts failed against the stolid resistance of the great proprietors.

The Esths have clung devotedly to their national language, the sole inheritance from their past. They love poetry and song. Their physical characteristics are Finnic; their faces short, broad, beardless; their foreheads low, mouths small, arms long, legs short. Despite their extreme poverty education is relatively advanced. All but 4 per cent are Lutheran Protestants.

Since the sudden universal awakening in 1918 the Esths have been insistent upon national recognition. But ownership in the land is their greatest need.

WHEN FLYING IS UNIVERSAL

Some Highly Interesting Legal Problems That Will Call for Intelligent Settlement.

A series of interesting questions has been made concerning contingencies that may be expected when the air is actually used for miscellaneous traffic. How, for example, will the man on the ground be protected against carelessness by the man in the air, and what kind of sign can the airplane carry which will serve to identify it if some earth-man wishes to lodge a complaint with the authorities? Or again, what will be the rights of the proprietors of a baseball park if an aviator evades the price of admission by flying about over the diamond? Or what will be the remedy of the man who is kept awake at night by airplane motors? What will be the limit of the private citizen's property measured perpendicularly, and how can he tell whether or not an airman is trespassing? Such questions are amusing to read but in all seriousness they mean that the legal problems that will come up with the increasing use of airplanes will require ingenuity for settlement.

Transportation is the fundamental of progress in civilization. All things must pass through it as through the neck of a bottle. If we can transport energy without using cars to carry it, there is just so much gain. Electricity is energy without substance. Its transmission calls for no vehicle other than a copper wire. Hence is it obvious that we must look to electricity for distributing the power on which our economic future as a nation depends.

Tablet to Horace Greeley.

The Vermont Press association placed a memorial tablet on the old building at East Poultney where a ragged fourteen-year-old boy, in 1825, began a painful apprenticeship as a printer, in which he obtained a working knowledge of the most dynamic of all the arts. The ragged boy was Horace Greeley, and the building was the office of the Northern Spectator—a country weekly newspaper.

SAVE WINTER FODDERS

By Putting the Grain-Grinder and Cutting-Box in Shape.

It Pays in Time and Money to Overhaul Farm Machinery—Hints on Knife Adjustment—How to Estimate the Speed of Pulleys.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

TIME in farm work will be saved by systematically overhauling the implements and machinery. This should be done after the season's work is over. Use tends to disorganize machinery: the hard parts become loose through vibration, wear, stress and strain; bearings, gears, joints, all bright and moving parts are attacked by rust, particularly if left out in the weather; oil holes and grease cups become clogged with gummed oil, dust and trash. All this accumulated matter should be scraped off and the parts wiped down with a rag saturated with kerosene; afterward covered with a coating of grease or oil as a protective measure against the devastating action of rust. To render efficient service and to prevent possible accidents these machines should be kept clean, properly adjusted, and run at correct speed.

The grain grinder shaft and bearings should not be allowed to become gummed up with oil and dust; the burrs or plates should be renewed when worn. In replacing them see that they are attached so that they do not wobble, and that they are free from rust, chaff, seeds and gritty matter. All running parts should be kept well oiled.

Every working mechanism of the cutting box should be carefully examined and all trash and gummed oil removed from flywheel shaft, feed rolls, bearings and gears; guards and shields placed in position and securely fixed; the feed rolls should move freely up and down and the safety devices in working order. Attend to the cutter knives, have them properly ground and correctly adjusted to the flywheel in relation to the cutter bar. If too far the fodder will not be properly cut; if too close to the cutter bar the draft of the machine is in[illegible] the flywheel, [illegible] and cutter bar. Used with a blower it is important that the proper speed be developed as the fan can only create sufficient blast by running fast enough to force air through the pipe at a rate of 9 to 10 thousand feet per minute. Speed is an important factor in operating these machines for efficient service, not only as to the amount done, but also as to the quality, or the amount of work accomplished, but most manufacturers state in their catalogues the speed at which the machine should travel. The operator should figure out the size of the pulley to attain the speed required.

The rule for speeds of pulleys is: the diameter of the "driving" pulley multiplied by its speed is equal to the diameter of the "driven" multiplied by its speed: or $D \times R = d \times r$ in which "D" is the diameter of the driving pulley multiplied by "R" its speed, and "d" the diameter of the driven pulley multiplied by "r" its speed. If we know three of these items we can easily figure out the fourth.

The driving pulley is the one that causes the belt to move.

The driven pulley is the one that is moved by the belt.

Possibly a farmer may have on hand an engine rated 2 h.p., speed 400 revolutions per minute with an 8-inch pulley. He buys a grinder without considering what relation its speed bears to that of his engine. When the grinder is hitched up to the engine it does not deliver the capacity expected of it. This promiscuous buying and want of forethough in purchasing machinery is responsible for a great deal of trouble and dissatisfaction. More attention should be given in this regard when buying additional machinery for the farm. We'll suppose that the grinder bought is rated 2,000 to 2,500 R.P.M., 4 inch or 5 inch pulley; capacity per hour 3 to 10 bushels depending on the condition of the grain.

$$8 \times R\ 400 = d4 \times r = \frac{8 \times 400}{4} = 800$$

R.P.M., but the manufacturer's rating calls for 2,000 to 2,500 R.P.M. Hence the grinder is delivering only two-fifths of its rated capacity or something like 1 1-5th bushels per hour. To get the required speed the driving pulley on the engine should be 20 inches in diameter, worked out as follows:

or the speed of the engine with an 8-inch pulley should be 1,000 R.P.M. worked out thus

This method applies also to finding the speed and size of pulleys of the cutting box.—Prof. Jno. Evans, O. A. College, Guelph

Something About Egg Circles.

There are about fifty Egg Circles in the province, ranging in membership all the way from four to 400. The story of all these egg circles and others which have failed would give an almost complete picture of how co-operation should, or should not, be carried on. In reading over the names where the circles are established, we find many of them whose previous market was the small-town local dealer, with his uneconomic method of marketing eggs. Such circles are now receiving, in spite of their distance from the central market, wholesale prices while unorganized points nearer often receive lower prices.

St. Botolph's Town.

Boston or St. Botolph's Town is a seaport in Lincolnshire, England, on the River Witham, and four miles from its mouth, with a wharfage of 2,330 feet. In the days of the Plantagenets it was one of the chief British seaports, but the silting in of the river has been an obstacle to its growth of late years, almost continual dredging being necessary to keep a passage to the sea, even for small vessels. Its church tower, St. Botolph's, is a well-known conspicuous landmark, depended upon also by mariners at sea.

Issuing an "Extra" in Bano.

The editor of the Bano Daily News (Africa) does not have to trouble over such matters as circulation or the high cost of paper. When he gets a piece of news, he smooths off some slabs of wood, writes up the story in his best editorial style, and then gives the slabs to his office boy, who runs off with them and hangs them in conspicuous places so that he who runs may read.

Good Taste.

Good taste is the conscience of the mind. Lowell's definition is compact of thought and is worth dwelling upon. Good taste is a trait we all agree in valuing, though its meaning as a rule is rather vaguely felt; we urge its cultivation and admire its exercise but the quality itself is generally less analyzed than desired.—Hartley Alexander.

SMALLPOX IN THIRTY COUNTIES

Toronto the Centre According to Provincial Health Department

In the Provincial Health Department report just issued it is stated that there were in November, 1919, in 30 counties of Ontario altogether 1,673 cases of smallpox. In November, 1918, there were only six cases in the whole province.

Toronto is declared to be the centre of the epidemic, which is a mild one—so mild that the first cases notified were given in error as chickenpox. These early cases were observed in the spring. The report charges that owing to the failure of the Toronto Health authorities to carry out the law as to compulsory vaccination the U. S. has established quarantine regulations. Considerable increase is not[illegible] also in scarlet fever, diptheria, measles, typhoid and cerebro-spinal meningitis.

MUST FIGHT FOR SEAT

G. Howard Ferguson's Election Has Been Protested

George Howard Ferguson, former Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, who was one of the two Ministers of the Hearst Government to survive the landslide of October 20th., will have to fight for his seat.

The U. F. O. have decided to protest his seat on the grounds of corrupt practices, and Mr. Payne, the defeated candidate in Grenville, is taking action.

But this is not the only protest likely, as it is reported that the Conservatives intend to protest one of the U. F. O. seats which was won by a small majority, on the same grounds.

Other Protests Expected

Premier Drury stated that he had heard of the action being taken locally by Mr. Payne and thought that was the only protest likely. Should the Conservatives intend to protest any of the seats they are keeping it quiet until the last minute, but it is certain that the Conservatives have been considering this for some time.

"The U. F. O.," said Mr. Dewart, "means 'us for ourselves.'"

Queen In Her Own Right.

On the west coast of Ireland stands a castle bearing the euphonious name of Carrig-a-Hooley. Several centuries ago this was the favorite castle of Grace O'Malley, an Irish Amazon, who took unto herself the title of queen and ruled over several counties in a fashion not at all in accordance with sixteenth century ideas of femininty, says the Detroit News.

Home rule in Ireland was demanded even in those days. When Queen Elizabeth offered to make the Irish maid a countess, history reports that she answered proudly, "I consider myself as great a queen as your majesty."

On her voyage from the English court to her mountain domain, Queen Grace stopped at Howth Castle, and being but coldly received by the lord, she proceeded to teach him hospitality by abducting his son and heir, returning the child only on the promise that the gates of Howth Castle were to swing open always at the dining hour.

TWO SHIFTS IN WORKMAN'S DAY

LORD LEVERHULME, EMPLOYER ADDRESSES THE CANADIAN CLUB IN TORONTO

FAVORS PRIVATE OWNERSHIY

CAPITAL AND LABOR MUST BREAK DOWN OLD BARRIERS AND CO-OPERATE

Toronto, Dec. 5.—Men of all shades of opinion gathered at the Empire Club luncheon yesterday to hear that sternly practical peer of the British Empire— the Right Hon. Lord Leverhulme.

His subject was not announced in advance. It was expected that his broad sympathies with the aspirations of workingmen would be the burden of his speech and that was so. Without any waste of words, in simple, frank, and racy style, he expounded the ideas which form his realization of the economic conditions which make up the industrial life of the nation.

"The men who work, whether with hand or brain are the men in whose lap the comforts and luxuries of the age should be poured for they have earned them," declared Lord Leverhulme.

"I feel confident that the system which has survived through the ages though it may want a few alterations, is sound in the aggregate."

Barriers Being Broken

He stressed the fact that barriers between capital and labor were rapidly being broken down, and the dividing lines wiped out.

Lord Leverhulme is a great admirer of "Harry" Ford. People, he said, had forgotten that Mr. Ford worked hard for years on a farm before he rose to a place of success. Aspirations, he declared, were a good thing. A country was so much the [illegible] of aspiring people in it. He was glad to see there were millionaires in this country. The millions might not last long in many instances. It was not the millions that showed a healthy condition, but the diligence and application to industry.

Lord Leverhulme upheld the principle of private ownership, which alone, he declared, could develop a nation to the highest degree and produce the best type of men and women. Too many employers, he considered, failed to recognize the necessity of giving to every employe the sense of partial ownership.

"If we could in some way show that profits are not made entirely by either capital or labor, but by a proper blending of both," the speaker continued. "We must have capital labor and good management. The wit of men has yet failed to invent a machine which will dispense with either capital or management."

Co-partnership a Big Item.

Happier and more contented relationships, he declared, would follow a system of co-partnership between capital and labor. The average life of co-partnership schemes in the United Kingdom, the official returns showed, was only five years. Lord Leverhulme declared that was so because the co-partnership schemes that failed were founded on wrong motives. They were schemes introduced in man instances, he believed to avoid strikes and that was all. He believed a co-partnership plan would avoid strikes in the main, but it was bound to fall if not based on a sympathetic understanding.

Denounces 8-Hour Day

Lord Leverhulme denounced the eight-hour day as impracticable. Machines were kept idle for many hours a week. A change to a six-hour day of two shifts, by which the machines would be worked twelve hours, and the workmen six, appeared to him to be the solution of high production costs. It would increase production 50 per cent, he stated.

The speaker admitted that the scheme was not applicable to all industries. It would not be practicable on the farm, but it would in all manufacturing concerns.

Opposition by organized labor, to the two-shift scheme had prevented him, Lord Leverhulme stated, from pressing the project. He anticipated the passing of that opposition, as soon as labor realized the need for increased production, and warned against anything tending to increase the cost of production.

KING WELCOMES THE PRINCE

[illegible] Arrival Home.

Lnodon, Dec. 5.— Although the welcome home dinner of the Prince of Wales at Buckingham Palace was a private function, King George greeted his son in a set speech, addressing him as "My dear son," and adding: "I wish you a most hearty welcome on your return home, safe and sound."

The King expressed his pleasure at the remarkable enthusiasm with which the Prince had been everywhere received and because he had forged a new link between Canada and the Motherland.

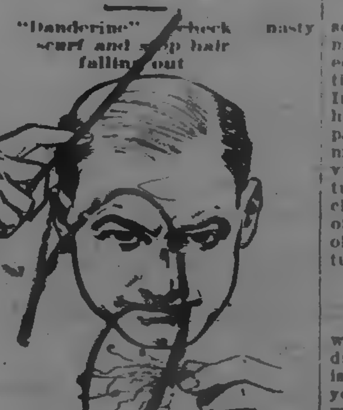
The Prince of Wales, replying to his father, began:

"Your Majesty, I feel very diffident in attempting to reply to this toast. When you bade me farewell I felt very proud of the mission you entrusted to me. I was following your footsteps, setting out to see the Empire for myself, and I mean to do my utmost to be worthy of your confidence.

"It is still a prouder moment for me when I hear from your lips that you're pleased with the way in which I carried out my task, and I am deeply grateful for the far too kind words you have used about me. I have had a wonderful journey, a wonderful experience, and can never adequately express my gratitude for the universal kindness and hospitality shown me."

DANDRUFF SOON GETS YOUR HAIR

Let "Danderine" check nasty scurf and stop hair falling out



To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a small bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter for a few cents, pour a little in your hand and rub it into the scalp. After several applications the hair usually stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff. Soon every hair on your scalp shows new life, vigor, brightness, thickness and more color.

Works Both Ways.

"How much being in the army improved your boy Josh!"

"Come to notice," said Farmer Corntossel, "you are right. I hadn't considered it that way. I was too busy thinkin' about how much Josh's bein' in it had improved the army."

Steel and Bronze Bells.

The Bochum Verin, the well-known German steel works which specializes in the manufacture of [illegible] statement by one Prof. [illegible] that steel bells were merely a "war substitute" for bells of bronze and that their disadvantages outweighed the advantages. This assertion, the Bochum Verein states, is nothing but a repetition of old statements which have already been disproved.

So far from the use of steel for bell founding being a "war substitute" industry the Bochum Verein has made steel bells for sixty years, and before the war had made over 7,500 church bells. In Berlin alone there are more than sixty peals of steel bells. They are more durable than bronze bells, and with an equal volume of sound can be heard at a greater distance. Under normal conditions, with steel about one-third the price of bronze, steel bells are at least 50 per cent. cheaper than good bronze bells.

Exception also is taken to his statement that the cost of maintenance of steel bells is greater than that of bronze bells owing to their being so much heavier. Up to one ton apiece weight steel bells are not heavier than bronze, and above that weight they are considerably lighter; hence it is incorrect to say that they require specially constructed belfries or an increased staff of ringers. The bronze bells in the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church at Berlin, which weigh thirty and a half tons, would only weigh twenty-four and three-quarters tons if they were made of steel.

Source of Turpentine.

Turpentine oil and rosin are already being produced on a commercial scale in India by the distillation of pine rosin. A new source of supply which, though comparatively small, may be valuable, especially for Indian use, has now been found in frankincense or olibanum. This material is obtained by the natives making incisions in the stems of Boswellia serrata, a tree widely distributed throughout the dry zone forests of Central India. The rosinous substance which exudes from the cuts contains a kind of turpentine, a rosin and a gum.

Investigations of the methods of separating these constituents in a marketable form have been conducted since 1912 by the forest authorities in India in co-operation with the Imperial Institute, and the results have been published recently in a paper by R. S. Pearson, forest economist, and Puran Singh, chemical advisor, at the Forest Research Institute, Dehra Dun. The general conclusion reached, based on the results of numerous trials, is that turpentine oil is equal to good quality American turpentine oil.

The Happy Ending.

"My darling," said a fond mother, who believed in appealing to children's tender feelings instead of punishing them, "if you are so naughty you will grieve mamma so that she will get ill and have to lie in bed in a dark room and take nasty medicine; and then she may die and have to be taken away out to the cemetery and be buried, and you ——" The child had become more solemn, but an angelic smile overspread his face at his mother's last words, and, throwing his arms about her neck, he exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, and may I sit beside the coachman?"

PRINCIPLE OF TELEPATHY.

How Information Is Conveyed From One Mind to Another.

Not only is it possible to transmit messages from one place to another by means of wireless, but it is possible on occasions for one mind to communicate with another distant mind without the employment of any apparatus whatever, writes Elliott O'Donnell in Pearson's Weekly.

That is what we mean by telepathy.

Telepathy is purely mental. It is carried on quite independently of all the organs of the body, saving the brain, and yet it enables us to receive from afar impressions of thoughts, feelings, visions, taste and sounds. It is entirely a matter of concentration.

One of the most remarkable cases of what certainly appears to have been telepathic communication was that of Mrs. Hawker, wife of the famous airman. It will be remembered that when news first came to hand that the daring aviator was missing, the whole country, with one exception, feared the worst, and that exception was Mrs. Hawker.

Mrs. Hawker was never in doubt as to her husband's safety, because at the very critical moment when his life was in the gravest danger, messages came to her saying that all was right and that he was alive and well. The only explanation of these messages seems to lie in telepathy; there was certainly no other medium for transmitting them.

A curious case was that of a certain priest who disputed the rights of anyone in a village near Paris to a particular field. A farmer bought it, and the priest determined to make him relinquish it through the instrumentality of what was in reality telepathy. Accordingly, he put a wooden cross in the field, to which he affixed a paper bearing on it the words: "If you put your spade into this field a spectre will come and torment you in the night."

The farmer, taking no notice of the cross, overturned it, and sure enough that night and for many subsequent nights was tormented by a figure in white that entered his room and said: "Give me back my field."

Finally, the farmer grew ill, a doctor was summoned, and it then transpired that it was all due to the priest, who, at the very time the farmer used to see and hear the vision, was parading his own house in a white sheet, repeating the very words, "Give me back my field," that the farmer had heard so continually. It was done solely by concentration.

But it is not only sounds that can be conveyed by telepathy, but taste as well.

Dr. Elliotson narrates how, in the presence of the Archbishop of Dublin and several other persons, he experimented on a certain Mrs. Snewing. Standing behind Mrs. Snewing, so that she could not see him, Dr. Elliotson put various substances in his mouth—salt, sugar, cinnamon, ginger, and so on, all of which were carefully concealed with blotting paper and handed to him by a Mr. Scarlett, eldest son of Lord Abinger.

Each time an article was put in his mouth and he began to taste it, Mrs. Snewing called out and described what she fancied she tasted and every time her description tallied exactly with what Dr. Elliotson had in his mouth.

A Mild Hint.

"Two bags and a hatbox," said the tourist, who was travelling for the first time in Scotland, arriving at a little wayside station. The porter mournfully collected the articles and put the man on board a car. "And, by the way, porter," said the passenger, "what do they usually give you here for a tip?" The porter jerked his thumb over his shoulder. "See yon big hoose amang the trees?" he asked. "Yes, but what has that got to do with it?" "Weel, that's the workhoose and it's fu' o' auld railway porters!"

Valuable Foxes.

Like everything else, blue foxes are going up. A good skin of this much-prized animal will cost you at least $200 in the coming winter.

It should not be confused with the silver fox, which is a phase or variant of the common red fox; the same animal, that is to say, with a freak color (black with white-tipped hairs), which may be perpetuated from generation to generation by selection and breeding.

The blue fox is, in the same way, a variant of the white Arctic fox, which has a brown and tawny pelage in the summer time. In other words, its color, which is a dark blue-gray, is abnormal and rare. But, for some unexplained reason, most of the foxes on the Pribylof islands, in Bering sea, are of this color.

FAMOUS CHICAGO BATTERY SIGNED

ALEXANDER AND KILLIFER ARE LOOKING FORWARD TO 1920 BASEBALL SEASON

That famous battery, Grover Alexander and Bill Killifer, has been signed for the season of 1920 by the Cubs baseball team. The former came to terms with President Veeck at the close of the National League season, and the star backstop affixed his name to a set of articles this week, thereby squelching the report that he would possibly hold out for more money, since he led the National League catchers in batting with an average of .286 for 102 games.

Alexander is unusually enthusiastic over his prospects for next season. He was disappointed with his work last summer owing to an injury to his arm, and the schedule of 1920 cannot come around soon enough for him. He has done a lot of hunting and trap shooting this fall, [illegible] in better condition than when the season closed. In his conversation [illegible] winter he has intimated [illegible] he will start preparing for the [illegible] two weeks before the Cubs [illegible] to Pasadena by taking a trip to [illegible] Springs. He had no chance to [illegible] with the team last spring because he did not come out of the [illegible] service until after it had returned and then he was too enthusiastic and hurt his arm exerting himself. He recovered toward the close of the season and pitched in the fashion that stamps him as the greatest of all present day right handers.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Though there [illegible] joy in the Ottawa hockey club [illegible] over the announcement that [illegible] Gerard had come to terms, [illegible] began to gather when Frank Nighbor, who came down from Pembroke for a conference, announced that he would not be able to play [illegible] winter owing to business interests [illegible] Pembroke.

Nighbor is now Pembroke's representative [illegible] with Dave Behan, [illegible] the Great West Life Assurance [illegible] and has not yet been able [illegible] arrangements to get away [illegible] the season. He was unable on this account to name his terms. He promised to let the Ottawas know this week if anything could be done.

Nighbor is one of the greatest drawing cards in the National League, one of the flashiest forwards that ever played the game, and the idol of Ottawa fans. It will be a sore blow if the tall, dark-haired centre ice star is forced to retire.

BABE RUTH MAY ENTER FIGHT RING

TO BE GIVEN TRIAL AS HEAVYWEIGHT BOXER—USED TO BE IN PRELIMINARIES

Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 5.—"Babe" Ruth, outfielder for the Boston American League baseball club, and champion home-run hitter of the world, may become a professional heavyweight boxer, it is announced.

"Kid" McCoy, a former pugilist, and Al St. John, a motion picture actor, have entered into an agreement by which McCoy will train Ruth for thirty days, and if his report was favorable, it was said, St. John would finance a campaign of the outfielder to obtain a match with Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion. Ruth has given up plans to become a motion picture actor, it was said.

The home-run hitter champion said that he used to be in preliminary contests in Baltimore.

"I have always wanted to be a professional boxer," he said, "but I [illegible] McCoy and St. John think I have any future. I am willing to do everything they ask."

WORDS FROM BIBLE.

Has Contributed Phrases to Our Ordinary Language.

The contributions from the Bible to everyday speech is commented upon in an interesting article from the popular new literary publication, "John o' London's Weekly," by E. E. C., who says in part:

"Leaving aside all theological and ecclesiastical terms and phrases, it has enriched our vocabulary and contributed more to our language than any other book. And whilst the words and phrases of the scientist and philosopher are upon the lips of the few, those of the Bible have become the current coin of the everyday language of life.

"The story of Eden has given us 'Forbidden Fruit,' and that of the Flood has contributed the 'Olive branch' as the symbol of peace. The confusion of tongues has bequeathed 'Babel,' which [illegible] has a far wider meaning to-day than a single tribe.

"'The mark of Cain,' 'Naboth's vineyard,' 'the mantle of Elijah,' and 'the handwriting on the wall' have become common figures of speech.

"To sell one's birthright found its origin in Esau's transaction with Jacob; and we [illegible] have had the idea of Jubilee but for the laws of Moses.

"If Matthew Arnold borrowed 'Philistinism' from the Germans, they or somebody else borrowed it from the Bible, and if he borrowed 'sweetness and light' from Swift, that eminent divine probably got the idea from the same source, for the terms are more than once associated there. 'The oil for light and sweet incense' (Numbers [illegible], 16); or the phrase may have been suggested by the familiar words of the Psalm, 'Truly the light is sweet.'

"Did Burke, who knew the Bible well, get 'light and leading' from 'Send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead me'?

"The characters of the Bible have supplied us with a host of words and phrases. 'As old as Methuselah,' 'the patience of Job,' 'the love of David and Jonathan,' as a synonym for friendship, 'the strength of Samson,' and 'the wiles of Delilah' have all passed into the currency of our language and helped to make it forceful and picturesque. Judas will ever serve as an epithet to fling at a traitor, and Ananias at a liar. Simon, who would have bought the Divine gift for money, has given us simony. Jeremiad and Magdalen, Pharisaical and Laodicean, with many others are from Bible names.

"To the Psalms we owe some beautiful and expressive phrases: 'three score years and ten,' 'a tale that is told,' 'the quiverful,' 'the olive plants,' and 'the snare of the fowler,' are a few. And they have given any amount of mottoes to guilds and towns and institutions and families.

"The words of Christ, especially his parables, have largely enriched our language: to 'strain at a gnat and swallow a camel,' to 'hide light under a bushel,' to 'take up the cross.' 'Talented' sends us back to one of the parables, 'a good Samaritan,' and 'a prodigal' to others. 'Loaves and fishes,' 'the eleventh hour,' and 'the widow's mite,' are common expressions with us. Probably 'blowing your own trumpet' found its origin in the action of the Pharisees."

NATIONAL LEAGUE PLAN FOR BIG YEAR

While the National League has no internal wrangle to settle, worry or fuss about at its meeting on December 9 in New York, it has a lot of business to dispose of in the way of arranging plans for the 1920 season which its members think will be the greatest year baseball has had in a decade or more. At the coming annual session of the National League the magnates will make plans for a most successful year by increasing the schedule, adding to the player limit and extending the training period as well as taking other steps to promote the sport.

Last season the major leagues, owing to doubtful conditions all over the country, reduced the schedule from 154 to 140 games. After the race began the magnates regretted the change, realizing they had made [illegible] played out the short schedule and had an unusually prosperous year. The game came back with such force and enthusiasm that it left no doubt in the minds of the club owners that they ought to go back to the 154 list, which the National League has decided to do, and there is no question but that the American will do the same.

Earlier Opening Not Likely.

Going back to the 154-game schedule does not mean that the season will open any earlier than it did this last season. The prospects are that it will begin about the same time, April 24, or two or three days before. This question, however, is open for debate and may cause a little friction in the National League as some of the members favor an earlier opening. Those who oppose it declare the later beginning proved more profitable as there were fewer postponements at the start of the [illegible] than ever before. It is not necessary to start any sooner than last season as Sunday baseball is now permitted in New York, and the [illegible] that were caused [illegible] by not playing on the Sabbath there will be eliminated, so that there will be few extra double attractions during the season.

The [illegible] of the player limit will come up for discussion. How the magnates stand on this is not known. President Veeck of the Cubs favors a return to the twenty-five limit and is of the opinion that the majority of magnates also do so because they would like to carry more young players during the race for development. The league has had a restriction of twenty-one men for two years. It has proved satisfactory, the clubs have had enough men, but there is the protest that it does not give a manager an opportunity to unearth, retain and prepare youngsters for the future. Managers like to keep prospects on their teams instead of sending them out to the minors for some other pilot to develop or ruin.

THE P[illegible] APPLES

Declared insane in New Jersey, although in New York and Pennsylvania he is legally sane, is the plight of Chas. H. Jeffries. [illegible] fortunately he is in New Jersey.

PEEVED OVER INSPECTION

Women Coming to Canada Dislike Medical Inspection.

London, Dec. 4.—The Daily Express asserts that there is a strong feeling being manifested among women immigrants going into Canada against the revised regulations for stricter medical inspection and compulsory guardianship by Canadian Government conductresses.

OLD ESTATES GO.

Many of the big estates of English landholders, which have given to the countryside of Great Britain that charm of old-world atmosphere which has made it so attractive to American tourists are doomed, according to London newspapers, if the present tendency in the real estate market in the British Isles continues.

Heavy taxation, according to these newspapers, has compelled many old families to dispose of their vast acres, and while the estates are being eagerly bought, in few cases is an effort made by the new owners to retain them in their entirety. As a result, England bids fair to become in the not distant future a nation of small landlords.

Many families of the large estate owning class, while retaining part of [illegible] portions to sell. Others have sold outright to members of the class of war rich created by the war, who themselves have disposed of parts of the acquired estates to smaller owners.

The old-style English squire, it is predicted, soon will be a rarity, or will entirely have disappeared. The type of country gentleman who took a personal interest in his tenants will be no more. Village life will be completely changed because of the new class of tenants.

Incidentally, it is reported, that the cherished institution of fox hunting is being spoiled. Since many small farmers own their lands outright, and since these lands represent to them their living, they are refusing to let the hounds and riders pass over their fields. And as the land is becoming more and more cut up into small parcels the hunters are finding themselves more and more restricted.

OXY[illegible]

To help in solving this important war problem an oxygen apparatus was developed, smaller than the kind used for mine-rescue work, but constructed on much the same principle. Equipped with this contrivance, and carrying a supply of liquid oxygen along with him, the aviator could skim along in safety through the upper reaches of the welkin.

Happy Married Celebrities.

"The reason why my long married life has been so happy," said the late Lady Tennyson, "is that my husband has always been my lover. We are far more lovers to-day than when we married so very many years ago." And this has been the happy experience of other wedded couples whose courtship days have lasted long as life itself.

Charles Kingsley called himself "an old married man" when he wrote to his wife from a solitary convalescent holiday at the seaside. "This place is perfect, but it seems a dream, and imperfect without you. I never before felt the loneliness of being without the beloved being whose every look and word and motion are the keynotes of my life. People talk of love ending at the altar—Fools!"

Tom Hood, to his last day, was the passionate lover of the wife who inspired that sweetest of his songs, "I love thee, I love thee, 'tis all that I can say," and to whom in his last year he wrote, "Bless you, bless you, again and again, my dear one, my only one, my one as good as a thousand to your old unitarian in love, T. H."

One of the last pictures we have of Wordsworth is of "the old man walking in the garden with his wife. They were both old, and he was almost blind; but they seemed like sweethearts courting, they were so tender and attentive to each other." And Nathaniel Hawthorne had lived many years in his "wedded paradise" when he wrote to his "Flower [illegible] person that was ever necessary to me; I am only myself when thou art within my reach, thou unspeakably beloved woman."

Robert Browning never came to London without visiting the church in which he and his wife, who was "soul of his soul," were made one, without kissing the paving-stones in front of its door. And Steele's passion for his wife found expression in such burning words as these: "I love you better than the light of my eyes or the life-blood in my heart. There are no words to express the tenderness I have for you."

When Moon Was Blue.

The expression "once in a blue moon," meaning that occurrences are so widely separated by time as to almost never recur, is not a figure of speech. It has a basis of astronomical fact, says Tit-Bits. The phenomenon has been twice observed in both Italy and Austria, and once in England. There is no available record of it having been noticed in America.

A blue sun has been recorded only once. That was in August, 1883, in Java. A day or two before there was a very violent eruption of a large volcano about a hundred miles from Batavia. The eruption ended with an explosion in which a range of mountains was destroyed, a cavity being left in its place, more than a thousand feet deep at one point. Billions of tons of rock, mud, and dust were thrown high into the air, and the sun was obscured over a large area. At Batavia the darkness became so deep that street lamps had to be lighted in the middle of the forenoon. That condition prevailed until toward sunset. Then the volcanic cloud began to clear away, leaving the sun visible. Instead, however, of it being red, as it usually is when viewed through a smoke cloud, it appeared as a magnificent deep blue disc, remaining that color until it sank below the horizon. The phenomenon was seen by everyone within thirty or forty degrees of the equator.

Mrs. Crooks.

Mrs. Will Crooks, wife of the labor leader in the British House of Commons, is active in a propaganda for reducing the drudgery of housework. Apropos of this, she said recently: "In all the talk we hear about [illegible] hours of labor one might [illegible] the world consisted [illegible] only, or at least that women's hours are already so short that any reduction for them was of no [illegible] whatever. The facts are exactly the opposite. Not only does the number of women exceed that of men, but her hours are as indefinite as the number and character of her household duties. Tens of thousands of mothers have next to no leisure at all, and their work is exacting, worrying, trying, and exhausting."

Spray to Discourage Mites.

The farmer who sprays his chicken roosts thoroughly three times during the season, beginning in April, will have little cause to worry about mites, say experienced poultrymen.

The troublesome poultry house mite is almost sure to appear when warm weather comes. The most common means of control is kerosene sprayed upon the perches each week; some farmers give the roosts an occasional coat of whitewash. These methods, however, are not always effective, unless thoroughly done, for the mite is a very hardy creature.

Stronger liquids such as crude carbolic acid or some of the coal tar preparations which will not mix with water are much better. They last longer and do the work better. It is well to dilute the acid or coal tar products with kerosene, so that a spray pump can be used to apply them.

A common formula is one part of acid to three parts of kerosene.

The Chinese make use of firecrackers for all occasions, and besides the home consumption they export about $3,000,000 worth annually.

ALEXANDER AND KILLIFER ARE LOOKING FORWARD TO 1920 BASEBALL SEASON

That famous battery, Grover Alexander and Bill Killifer, has been signed for the season of 1920 by the Cub baseball team. The former came to terms with President Veeck at the close of the National League season, and the star backstop affixed his name to a set of articles this week, thereby squelching the report that he would possibly hold out for more money, since he led the National League catchers in batting with an average of .286 for 103 games.

Alexander is unusually enthusiastic over his prospects for next season. He was disappointed with his work last summer owing to an injury to his arm, and the schedule of 1920 cannot come around soon enough for him. He has done a lot of hunting and trap shooting this fall and is in better condition than when the season closed. In his conversation this winter he has intimated that he will start preparing for the [illegible] two weeks before the Cubs [illegible] to Pasadena by taking a trip to [illegible] Springs. He had no chance to [illegible] with the team last spring because he did not come out of the [illegible] service until after it had returned and then he was to enthusiastic and hurt his arm exerting himself. He recovered toward the close of the season and pitched in the fashion that stamps him as the greatest of all present day right handers.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Though there was joy in the Ottawa hockey club camp over the announcement that Eddie Gerard had come to terms, gloom began to gather when Frank Nighbor, who came down from Pembroke for a conference, announced that he would not be able to play this winter owing to business interests in Pembroke.

Nighbor is now Pembroke's representative along with Dave Behan, for the Great West Life Assurance Company and has not yet been able to make arrangements to get away for the season. He was unable on this account to name his terms. He promised to let the Ottawas know this week if anything could be done.

Nighbor is one of the greatest drawing cards in the National League, one of the flashiest forwards that ever played the game, and the idol of Ottawa fans. It will be a sore blow if the tall, dark-haired centre ice star is forced to retire.

TO BE GIVEN TRIAL AS HEAVYWEIGHT BOXER—USED TO BE IN PRELIMINARIES

Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 3.—"Babe" Ruth, outfielder for the Boston American League baseball club, and champion home-run hitter of the world, may become a professional heavyweight boxer, it is announced. "Kid" McCoy, a former pugilist, and Al St. John, a motion picture actor, have entered into an agreement by which McCoy will train Ruth for thirty days, and if his report was favorable, it was said, St. John would finance a campaign of the outfielder to obtain a match with Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion. Ruth has given up plans to become a motion picture actor, it was said.

The home-run hitter champion said that he used to be in preliminary contests in Baltimore.

"I have always wanted to be a professional boxer," he said, "but I gave up any future I might have had [illegible] McCoy and St. John think I have any future. I am willing to do everything they ask."

WORDS FROM BIBLE.

Has Contributed Phrases to Our Ordinary Language.

The contributions from the Bible to everyday speech is commented upon in an interesting article from the popular new literary publication, "John o' London's Weekly," by E. E. C., who says in part:

"Leaving aside all theological and ecclesiastical terms and phrases, it has enriched our vocabulary and contributed more to our language than any other book. And whilst the words and phrases of the [illegible] and philosopher are upon the lips of the few, those of the Bible have become the current coin of the everyday language of life.

"The story of [illegible] has given us 'Forbidden Fruit,' and that of the Flood has contributed the 'Olive branch' as the symbol of peace. The confusion of tongues [illegible] quenthed 'Babel,' which [illegible] has a far wider meaning to-day than a single tribe.

"The mark of Cain,' 'Naboth's vineyard,' 'the mantle of Elijah,' and 'the handwriting on the wall' have become common [illegible] of speech.

"To sell one's [illegible] be found its origin in Esau's [illegible] with Jacob; and we [illegible] have had the idea of J[illegible] but for the laws of Moses.

"If Matthew Arnold borrowed 'Philistinism' from the Germans, they or somebody else borrowed it from the Bible, and if he borrowed 'sweetness and light' from Swift, that eminent [illegible] got the idea from the [illegible] source, for the terms are more than once associated there. 'The oil for light and sweet incense' (Numbers [illegible] 16); or the phrase may have been suggested by the familiar words of the Psalm, 'Truly the light is sweet.'

"Did Burke, who knew his Bible well, get 'light and leading' from 'Send out Thy light and Thy truth; let them lead me'?

"The characters of the Bible have supplied us with a host of words and phrases. 'As old as Methuselah,' 'the patience of Job,' 'the love of David and Jonathan,' as a synonym for friendship, 'the strength of Samson,' and 'the wiles of Delilah' have all passed into the currency of our language and helped to make it forceful and picturesque. Judas will ever serve as an epithet to fling at a traitor, and Ananias at a liar. Simon, who would have bought the Divine gift for money, has given us simony. Jeremiad and Magdalen, Pharisaical and Laodicean, with many others are from Bible names.

"To the Psalms we owe some beautiful and expressive phrases: 'three score years and ten,' 'a tale that is told,' 'the quiverful,' 'the olive plants,' and 'the snare of the fowler,' are a few. And they have given any amount of mottoes to guilds and towns and institutions and families.

"The words of Christ, especially his parables, have largely enriched our language: to 'strain at a gnat and swallow a camel,' to 'hide light under a bushel,' to 'take up the cross.' 'Talented' sends us back to one of the parables, 'a good Samaritan,' and 'a prodigal' to others. 'Loaves and fishes,' 'the eleventh hour,' and 'the widow's mite,' are common expressions with us. Probably 'blowing your own trumpet' found its origin in the action of the Pharisees."

While the National League has no internal wrangle to settle, worry or fuss about at its meeting on December 9 in New York, it has a lot of business to dispose of in the way of arranging plans for the 1920 season which its members think will be the greatest year baseball has had in a decade or more. At the coming annual session of the National League the magnates will make plans for a most successful year by increasing the schedule, adding to the player limit and extending the training period as well as taking other steps to promote the sport.

Last season the major leagues, owing to doubtful conditions all over the country, reduced the schedule from 154 to 140 games. After the race began the magnates regretted the change, realizing they had made [illegible] but it was too late to [illegible] schedule and had an unusually prosperous year. The game came back with such force and enthusiasm that it left no doubt in the minds of the club owners that they ought to go back to the 154 list, which the National League has decided to do, and there is no question but that the American will do the same.

Earlier Opening Not Likely.

Going back to the 154-game schedule does not mean that the season will open any earlier than it did this last season. The prospects are that it will begin about the same time, April 14, or two or three days before. This question, however, is open for debate and may cause a little friction in the National League as some of the members favor an earlier opening. Those who oppose it declare the later beginning proved more profitable as there were fewer postponements at the start of the [illegible] than ever before. It is not necessary to start any sooner than last season as Sunday baseball is now permitted in New York, and the double-headers that were caused by not playing on the Sabbath there will be eliminated, so that there will be few extra double attractions during the season.

The increase of the player limit will come up for discussion. How the magnates stand on this is not known. President Veeck of the Cubs favors a return to the twenty-five limit and is of the opinion that the majority of magnates also do so because they would like to carry more young players during the race for development. The league has had a restriction of twenty-one men for two years. It has proved satisfactory as the clubs have had enough men, but there is the protest that it does not give a manager an opportunity to unearth, retain and prepare youngsters for the future. Managers like to keep prospects on their teams instead of sending them out to the minors for some other pilot to develop or ruin.

Women Coming to Canada Dislike Medical Inspection.

London, Dec. 4.—The Daily Express asserts that there is a strong feeling being manifested among women immigrants going into Canada against the revised regulations for stricter medical inspection and compulsory guardianship by Canadian Government conductresses.

OLD ESTATES GO.

Many of the big estates of English landholders, which have given to the countryside of Great Britain that charm of old-world atmosphere which has made it so attractive to American tourists are doomed, according to London newspapers, if the present tendency in the real estate market in the British Isles continues.

Heavy taxation, according to these newspapers, has compelled many old families to dispose of their vast acres, and while the estates are being eagerly bought, in few cases is an effort made by the new owners to retain them in their entirety. As a result, England bids fair to become in the not distant future a nation of small landlords.

Many families of the large estate owning class, while retaining part of their property, have found it necessary [illegible] portions to sell. Others have sold outright to members of the class of great rich created by the war, who themselves have disposed of parts of the acquired estates to smaller owners.

The old-style English squire, it is predicted, soon will be a rarity, or will entirely have disappeared. The type of country gentleman who took a personal interest in his tenants will be no more. Village life will be completely changed because of the new class of tenants.

Incidentally, it is reported, that the cherished institution of fox hunting is being spoiled. Since many small farmers own their lands outright, and since these lands represent to them their living, they are refusing to let the hounds and riders pass over their fields. And as the land [illegible] coming more and more cut up into small parcels, the hunters are finding themselves more and more restricted.

To help in solving this important [illegible] problem an oxygen apparatus was developed, smaller than the kind used for mine-rescue work, but constructed on much the same principle. Equipped with this contrivance, and carrying a supply of liquid oxygen along with him, the aviator could skim along in safety through the upper [illegible] of [illegible].

Happy Married Celebrities.

"The reason why my long married life has been so happy," said the late Lady Tennyson, "is that my husband has always been my lover. We are far more lovers to-day than when we married so very many years ago." And this has been the happy experience of other wedded couples whose courtship days have lasted long as life itself.

Charles Kingsley called himself "an old married man" when he wrote to his wife from a solitary convalescent holiday at the seaside. "This place is perfect, but it seems a dream, and imperfect without you. I never before felt the loneliness of being without the beloved being whose every look and word and motion are the keynotes of my life. People talk of love ending at the altar—Fools!"

Tom Hood, to his last day, was the passionate lover of the wife who inspired that sweetest of his songs, "I love thee, I love thee, 'tis all that I can say," and to whom in his last year he wrote, "Bless you, bless you, again and again, my dear one, my only one, my one as good as a thousand to your old unitarian in love, T. H."

One of the last pictures we have of Wordsworth is of "the old man walking in the garden with his wife. They were both old, and he was almost blind; but they seemed like sweethearts courting, they were so tender and attentive to each other." And Nathaniel Hawthorne had lived many years in his "wedded paradise" when he wrote to his "Flower [illegible] person that was ever necessary to me. I am only myself when thou art within my reach, thou unspeakably-beloved woman."

Robert Browning never came to London without visiting the church in which he and his wife, who was "soul of his soul," were made one, without kissing the paving-stones in front of its door. And Steele's [illegible] for his wife found expression in such burning words as these: "I love you better than the light of my eyes or the life blood in my heart. There are no words to express the tenderness I have for you."

When Moon Was Blue.

The expression "once in a blue moon," meaning that occurrences are so widely separated by time as to almost never recur, is not a figure of speech. It has a basis of astronomical fact, says Tit-Bits. The phenomenon has been twice observed in both Italy and Austria and once in England. There is no available record of its having been noticed in America.

A blue sun has been recorded only once. That was in August, 1883, in Java. A day or two before there was a very violent eruption of a large volcano about a hundred miles from Batavia. The eruption ended with an explosion, in which a range of mountains was destroyed, a cavity being left in its place, more than a thousand feet deep at one point. Billions of tons of rock, mud, and dust were thrown high into the air, and the sun was obscured over a large area. At Batavia the darkness became so deep that street lamps had to be lighted in the middle of the forenoon. That condition prevailed until toward sunset. Then the volcanic cloud began to clear away, leaving the sun visible. Instead, however, of it being red, as it usually is when viewed through a smoke cloud, it appeared as a magnificent deep blue disc, remaining that color until it sank below the horizon. The phenomenon was seen by everyone within thirty or forty degrees of the equator.

Mrs. Crooks.

Mrs. Will Crooks, wife of the labor leader in the British House of Commons, is active in a propaganda for reducing the drudgery of housework. Apropos of this, she said recently: "In all the talk we hear about [illegible] hours of labor one might [illegible] the world consist[illegible] only, or at least that women's hours are already so short that [illegible] for them was of no [illegible] whatever. The facts are exactly the opposite. Not only does the number of women exceed that of men, but [illegible] hours are as indefinite as the number and character of her household duties. Tens of thousands of mothers have next to no leisure at all, and their work is exacting, worrying, trying, and exhausting."

The farmer who sprays his chicken roosts thoroughly three times during the season, beginning in April, will have little cause to worry about mites, say experienced poultrymen.

The troublesome poultry house mite is almost sure to appear when warm weather comes. The most common means of control is kerosene sprayed upon the perches each week; some farmers give the roosts an occasional coat of whitewash. These methods, however, are not always effective, unless thoroughly done, for the mite is a very hardy creature.

Stronger liquids such as crude carbolic acid or some of the coal tar preparations which will not mix with water are much better. They last longer and do the work better. It is well to dilute the acid or coal tar products with kerosene, so that a spray pump can be used to apply them.

A common formula is one part of acid to three parts of kerosene.

URGENT NOTICE

TO ALL PUBLIC UTILITIES, HOSPITALS, ESSENTIALS, AND NON-ESSENTIAL INDUSTRIES IN THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

The shortage of Bituminous Coal has become so serious that all public utilities and industrials must immediately adopt rules tending to restrict conservation of coal.

No Bituminous Coal will be permitted to go forward or be delivered to industrials, until satisfactory evidence is at hand that our public utilities and hospitals have been supplied for the winter.

Manufacturers are urged to avail themselves of the supplies of steam sizes of Anthracite now in the hands of local dealers.

Public utilities and essential industries which anticipate shortage within the next sixty days are required to immediately file with me a statement, under oath, setting forth nature of industry, amount of coal on hand and daily consumption.

USERS OF FREE GAS

Users of free gas in the gas fields should conserve the supply by discontinuing the use of flares and regulating the consumption in their homes by exercising the same caution as practised by consumers paying for supply, in confining the consumption strictly to domestic use.

HOTEL PRICES NOT TO GO DOWN

Toronto Landlords Say They are Below United States Rates

Toronto, Dec. 5.—Will Toronto hotel managers follow the lead of one of Chicago's largest and most exclusive hotels and reduce the present rates for rooms and meals? The question was put to a number of the local managers following the receipt of a despatch that Manager Stevens, of the Hotel LaSalle, Chicago, had ordered sweeping reductions on prevailing prices, the action being taken in the hope of starting a general movement "back towards reasonable prices."

What would you say if I told you we might raise our rates instead?" was Manager George O'Neil's query at the King Edward. "It must be remembered that Toronto presents an entirely different situation from Chicago. The hotels in Toronto are operating in every case between 20 and 40 per cent. below the scale of rates charged by American hotels.

"The difference in the food charges, for instance, is considerable; the King Edward charges 30 cents for grape fruit; the American hotels' price is 50 cents. We charge 75 cents for ham and eggs. Across the border it is 90 cents."

What Rooms Cost

The Queen's, the Walker House and the Carls-Rite operate almost entirely on the American plan, including a breakfast, luncheon, and dinner in the $4 per day charge, with 50 cents extra for room with bath. The King Edward and the Prince George operate exclusively on the European plan. They charge $2 to $2.50 for a single roof, or, with bath $3 up.

"The only change we made in our rates during the war was to raise our lowest price from $1.50 to $2 per day for a single room without private bath," stated Manager Clark, of the Prince George. "We have not made any noticeable change in prices of food. As conditions settle we hope to open our American dining room again, which we could not afford to operate during the war."

Manager George Wright, of the Walker House, said that Toronto was getting better hotel service at moderate prices than any American city he knew of.

Other Sources of Revenue

"A hotel the size of the LaSalle has book stalls, cigar stands, barber shops, ice cream parlors, and a score of other sources of revenue from which to draw from,.. said another hotel man "The rental of the rights of these places is very high, and if they do take off 50 cents on the room rates they can make it up quite easily somewhere else. The advertising that they get out of such an announcement is worth something too."

A Lansing, Mich., landlord with 11 houses, rents them only to families with children, and says "they pay their rent more promptly, and they aren't leaving in the middle of winter and letting the pipes freeze up."

GATHERING OF CROP DATA

An outline of the organization developed in the department of agriculture through more than half a century of experience in crop estimating, indicating the care and thoroughness with which government crop reports are prepared, is given in the annual report of the secretary of agriculture.

For collecting original data the bureau of crop estimates has two main sources of information—voluntary reporters and salaried field agents. The voluntary force comprises 33,743 township reporters, one for each agricultural township; 2,752 county reporters, who report monthly or oftener on county-wide conditions, basing their estimates on personal observation, inquiry and written reports of aids, of whom there are about 5,500; 19 special lists of co-operators, aggregating 137,000 names, who report on particular products, such as live stock, cotton, wool, rice, tobacco, potatoes, apples peanuts, beans and the like; and 20,160 field aids, including the best informed men in each state, who report directly to the salaried field agents of the bureau. The total voluntary staff therefore numbers approximately 200,000, an average of about 60 for each county and 4 for each township. The reporters, as a rule, are farmers. They serve without compensation, and are selected and retained on the lists because of their knowledge of local conditions, their public spirit, and their interest in the work. All except county and field aids report directly to the bureau, and each class of reports is tabulated and averaged separately for each group and state.

Would We Hesitate.

To many, perhaps, to most of us, saving in these times of high prices is difficult, and to get the money for a bond may mean some deprivation. So it is when some dear member of the family is sick unto death and the expense of medical advice and surgical skill and care is mounting to figures that it seems as if we could never meet. Do we hesitate? No; we pledge the last dollar and are glad to do it. How should we feel five years from now if we were to have locked in our hearts the knowledge that our mother country perished because we withheld the things that would have sustained her strength when she was fighting the powers of death and darkness?—Youth's Companion.

Chance for Daddy.

Richard watched his mother knitting socks for some time, then he looked up at his father, who was reading nearby and asked: "Daddy, don't you wish you were a soldier?" His father replied: "Yes. Why?" and Teddy said: "Cause den you could get all dose socks mother knits for other mans."

We pity the colleague who at present has to edit the Almanach de Gotha, the directory of all courts. The next edition, which, by the way, had almost been ready for the printer when the great tumbling of thrones happened and therefore will have to be radically revised and will look very different. We cannot imagine that the good people who used to place the bible of aristocracy and the court directory on the most conspicuous shelf of their bookcase will ever again have the desire to inquire "who is who?"

No fewer than 278 names belonging to former reigning princes will be missed. And those are of the ruling families of Germany exclusively; not to mention the Turks, the Greeks, the Bulgarians, etc. The new almanach which no longer will have to speak in cringing humility of the Hohenzollern, the Wittelsbachs of Bavaria, the Zaehringers of Baden, the Coburgs and the Schaumberg-Lippes is a list of war gains. Of course, it does not compensate entirely for all the sacrifices which hundreds of thousands of better men had to suffer before these 278 highnesses of divine right were permitted to become ordinary mortals, but it is, nevertheless, one fruit of our victory. And the house-cleaning still goes on.—German Democracy Bulletin.

New Members.

Little Albert's mother had always insisted that he wear his hair in long curls. The other boys had their hair cut but not Albert though he longed and longed for that ceremony. Finally an uncle came to visit at the house and he soon decided to make Albert into a real boy. So to a barber's shop he hied his nephew and his locks like Sampson's were shorn. Then uncle and Albert went home.

After mother's anger had spent itself Albert went to the mirror to survey himself. He stood and looked at his image for a few minutes. And then he rushed back to the family. "Oh I've got ears, too," he rejoiced. "I have got ears!"

Putting War Gas to Good Use.

Experts from the federal department of agriculture and from the war department will begin a series of experiments in the South in the effort to utilize a powerful gas that was used by the American army in the war in Europe. The gas will be used in attempts to destroy the cotton boll weevil, the pink boll worm, caterpillars, potato bugs and other insect pests that ravage crops. It is said to be a byproduct of southern pine.

Why American Publishers Are Liked.

Turn back to the magazines of 20 or 30 years ago and compare them with what is thought good enough for us. I was looking through such a magazine recently and found a poem by Swinburne, a prose romance by William Morris, and much else of a quality you would no more think of looking for in a current magazine than for palm trees in Whitechapel. It is different in America; in spite of gross business instincts, or because of them, they do turn out magazines which are good to look at, and very often good to read; for American editors think nothing of paying a sum for a short story which, to mention to a London editor, would make him feel as if something snapped in his head. He wouldn't understand. The consequence is the best English writers send their wares first to the American market, where they are better displayed and get a better price.—London Nation.

A Friendly Description Of President Carranza, The Man Who Rules Mexico

A DEAL has been said and written about President Carranza of Mexico during the last several years, but beyond the fact that he wears whiskers and is vigorously criticized for what he does or doesn't do, few know much about him. Samuel Guy Inman, in his book, "Intervention in Mexico," tells us much about the personal side of President Carranza. He describes Carranza as a "big, stalwart, well-poised man of logic," and he informs us further that he has a sincere love for his people and is interested in anything that will better their condition. A leading characteristic of the Mexican executive, we are told, is a disposition to be "sot" in his ways. "Carranza has never varied his program since the very first day that he tacked his little thesis up on the door of the customs house in Piedras Negras, when he began the revolution against Huerta," says Mr. Inman. It is this quality, we are led to believe, which has kept Carranza in the National Palace, in spite of the fact that it has often been thought he was "done for," until "people now are saying that there appears to be no one of sufficient strength to threaten his power." Also, it is said the Mexican President likes to do things himself. So he chooses as his lieutenants not such men as have pet ideas of their own they want to work out, but men who will do as he tells them. We likewise learn that Carranza is ultra-nationalistic and has a violent prejudice against one nation's meddling in the affairs of another. The essential points of his doctrine are set out as follows. "No nation should intervene in any form or for any reason in the affairs of another. Nationals and aliens should be equal before the sovereignty of the country in which they reside. Diplomacy should not serve to protect private interests."

PRESIDENT CARRANZA.

"Another characteristic of the President," the writer says, "is his dignity and reserve. He prefers to sit behind closed doors and operate by the power of his logic and the force of his ideas rather than to go out before a crowd and hear their cries of Viva el Presidente! I remember the old days when he was running for the governorship of Coahuila. His campaign was the first one ever conducted in that state by an open appeal to the public in general. He wished to inaugurate open campaigning because he wanted the people to realize that Mexico was coming into a new democratic life, when the people themselves must judge between the candidates. However, Carranza himself scarcely ever made a speech. He had three fiery young orators — two of them now governors of states—who accompanied him on his campaign. When he got to a city these orators answered the addresses of welcome, made speeches before all kinds of gatherings, and used all the tricks of campaigns learned from the United States, while Senor Carranza would sit quietly by and look pleased.

"Carranza is a man of sturdy intellect, though he is not strictly of the 'intellectual class,' as it is understood in Latin-America. He is rather of the country gentleman type. He reads the classics and delights in them.

"What is President Carranza religiously? It is difficult to say. I suppose that he would say to the census-taker that he is a Roman Catholic. Some have thought that he is a Protestant, because of his friendship toward the Protestant schools and his fondness for appointing Protestants to office. But he probably is neither a Protestant nor a Roman Catholic, as these bodies would define a faithful member. He certainly is utterly out of sympathy with the Roman Catholic hierarchial system and its endeavor to control politics. He believes in God, in Christ, in the Bible, and in the power of the Christian Church as a restraining and ennobling influence in society. He was not in favor of the radical restrictions on religion in the Constitution of 1917, and has recently proposed to Congress the amendment of these articles. Like most public men, he has been represented as very immoral in his personal life; but, having known him intimately for many years, I am a firm believer in Venustiano Carranza as a man of clean life, of high moral purpose, intensely devoted, though sometimes mistaken in policy to the interests of his country."

Great Genealogical Record.

In mysterious Mecca's archives is the most wonderful genealogical record in the world—a roll of parchment about 50 feet long and four feet wide—on which each ruling emir of Mecca has written with his own hand his name. Every one is descendant of the Prophet Mohammed; the thirty-sixth in direct line of descent, and therefore the chief of the tribe of Koreish and Keeper of the Holy Places, is Hussein, new king of the Arabs, whose rise insured the downfall of the Turks. The thirty-seventh on the list of those [illegible] is Feisal, the thirty-two-year-old son of Hussein who is now ruler of the Syrian government, with his seat in Saladin's city of Damascus. He is at present in Paris.

During the War.

The bride and bridegroom had uttered their solemn vows, the celebrant had blessed the couple and the service was over, when the priest—probably from force of habit, as he had done the same every Sunday since the war had begun—solemnly announced, "Let us now pray for peace."

Breaks the Glass.

My uncle told me in a letter that there was a man in his camp that was so ugly he had to sip up on a dipper to get a drink.—Chicago Tribune.

Tired of Life Early.

Tired of life at ten was the excuse made by a boy at the Kingston (London) children's court when charged with attempting to commit suicide. Another boy saw him with his head on the railway track and they had a tussle before he could be got away.

For Hardwood Floor.

If an unfilled or undressed hardwood floor becomes gray apply a solution of two ounces of oxalic acid dissolved in just enough water to wet it well all over. Let stand 15 or 20 minutes; then rinse in cold water and proceed to wash without suds as usual.

Boswell's House on the Market

ACCORDING to the New York Times, the Mansion House of Auchinleck, of which James Boswell was once the Laird, in Ayrshire, Scotland, which he vainly sought to represent in Parliament, is on the market. Here is a chance for some fortunate Boswellian to settle himself congenially, if he be not afraid of income tax and death duties, in Bozzy's old home, which he so loved to be away from. It is Burns' county, too, and doubtless still rich in "whisky, soul of quips and cranks," whose unpermitted flow surely the devotees of Jemmy Boswell, one of the most amiable of tosspots, may be forgiven for deploring. The new American Laird, rich in cars, can travel in them as Jemmy in his youth described himself as travelling "in post chaises, miles without number"; he can eat "of every good dish, especially apple pie"; he can drink "old hock," if any is left in the world. He should have "a very fine temper"; be "somewhat of a humorist."

"He was pleased to listen," writes Boswell of his Great Bear in 1763, "to a particular account I gave him of my family and its hereditary estate, as to the extent and population of which he asked questions and made calculations, recommending at the same time a liberal kindness to the tenantry, as people over whom the proprietor was placed by Providence. He took delight in hearing my description of the romantic seat of my ancestry, 'I must be there, Sir,' said he, 'and we will live in the old castle; and if there is not room remaining there, we will build one'." Johnson went there, as we all know, and the place is described in the "Tour of the Hebrides." In his old age Mrs. Boswell asked him to come again. Polite letters passed between them. Yet she cannot have forgotten that "his irregular hours and uncouth habits, such as turning the candles with their heads downward, when they did not burn bright enough, and letting the wax drop upon the carpet, could not but be disagreeable to a lady," and "I have seen many a bear led by a man, but I never before saw a man led by a bear."

Bozzy loved to talk about the [illegible] and rocks, the romantic groves of his ancestors. In the old days "the Laird of Auchinleck had an elegant house, in front of which he could ride ten miles upon his own territory, upon which he had upward of six hundred people." His own father, Lord Auchinleck, was a strong and disagreeable character, worthy of Stevenson. One loves to think of the cultivated old patrician, sneering, however wrongly at his son and his son's friends. "There's nae hope for Jamie, mon. Jamie is gaen clean gyte (mad). Whose tail do you think he has pinned himself to now, mon? A dominie, mon, an auld dominie; he keeped a schule and cau'd it an academy." One repeats unblushingly all these ancient and beloved Boswelliana and Johnsoniana. They have become ritual. They cannot be repeated too often, especially the old Laird's fine saying to Johnson, who had asked him to tell of what use Cromwell was: "God, Doctor, he gart (made) kings ken they had a lith (joint) in their neck."

Some of us dote on Auchinleck because near it was the place of Miss Blair, that heiress whom Bozzy's father wanted him to marry and to whom the volatile young man made love in person and by deputy. Bozzy sighed and adored and quarrelled with his "dear infidel." He dressed in green and gold. He even played his part with "Spanish stateliness." He squeezed and kissed "her fine hand while she looked at me with those beautiful black eyes." Does she have any particular liking for him? No. "I like many people as well as you. I like Jeany Maxwell better than you," says the frank lady. Sir Alexander Gilmour is the favorite. Bozzy laughs off his disappointment, and writes a ballad.

She told me with a scornful look,
  I was as ugly as a tawney;
For she a better fish could hook,
  The rich and gallant knight, Sir
    Sawney.

Dear old Bozzy, Bozzy ever fresh and young! Most un-Scotch of Scottishmen, one of the most mixed of men; unconventional conventionalist; a Tory prop of state and church, who loved to picnic on the coast of Bohemia; amorist, scholar, buffoon; sentimentalist and cynic, generous and sordid; affected and candid, vain and an analyzer of his own vanity; collector of celebrities, sycophant of genius! He wanted a high place at the bar and in politics, and he won immortality by his "gust for London" and his frequentation of Johnson. Most sociable of men, a good fellow, though not without traits of Rousseau. The Mansion House of Auchinleck ought to be a national monument, but money is scarce over on the other side.

Girl Farmers.

South Bethlehem, Pa., probably had one of the most active organizations of the woman's land army in the entire United States during the summer just ended. Farmers in that locality in many instances reaped the largest crops in history, and they praise the conscientious and efficient work of the girls and young women who assisted them as among the best help they ever had.

Pitching hay is really a man's job, but the girls on the farms near Bethlehem were ready to try any kind of farm work, and made a fine record in harvesting the hay crop. The work for which they showed themselves best adapted, however, was horticultural. They were invaluable in the truck gardens, weeding onion patches, picking berries, bunching asparagus and doing the various other odd jobs that must be done to keep gardens productive and neat.

Saturday night meant a time of rest for the girls, and they celebrated with "sings" ordinarily. They also gave occasional vaudeville and minstrel shows and dinner parties. Many of them are college girls and have gone back to school, but others are engaging in other forms of work during the fall and winter season.

Belgians Decorate Graves.

For the first time since the war the Belgians were allowed to commemorate the death of their fallen heroes on November 1st. All Saints' Day was celebrated with great pomp in Brussels. Burgomaster Max deposited flowers on the graves of Belgians, Canadians, British, French and Russians. Wreaths were also deposited on the grave of Van Campenhout, the composer of La Brabaconne, the Belgian national anthem.

"First Families" Win.

Seven out of ten first prizes in the bird puzzle contest, conducted last spring by the Albuquerque Game Protective association, were carried away by Pueblo and Navajo Indian children. The contest was open to all schoolchildren in New Mexico, of which the native Indians form but a small fraction, but the superior first-hand knowledge of the young redmen made them easy winners over all other contestants. The contest consisted of 20 questions on native New Mexico birds, arranged to bring out knowledge of their habits and an understanding of their value to agriculture.

Medical Science.

I think it is not an exaggeration to say that medicine, surgery, obstetrics and the many medical specialties have made more progress in the 72 years from 1846 to 1918 than in as many centuries before. I am also quite willing to believe that the next 70 years will be as fruitful as the last 70 have seen.—Maj. W. W. Keen, in the Yale Review.

FIVE BILLION BUDGET FOR UNITED STATES

ESTIMATES OF TREASURER GLASS RAISES STORM OF PROTEST IN CONGRESS

Washington, D.C., Dec. 5.—There was an outburst of protest from Republican leaders in the House against the recommendations for appropriations totalling over $5,000,000,000, submitted by Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual estimates. Representative Good, Republican, of Iowa, served notice that he would resist to the last any efforts to appropriate any such sum, and said that if Congress appropriated that amount it would mean an aditional bond issue of at least $1,000,000,000.

Brockville, Dec. 5.—[illegible] have been mailed to the mayors [illegible] reeves of every municipality [illegible] Eastern Ontario, as well as the head of public service organizations, to attend the Hydro-Electric meeting to be held here on December 8th when formation of an Eastern Ontario Hydro-Electric Association to secure cheaper electric power for this section of the Province will be brought about. The invitation is extended to the heads of every municipality from Frontenac and Renfrew Counties to the Quebec border, the two former counties being included as well as the cities of Ottawa and Kingston.

The decision to form a separate Hydro-Electric Association for Eastern Ontario comes as a result of the refusal [illegible] Hydro-Electric Association [illegible] Eastern Ontario [illegible] on the Hydro-Electric Commission. It is also due to the rejection of the proposal that uniform Hydro rates should be in existence throughout the Province. It is a concerted effort on the part of Eastern Ontario municipal men and cheaper power advocates to secure recognition for this part of the Province, because of the announcement of Sir Adam Beck that the commission can, from present resources, no longer satisfy the demands upon it, and that the only other source from which an adequate supply of electric power can be obtained to relieve the situation and furnish the industries [illegible] seeking [illegible] themselves [illegible] of the [illegible], situated in the vicinity of Morrisburg. It is felt that with the municipalities of the Eastern part [illegible] Province presenting a unit front on this question, their representations will meet with a warmer response than through the [illegible] Hydro-Electric Association, or through the individual requests of different towns, cities or townships.

BUTTER WILL BE SCARCER

Canadian Creamery Association of Ontario Holds Convention.

Toronto, Dec. 5.—A scarcity of butter this winter is predicted by the Canadian Creamery Association of Ontario which opened its fourth annual convention at the Carls-Rite yesterday.

"The price of butter has never been so high before in the history of the country," said Mack Robertson, Belleville, the past-president. "We predict a greater scarcity of cream for butter. This is on account of the high price and scarcity of feed. Then there is so much butter being exported."

Premier Drury has promised to address the convention. Others to speak are Dr. Creelman, Ontario Ag[illegible] Frank Herns, [illegible] Weston; E. H. Sto[illegible] president of the National Dairy Council.

RED ROSE TEA is good tea

ABOUT 170 years ago tea sold in England for $14.60 a pound. It was a luxury which only the wealthy could afford.

Thanks largely to the great increase in the area of tea plants under cultivation in India during the past fifty years, there is enough tea grown to-day to supply tea to the world at a price even the poorest can afford.

A cup of "good" tea—Red Rose Tea—costs only a fraction of a cent. There is hardly anything sold in the grocery store that gives more value or more pleasure for the money.

Consisting chiefly of ASSAM teas—the richest and strongest of Indian teas—Red Rose is exceedingly fragrant, flavory and economical. It is a tea of real quality and real value.

At Ten a Boy on a Farm, at Thirty Possessor of a Fortune and at 69 the Owner of an Estate Worth Over One Hundred Million.

The career of Henry Clay Frick, the steel magnate, who died in New York the other day, has formed one of the most fascinating chapters in the romance of mammoth industry in the United States. At ten he was a boy on a farm in a family of only ordinary means. At thirty he had earned a fortune beyond the dreams of most men. At sixty he was a man of so many millions that his exact fortune, like those of Carnegie and Rockefeller, was largely a matter of guesswork, even to himself. The lowest estimate that has been placed upon it is $100,000,000. Most men of finance more or less familiar with his circumstances place the sum at $200,000,000.

Mr. Frick was an indefatigable worker. From eight in the morning until six at night, and not infrequently longer when necessity demanded it, he used to toil in the interests of his steel and coke businesses. For six years, at the time he first took hold of the Carnegie Steel Company, he did not take a day's vacation.

"No Secret About Success."

When asked for the secret of his success he once replied:

"There is no secret about success. Success simply calls for hard work, devotion to your business at all times, day and night. I was very poor and my education was limited, but I worked very hard and always sought opportunities.

"To win in the battle of life a man needs, in addition to whatever ability he possesses, courage, tenacity and deliberation. He must learn never to lose his head. But above all hard work is the thing."

Mr. Frick was born December 19, 1849, at West Overton, Pa. This village was named after the maternal grandfather of Mr. Frick, Abram Overholt, whose original family name was Oberholtzer, and who settled in Western Pennsylvania when that region was regarded as the frontier of civilization. As the settlements along the Allegheny and Monongahela grew and Pittsburg emerged from its swaddling clothes, Mr. Overholt became the leading miller and distiller of Western Pennsylvania. His daughter, Elizabeth, married John W. Frick, a young man of Swiss ancestry, who at that time was working as an engineer in the Overholt distillery. It was from this union that the future capitalist was born.

Eager to Get Into Business.

The father attempted farming, but did not make a remarkable success of it, and as result young Henry Clay Frick was practically adopted into the Overholt family when he was about twelve years old. He received a good basic schooling, but there was nothing in his boyhood to indicate the remarkable ability which characterized his later life, except his eagerness to get into business. For a time he was bookkeeper in his grandfather's distillery, and from this position he went to Morgan & Co., coke dealers, and at about twenty-one years of age he appeared in Pittsburg as their agent.

The coke industry was in its infancy. The ironmasters of Pittsburgh were just beginning to appreciate the value of coke for their furnaces. Young Frick had an opportunity to acquire a limited interest in a plant near Broadford, and out of the profits of this he acquired other holdings. He later joined a company to build a railroad to penetrate the Connellsville coke region, and in 1871, the year this road was opened, Mr. Frick organized the corporation of Frick & Co., which bought coal land and coke ovens in the Connellsville region. That was the basis of the Frick fortune. The undivided attention of the rising financier was given to coke until 1882.

In the midst of this period there came the panic of 1873 and the financial crash of many ambitious operators. At a Sheriff's sale Mr. Frick purchased additional tracts of coal land and ovens, and a few years later the Mellons, powerful Pittsburgh bankers, became interested in the expanding enterprise of the young operator.

The Carnegies, then developing their great steel business in Pittsburgh, had taken large holdings in the Frick coke company, and in 1882 Mr. Frick found the Carnegie brothers willing to admit him as a member of their firm in consideration of his giving them further interests in his coke business. It was thus Mr. Frick became also a great manufacturer of steel.

Through the Homestead strike of 1892, Mr. Frick came into national prominence. Differences had arisen between the Carnegie Steel Comany and its employees over a wage scale, culminating in a strike involving thousands of men; the calling out of the National Guard and the proclamation of martial law. It was at this period, July 22, last 1892, that Alexander Berkman, a New York Anarchist, tried to assassinate Mr. Frick. Berkman walked into Frick's office, drew a revolver and fired, the bullet lodging in Mr. Frick's neck. Mr. Frick was shot a second time and then he grappled with Berkman. During the encounter Mr. Frick was stabbed three times, but he downed his assailant and held him until the police arrive. Berkman was sent to the Western Penitentiary in Pittsburg for twenty-one years.

Thirteen days after the attack Mr. Frick walked to his office unattended and resumed the direction of the great strike which continued until November 21 of that year. Mr. Frick was unmoved by the violence, the protests of the public or the distress of the families of the strikers. He won and never begrudged the price of victory.

When Mr. Frick entered the Carnegie Steel Company he decided to make it the most powerful concern in the steel world. Two of his immediate ventures netted the Carnegie concern many millions of dollars without scarcely any investment.

VETERANS ARE STRANDED

London, Dec. 5. — The Canadian Associated Press learns that an informal census has been taken regarding the Canadian soldiers who have taken their discharge here and now find themselves in want. The total number who seem genuinely anxious to be returned to Canada through want of work here, appears to be about four hundred, although there may be more who have not proclaimed themselves stranded.

Three prominent Muskegon, Mich., High school boys were expelled because of drunkenness. One boy got the liquor from his father's supply in the cellar.

Temple Inns Have Been Among the Most Popular Living Places in London

THE case of a tenant of the Middle Temple who was refused entrance at a gate of the Inner Temple is a reminder of the domestic life which goes on in these old London Inns of Court.

Some persons are under the impression that only members of the Middle or Inner Temple can obtain chambers there, but this is not the case. The Temple has always been a favorite resort of many who are not in any way connected with the legal profession, and to-day there are numerous families living in the seclusion of this exceedingly pleasant retreat in the heart of London.

The chambers with windows facing the river have been specially sought after by residential tenants. Dr. Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith, and Charles Lamb were among the great writers who lived in the Temple, though none of them was ever a member of any Inn of Court.

Before the war there was never much difficulty in obtaining residential chambers in the Temple, but the house famine has changed all this and to-day it is practically impossible to get rooms there. The Temple is full up, and members of the two Inns of Court are having great difficulty in finding chambers for business purposes. There is a long waiting list of members, and vacant rooms directly they are "screened" in the respective Hall and Treasury offices, are snapped up.

The Benchers have first call on any vacancies, and then follow other members of the Inn in seniority, with this exception, that a member wanting the rooms for business purposes has priority over one desiring merely to reside there.

The old methods which "outsiders" had to adopt to get within the gates are now in abeyance. A very common way was for a barrister to rent the chambers and sub-let them to the "outside" friend for whom he had really taken them. To-day a tenant cannot sub-let without the consent of the Inn, and there is no possibility at present of a non-member being accepted as a sub-tenant.

[illegible] ed at 9 p.m., and all are closed at 10 p.m., but at certain entrances there are night porters, and it is possible for tenants to go in and come out at any hour. No woman who is not living in the Temple is admitted after 10 o'clock unless she gives the name of the tenant she proposes to visit; and there are many good stories of how many women invariably gave the name of a famous barrister whose objection to the opposite sex was notorious.

Many excellent dinner parties are given in the residential quarters, and some of the tenants are very popular by reason of the skill of their cooks. There is one tenant who gives "jazz" parties on Saturdays, and boasts that his cellar of liquors is better than any other in London.

J. Bull, Second-Hand Man.

What'll you have? Some 10-penny nails, a few tons of sulphur, or maybe a steam shovel or a nice spiral staircase? Whatever it is, John Bull, who has opened a second-hand store just across the way from Newfoundland, can supply our wants. John already is doing a flourishing business. Since November 10, 1918, when his cut-throat competitor, Heinie, went out of business, his sales have totaled something over $635,000,000.

England is disposing of many of that great variety of articles which proved necessary to the maintenance of its armies in France. There are handcarts, sewing machines, prismatic compasses, barometers, wooden wheels, barrels, kegs, home and office furniture, brooms, brushes, belting, crowbars, pickaxes, ropes, scrapers, shovels, tools, wheelbarrows, wire netting and thousands of other things for which the Government at peace has no need.

King Albert of the Belgians was among the customers. He bought more than $5,000 worth of office furniture in which swivel chair heroes fought the battles of the S. O. S. at home. Charitable institutions and hotels have been among the heavy purchasers of furniture, and one-time German liners, now under British registry, are being furnished with desks, tables and chairs from British detention camps.

Attar of roses, the precious perfume that makes so many other fragrant scents alluring, is again being imported in small quantities, says Spare Moments. As yet the eastern supplies from enemy countries are not forthcoming, and the price is high. Perfume manufacturers are paying $15 to $17 an ounce, and to purchase such a quantity in the ordinary way to-day costs $7.50, compared with $5 to $7.50 in pre-war times. One drop will perfume a handkerchief for weeks, though most people would find the pure attar too powerful. "When you see attar of roses for sale," said a member of the firm of Rimmel, the well-known perfumers, "it is mostly on the label and not in the bottle." The supplies at present are imported from the valley of the Bar, in Southern France. Attar is obtained by distillation, and about 300 pounds of rose petals will make an ounce.

To keep him quiet a Sullivan, Ind., man gave his 2-year-old baby his purse with $100 in it to play with while he read the paper. The child threw it in the fire, burning up the money.

Less Unrest in Egypt

ON returning to Egypt after an absence of more than four months, I was greatly impressed with the lack of any superficial evidence of the violent unrest of March and April, writes the correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. The public administrations, and the town and country life appear to be running on normal lines, while there is no indication of the strong anti-British sentiments which characterized the recent disturbances. This is the superficial impression received by the new arrival. There is, however, a feeling that an undercurrent of unrest exists, and this is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the powerful influences of past and present political propaganda. Yet, in examining this, one feels that the so-called Nationalists have shot their bolt and that any extreme tendencies are artificial and forced, rather than natural and spontaneous.

The efforts of the native press—now evidently less hampered by the censor—to maintain public interest in the movement appear to be the work of a few political propagandists rather than the supply of news to meet a genuine demand. The so-called Egyptian delegation, maintained by funds, raised in and outside the country, has had an expensive and evidently fruitless trip to Paris. As far as such undertakings are concerned, it has justified its claim to represent the Egyptians in so far that the members have failed to co-operate and that questions are being asked about its expenses. The delegation failed to obtain a hearing at the Peace Conference; most of the members have returned to Egypt, and a bi-weekly paper, under the title of Egypt, is being published in Paris. This appears to be the practical outcome of their plunge into world politics.

Now, the attitude of the fellah is really a governing influence in Egypt's thinking, as he forms the majority of the population and, though generally unlettered, he has, on the whole, the finer character. He probably does not love the British any more than he did six months ago, which is perhaps not saying very much, but he certainly likes the [illegible] educated class very much less now than before, as he understands to-day that he was entirely misled in the recent disturbances. He has detected much of the untruths of the so-called Nationalist propaganda, but most important still in his sight is the fact that he incurred much actual loss instead of promised gain and has largely been made the scapegoat in the punishments that have been inflicted by the authorities. His disillusionment, though not yet complete, is certainly a step toward progress and the authorities will be wise to see that it is completed.

The propagandists, who are almost all among the educated classes, probably know their failure. Yet they are still hopeful that as a result of the labor unrest that is sweeping every country much material may be found useful for their purpose, namely, to institute again Eastern autocracy in Egypt. While there is no doubt their projects have received a rude shock in the disappointment and soreness of the fellah and the failure of the delegation, it would be foolish indeed to shut one's eyes to their activities or belittle their influence, which is still very great, owing to the illiteracy and comparative ignorance of the fellah and the excitable and scheming propensities of the effendi.

In connection with so-called Nationalist propaganda it is interesting to note the flotation of two commercial undertakings said to be purely Egyptian. One of these is a cotton export company, known as "The Egyptian Produce Trading Company," with a capital of £50,000. This capital was privately subscribed and practically all the shares are in the hands of two rich notables of Alexandria greatly interested in the recent movement. The proposed disposal of the profits is that after providing for interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on the capital subscribed and allowing a bonus of 15 per cent. to the employes, the balance shall be placed in a reserve fund. As the promoters have large interests in cotton-growing lands and as they are offering loans on the fellahin's crops at very favorable terms, it is probable that the company will do a good deal of business. Whatever its nature may be, it would appear that it can scarcely be properly termed a commercial company. It should be noted that the company has appointed a non-Egyptian Jew as its manager on a three-years contract, at the expiry of which it is hoped that an Egyptian may be found capable of carrying on the business.

The labor situation in Egypt today is very unsettled, and quite apart from genuine causes of complaint, such as the cost of living, which is now quite three times that of prewar days, and from any political intrigue there may be behind the scenes, it would appear that certain native lawyers are at the bottom of these strikes and are making a lucrative business thereby. A conciliation commission has, however, been recently appointed by the Government, and it is hoped that by its intervention real grievances may be adjusted and stability secured.

BARONIAL PILE A DEAD WEIGHT

GOVERNMENT CANNOT CHANGE STATUS RESIDENCE OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR

DEED IMPOSES SET CONDITIONS

PLACE MUST ALWAYS BE MAINTAINED FOR RESIDENTIAL PURPOSES ONLY

Toronto, Dec. 5.—For nine years to come Ontario's million-dollar Government House, which has been so much in the public eye of late, will be either the residence eof the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario or the private dwelling of some one who may purchase it from the Government. This, in spite of the earnest desire of the present or any other Government or individual to turn it to some other purpose.

The reason for these narrow restrictions upon the use of the palatial edifice in Chorley Park, concerning which so much invective has been hurled during Provincial election campaigns, is a comparatively short [illegible] by which the Ontario oGvernment (or to be accurate, his Majesty the King) acquired the land upon which it was built. Though short, and in these days of democratic reform decidedly inconvenient, the clause binds Government House and the land under and surrounding it, for a period of twenty years from January 1, 1909.

Must be Private Residence.

This clause, contained in the deed of the Chorley Park property from the John Hallam estate to the Province, provides that during the period mentioned no public institution of any description other than "a dwelling for the Lieutenant-Governor shall be erected upon any part of the lands which now form the Government House site. This in itself prevents the Government from converting it into a hospital, a home for soldiers, an asylum, jail, school, university, or any other public institution. But in order to more certainly prevent such action, the grant to the Government also states that such building shall not at any time, be used for the purpose of any public sport or sporting club, nor as a school, hospital or charitable institution."

If this were all, it might be feasible for the authorities to dispose of it to some private interests at something approaching its real value, the purchasers turning it into an hotel or factory, or to some other commercial use. But, unfortunately or not, this is not all. Evidently in contemplation of some such disposal of the present Lieutenant-Governer's home, the instrument expressly prohibits it in the following terms:

"No building erected or to be erected on any part of said lands shall be used for any other purpose than that of a private dwelling or a dwelling for the Lieutenant-Governor, and such building shall not at any time be used for the purpose of trade, manufacture, business or profession (save and except that of a duly qualified practioner) of any description, nor as a hotel or place of like public resort." According to the deed which is dated May 2, 1911, these restrictions apply to the site, no matter how many times it changes hands, during the 20 years following January 1, 1909. The instrument is signed on behalf of the Province by Hon. Dr Reaume, then Minister of Public Works, and states that the price paid for the property was $110,000.

Millionaire Purchaser Needed.

Unless some millionaire citizen desires a million-dollar residence for which he is in a position to pay cash, or some wealthy physician decides to practise in the luxurious surroundings it would afford. Government House seems destined to remain for some years upon the hands of the Ontario Government, as the Lieutenant-Governor's residence. At present this is what seems likely to occur in spite of the well-known wish of the Drury Government to provide less expensive quarters for this purpose.

Under these circumstances it seems likely that Lieutenant Governor Lionel Clarke will take possession of the place as soon as it is vacated by Sir John Hendrie.

It would no doubt be possible for the Province, by exercising its legal rights to an unprecedented extent, to sweep aside its contract and turn Government House to any purpose that suited its mind. This is not going to be done, as such action would, from the standpoint of constitutional law and history, be a flagrant abuse of the Crown's unlimited legal powers in matters over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and would provide an example that would tend to render worthless the most solemn contracts of the Province.

A MARRIAGE SLUMP.

One of the Effects of the Return of Peace.

A certain recklessness was, generally speaking, the characteristic of those undertaking matrimony in war time; a tendency to look two or three times before leaping has taken its place since the fighting ended. A variety of causes combine to account for such a change.

In the first place, life in the army being free from those expenses which weigh most heavily on the civilian, the soldier had little chance to realize the alarming cost of living. Demobilization has, however, given him personal experience of the real difficulty of making both ends meet. The absence of any prospects of an early drop in prices, combined with the problem of house accommodation, is quite enough to account for the shyness which he feels with regard to marriage.

Though practical difficulties are doubtless largely responsible for reducing the number of hasty marriages, the elimination of certain purely war-time incentives to marry has also much to do with it.

Though life is, at best, an uncertain thing, a man's chances of being alive in six months' time are distinctly brighter now than in recent years. As a natural consequence couples are more willing to wait for better days. Again, the man's argument that if he has to be killed the girl he loves may as well get a pension no longer enters into the weighing of pros and cons.

A man home on leave, after months of misery in the fighting line, had some excuse for acting against his better judgment. Especially was this the case when the expressed wishes of the girl he had not seen for so long allied themselves with his natural inclinations.

If the soldier did not always give sufficient thought to his after-the-war prospects — well, those prospects were so vague that adding a little to their uncertainty did not seem to make so much difference. Accustomed as he was to the taking of chances, he was somewhat apt to include the risks of a reckless marriage in the gamble of life.

Now that the crowded experiences and feverish excitement of war are over, an inevitable reaction has set in. Many a man whose nerves stood the strain, finds himself incapable of undertaking new anxieties and responsibilities now that the tension is relaxed. What he seeks is a respite, during which he may recuperate his nervous system and take a few bearings in his new environment.

Paper Underclothing.

An excellent and durable quality of underclothing has been made of a fine-grained paper by Japanese manufacturers. After the paper has been cut to a pattern the different parts are sewn together and hemmed, and the places where the buttonholes are to be formed are strengthened with calico or linen. The paper is very strong and at the same time very flexible. After a garment has been worn a few hours it will interfere with the perspiration of the body no more than do garments made of cotton fabric. The paper is not sized, nor is it impermeable. After becoming wet the paper is difficult to tear. When an endeavor is made to tear it by hand it presents almost as much resistance as the thin skin used for making gloves.

Dupont Interests Invest in Movies

New York, Dec. 5— Probably the bigest announcement in the history of motion pictures was made today with the statement that DuPont interests had invested heavily in the stock of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and that this company would now show a great expansion.

The action of these interests in motion pictures is eloquent testimony to the fact that leading men of vast capital regard the film industry as the best avenue of investment for their earning.

Especial interest is given the new expansion by Canadians in that the Canadian rights to the product of the Goldwyn Corporation are controlled by the Allen Theatre Enterprises with headquarters in Toronto and owning the greatest chain of theatres in the entire world, when both size and number of the house is considered.

The new interests which will be associated with Goldwyn in making motion pictures are represented by S. F. DuPont, vice-president of the DuPont Powder Co. Eugene DuPont; W. W. Laird, of Laird & Co., Wilmington, Del.; R. R. McCarpenter, vice-president of the DuPont Co., C. C. Curtz, vice president of the Wilmington Trust Co.; E. V. R. Thayer, president of the Chase National Bank of New York; Duncan A. Holmes, vice-president of the Chase Securities Corporation, William Tompkins; George T. Bissel; G. W. Davidson, vice-president of the Central Union Trust Co., McMillan Hoopes, and Abbott M. Willenberk a member of S. Content & Co.

These gentlemen will be actively identified with the Goldwyn Corporation and will act as members of the directorate in addition to the present board of directors.

Addition to these powerful resources will make this company financially the strongest and most powerful organization of the kind in the entire United States. The Goldwyn Company announced but a short time ago that F. J. Godsel, another man of great wealth had become actively connected with the company. This had been immediately preceeded by the announcement that Lee and J. J. Shubert and the A. H. Woods Theatrical Enterprises, controlling more than half of the stage productions made in the United States had become associated with the Goldwyn Company and that they would reserve all of their plays of the past and productions to be made in the future to be produced as motion pictures by the Goldwyn Company.

The Goldwyn Company is a young organization having been founded in 1916 by Samuel Goldwyn who left the chairmanship of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to form this company. It now has under contract the exclusive motion picture services of Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Will Rogers, Jack Pickford and many other noted players. It also has exclusive long term contracts, for the motion picture production of all works by Rex. Beach Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Rupert Hughes, Goveneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott and has in production some of the famous juvenile stories by Booth Tarkington. In addition it has bought the screens rights to many of the most famous English dramas.

The company recently purchased its own studios in California and now has the largest single studios grouping in the entire world. Plans have been completed for equally large studios near New York City so equal care can be taken of those players who do not find it convenient to go to the coast and such pictures as require the Eastern settings can be staged better.

The Goldwyn announcement follows a series of big announcements made in the past few weeks and which cover the prosperity and growth of the industry throughout the world. It is estimated that during the past season contracts have been made for the erection of motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada representing an investment of far in excess of $100,000,000 and the plans for next year are even more comprehensive. The vast portion of this investment has not come from stock sale plans, but from the investments of men who have studied the industry to the core and have become satisfied that it represents one of the best possible means of investment.

GREAT MUSICAL EVENT COMING NEXT WEEK

GALLO ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY GIVES THREE PERFORMANCES AT THE GRAND

The most notable musical event this city has known in many years will occur Wednesday evening, December 10, when the Gallo English Opera Company, which has been setting New York agog at the Shubert Theatre, will be transferred to the Grand Opera House, giving three performances of the works of Gilbert and Sullivan and other notable light opera writers. The opening opera will probably be "The Mikado," with Hana Shimozumi, the sensational Japanese prima donna, as Yum Yum, and Jefferson De Angelis as Ko-Ko. The company carries a superb chorus and a fine symphony orchestra under the direction of Max Bendix. The local management will be able to announce within a few days just what operas will be sung and the dates of same.

SUCCESSFUL NOVEL AT EMPIRE THEATRE

THREE STAR CAST IS FEATURE OF LATEST UNIVERSAL SCREEN

A three-star play, adapted to motion pictures from the successful novel of a renowned writer is the melodramatic combination at the Empire Theatre where the initial exhibition of "A Little Brother of the Rich" confirmed the fact that the playgoing public appreciates a good dramatic story well told.

Joseph Medill-Patterson, owner of the Chicago Tribune, wrote the unusually successful novel from which the story was dramatized.

The story concerns a young girl who leaves the drab routine of a restaurant, and through hard work and genuine worth soon places her name on Broadway in the electric blaze of stardom. The sweetheart of her childhood has become involved in several unfortunate matrimonial ventures, but is willing to try again. After his engagement to the star is practically settled, he suddenly decides that the girl's parents were not Mayflowerish enough for him and he refuses.

It would be an injustice to playgoers to tell the entire story, particularly as it is so well worth seeing.

The excellent direction of Lynn F. Reynolds, the presence of the admirable quality of the work of three stars, together with a real story of humanly interesting situations, make "A Little Brother of the Rich" a distinctive event in the realm of pictures.

Like Figures in Fairy Tales

IN the cruel sunlight we walked across a long court lined with the Black Guard, passed under a gateway, and were met by a shabbily-dressed negress. Thus Edith Wharton relates her visit to the Moroccan Sultan's harem in the October Yale Review. Traversing a hot dazzle of polychrome tiles, we reached another archway guarded by the chief eunuch, a towering black with the enamelled eyes of a basalt bust. The Eunuch delivered us to other negresses, and we entered a labyrinth of inner passages and patios, all murmuring and dripping with water. Passing down long corridors where slaves in dim grayish garments flattened themselves against the walls, [illegible] of great dark rooms, laundries, [illegible] kitchens where savory things were brewing and stewing, and where more negresses, abandoning their pots and pans, came to peep at us from the threshold. In one corner, on a bench against a wall hung with matting, gray parrots in tall cages were being fed by a slave.

A narrow staircase mounted to a landing where a princess out of an Arab fairy-tale awaited us. Stepping softly on her embroidered slippers, she led us to the next landing, where another golden-slippered being smiled out on us, a little girl this one, blushing and dimpling under a jeweled diadem and pearl-woven braids. On a third landing a third damsel appeared, and encircled by the three graces we mounted to the tall mirador in the central tower, from which we were to look down at the coming ceremony. One by one our little guides, kicking off their golden shoes, which a slave laid neatly outside the door, led us on soft bare feet into the upper chamber of the harem.

It was a large square room, enclosed on all sides by a balcony glazed with panes of brightly-colored glass. The room itself was commonplace. On a gaudy modern Rabat carpet stood gilt armchairs of florid design and a table bearing a commercial bronze of the "art goods" variety. Divans with muslin-covered cushions were ranged against the walls and down an adjoining gallery like apartment otherwise furnished only with clocks. The passion for clocks and other mechanical contrivances is common to all un-mechanical races, and every chief's palace in North Africa contains a collection of timepieces which might be called striking if so many had not ceased to go. But those in the Sultan's harem of Rabat were remarkable for the fact that, while designed on current European models, they were proportioned in size to the imperial dignity, so that a Dutch "grandfather" became a wardrobe, and the box clock of the European mantelpiece a cupboard that had to be set on the floor. At the end of this vista of timepieces a European double bed with a bright silk quilt covered with Nottingham lace stood majestically on a carpeted platform.

But for the enchanting glimpse of sea and plain through the lattices of the gallery, the apartment of the Sultan's ladies fell far short of occidental ideas of elegance. But there was hardly time to think of this, for the door of the mirador was always opening to let in another fairy-tale figure, till at last we were surrounded by a dozen houris, laughing, babbling, taking us by the hand, and putting shy questions while they looked at us with caressing eyes. They were all (our interpreter whispered) the Sultan's "favorites," round-faced, apricot-tinted girls in their 'teens, with high cheek-bones, full red lips, surprised brown eyes between curved-up Asiatic lids, and little henna-tinted hands fluttering out like birds from their brocaded sleeves.

A VALUABLE INDUSTRY

BALDWINS, LIMITED, WILL LOCATE IN CANADA.

Name of the Firm is One to Conjure With in the Old Country, Where They Employ an Army of 14,000 Workers, and a Large Branch Will Shortly Commence Operations in Toronto.

THE real facts in the story of the coming of a branch of the great Baldwins, Limited, the largest steel manufacturers of Great Britain, to the former site of the British Forgings Company, on the reclaimed land of Ashbridge's Bay, Toronto, are far more arresting than the sometimes weird rumors that have been circulating for some weeks past in the press of Canada. Some idea of the immense importance of this industry and what benefits may accrue to Toronto and the country from its foundation there was obtained in an interview with the representatives of this great firm, Roger Beck and J. C. Davies, the managing-director, who are making arrangements for the installation of the industry the first buildings of which have already been started on the sandy land of the new manufacturing district.

Baldwins, Limited, is a name to conjure with in the Old Country and wherever there is a demand for steel. It has an authorized capital of £7,000,000 sterling, with £5,000,000 called up. Its 13,000 to 14,000 workmen form an army larger than that which established the British Empire in India and other parts of the world. Its ramifications and property extend to every part of the British Isles where it is entirely self-contained. "We have our own peat, our own coal, which is mined in South Wales, our own iron-ore mines in Oxfordshire and other foreign countries," said Mr. Beck.

"We have large deposits of silica, out of which heat-resisting bricks and material is made, and so on," said Mr. Davies. This magnitude expressed in terms of products that would be astounding Baldwins turn out 1,000,000 tons of steel ingots, and raise 1,250,000 tons of coal every year. They make ship plates, boiler plates, rails, black and galvanized sheets, and tin plates, which are rolled in their mills. Around the Baldwin plant there spring up a host of complementary and necessary industries, such as coal, bricks, fire-clay, [illegible] tin smelters, and a hundred other [illegible].

There, in brief outline, is the great firm of Baldwins. The problem of some men of imagination and patience was how to show that firm that it was needed in Canada, a fact the company clearly recognized, and how, especially, to have it located in Toronto. That feat was accomplished principally, Mr. Davies acknowledges, by Mr. Home-Smith and by Mr. E. L. Cousins of the Harbor Trust. "If it hadn't been for the determined effort of these two gentlemen," said Mr. Davies, "it would be very doubtful whether we should have embarked on this venture in Toronto. I should like to mention the names of these two gentlemen in particular. I should like to say, too, how well we have been received by the people of Toronto, how all the information possible has been placed before us; and how we have been assisted in every way."

"The whole project was opened up by our firm," said Mr. A. M. Russel, of the firm of Hugh Russel & Sons, Montreal. "We are agents in Canada for Baldwins, Ltd., and for a number of years, we have been advising them to locate out here, or it would be only a matter of time before the business they had established in Canada would be a thing of the past. We suggested that they should acquire the site of the British Forgings plant in Toronto, and establish a tin-plate and sheet industry, and manufacture there, thus recovering the business that was lost to the American manufacturers. Mr. Davies came out to Canada in April, and, in due course, the British Forgings plant was acquired." The final decision, Mr. Davies explained, was reached through two factors; the first, by the efforts of Mr. Cousins and Mr. Home-Smith in the purchase of the property; and, the second, through the sympathy of Sir Adam Beck. "Although we have not been able altogether to have Sir Adam meet our desires," said Mr. Beck, a namesake of the Hydro knight, "still in our conference, we have been shown every consideration, and hope for the result.

"The attraction to us as a company to locate in Toronto," said Mr. Davies, "was this: Before the war we did a very considerable business in Canada, and, finding that the whole of this was being captured by the United States, it was natural that we should make an effort to restore it. What we're out for, in a few words, is to meet the needs of the whole of Canada in tin terne plates, lead-coated plates, and galvanized and black sheets.

"You can quite see the enormity of this plant, when you consider that the imports of these articles before the war into Canada were 50,000 tons of tin plates and 125,000 of black and galvanized sheets. To build that plant, you can see, will take a long time, but by next May we hope to be starting production." The foundations of the three shops, each 800 feet long, have already been begun, and, soon, there will be 2,200 men employed for a start.

"The first unit we have commenced upon," continued Mr. Davies, "will require 100,000 tons of steel per annum. Another industry that we find that Canada is lacking in is heavy steel castings. As we are very desirous that these heavy castings, which we shall require for the plant, we are already contemplating putting down, we are making arrangements to operate some of the electric steel furnaces to make these castings; otherwise we should have to go to the United States or to the Old Country for them."

TUXIS BOY MOVEMENT IS LAUNCHED WITH BANQUET IN GEORGE ST. CHURCH

New Term Means "I Stand for Training"—The Banquet Followed by Meeting in Murray Street Church.

A very enjoyable banquet was held in George Street Methodist church last night, under the auspices of the Young Ladies' class in honor of the Tuxis Boys' Movement. The young ladies provided an excellent dinner, after which a sing-song was held. At the close of this the meeting all adjourned to the Murray Street Baptist Church, where the Inter-Provincial Conference of the Tuxis Boys' Movement was held.

The name "Tuxis" is derived from the following: "T" stands for training, "S" for service, "X" for Christ with "U" and "I" on either side. Although in many ways very similar to the Boy Scout Movement, the Tuxis is diferent in this respect, that it is an official program for boys promoted jointly by practically all Protestant denominations in Canada, and the United States. It is devided into two sections, the first for boys of twelve years to the age of fourteen and the second section for those over the age of fourteen. Its operations centre in the Sunday School class and its aims are chiefly to interest other boys in church work, the attendance of Sunday school classes, etc., which is done by forming what is known as the "Tuxis Square." This square is a group of boys who have their leader known as the "Pretor" their secretary known as the "Scriptor" and also a "Mentor" and a "Comntor." A square is comprised of ten members.

Rev. Manson Doyle, of Toronto, who represented the Methodist church gave a very interesting address on the Forward Movement and its aims and aspirations.

Rev. Mr. Fletcher, representing the Ontario Sunday School Association, gave a demonstration by chart showing the percentage of an average man's time which in the past was devoted to the church and church work and how this percentage could be increased.

The next step was the actual organization of those present into Tuxis Square classes. This work was carried out by Mr. Taylor Statten, the well-known Y. M. C. A. worker. Mr. Statten divided his audience into squares of ten. Each square was made to elect its own officers, after which the officers' duties were explained to them.

The last step was the initiation of a member. Mr. G. H. Roper, secretary of the local Y.M.C.A., was chosen to undergo this step. After the initiation the meeting closed by singing the Tuxis song, "The Omaha Trail Song."

The Tuxis movement is undoubtedly a splendid thing for the younger members of the churches. Its close affiliation with the Forward Movement, its aims and objects all tend to the training of Canada's coming men into useful and honorable citizens.

An Army In Peace.

At the end of the fiscal year the cost of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment will run up to $57,000,000, and probably a like amount will be required to continue the work for the next two years. While the war is practically over and demobilization almost complete, we are maintaining another army, who are being trained in the arts of peace and not in the arts of war. These are disabled men and minors who are being vocationally trained. That army numbers to-day 19,290, each one of whom draws pay and allowances ranging from $60 to $150, according to the number of dependents, while taking a course of training averaging seven months. Moreover, we have 6,556 receiving free medical treatment with pay and medical allowances at our hospitals, and 12,000 more receiving free medical treatment without pay and allowances.

A Gigantic Flagstaff.

The new Victory flagstaff, which was taken to England from British Columbia lately, is the second highest in the world. It was erected on the summit of "Victory Mound" in Kew Gardens, London. It is 215 feet high, and it is 72 feet higher than the Nelson Monument in Trafalgar Square, London. It is the gift of the British Columbia Government to the Home Government, and it replaces the old flagstaff received from the British Columbia Government in 1861, which till recently occupied the same site, but had to be removed owing to its having fallen into decay.

CARPENTIER SWUNG RIGHT TO THE JAW AND KNOCKED BECKETT CLEANLY OUT

Winner Had Better of the Short Battle, the Loser Being Slow and Nervous During the Seventy-Four Seconds.

Holborn Stadium Ringside, Dondon Dec. 5.— Georges Carpentier, the French champion, knocked out Joe Beckett, champion of England, tonight, in a brief and decidedly one-sided fight for the heavyweight championship of Europe.

Seventy-four seconds, as announced by the official timer, sufficed to decide whether Carpentier or Beckett should meet Jack Dempsey, the American heavyweight, for the championship of the world in June next. From the moment the referee, B. J. Angle, called time, Carpentier had the battle entirely in his own hands. Beckett never had a chance of hitting the agile Frenchman, who landed blows with enormous strength whenever he felt inclined.

Amid absolute stillness most of the spectators could hear the terrific crack of the swing that put Beckett to sleep. There was a roar of cheering as Carpentier assisted Beckett to his corner, where the Englishman opened his astonished eyes and saw his opponent being carried on the shoulders of some of the enthusiasts arond the ring.

The contestants presented a notable difference in appearance when they stripped and were introduced Beckett swarthy and muscular; Carpentier white-skinned with slight figure. Carpentier looked about him as though accustomed to his surroundings; Beckett seemed somewhat nervous.

The Prince of Wales, peers and peeresses, members of the house of commons, high officials of state, and many women, most of them in evening dress, looked the fighters over critically as they squared up.

As a fight the contest was not spectacular. Carpentier was fast on his feet, dancing in and out and playing [illegible] first lead. With lightning swiftness Carpentier's left leaped out and caught Beckett in the face and a suppressed sign was audible all over the house. A quick breakaway followed a short clinch and the Frenchman landed two more hard lefts.

Beckett, with a sort of bulldog determination, forced Carpentier almost to the ropes. But this was a diversion for a moment only, for the Frenchman stepped back and then forward, and with all his strength and the full weight of his body swung his right to Beckett's jaw, putting him down and out.

The betting was heavy before the contest, odds of 7 to 4 being laid on Beckett and most of those present were losers, although Carpentier had plenty of supporters.

The men entered the ring at 9:51 o'clock. Both were heartily received, Carpentiter, however, getting a slightly better reception than Beckett.

The fight began at 9:54 o'clock After a short hand-shake the men faced each other. Carpentier smiled confidently. He darted in quickly and planted a left flush on Beckett's face. A brief bit of sparring followed.

Carpentier finally darted in again with his left. His footwork and handwork were both much quicker than his opponent's The Frenchman again scored with two swift lefts in succession to Beckett's face. Carpentier got away again out of reach before Beckett had time to counter.

Coming together again, the men went to a short clinch. In the breakaway Carpentier was in like a flash with a left straight to Beckett's head. A terrific right to the jaw knocked Beckett fair downward to the boards. Blood spurted from his mouth from this and previous punches.

Carpentier helped to carry Beckett to the Englishman's corner. Beckett's eyes opened at this was done, and his second said to him, "Joe you're out."

Beckett was unable to understand it all for a moment, but he seemed to comprehend when the crowd began to invade the ring. Carpentier was hoisted to the shoulders of the first of the crowd that reached him. Everybody in the stadium was cheering, including the Prince of Wales, while tens of thousands of persons who had gathered outside in the street were shouting their tribute to the victor.

The only effort made by Beckett in the fight was to cut loose a vicious uppercut with his right after he had received the first jab to the face. The blow missed by more than a foot

After the fight Beckett said to the newspapermen:

"I hadn't started to fight when I got it. I didn't realize what had happened. I was just "falling in' for the first round when he slipped in."

SMOOTH RUB FINISH FOR NEW BRIDGE

BOARD OF WORKS REVERSED MOTION THEY HAD PASSED FIVE TIMES

Ald Phelan, chairman of the Board of Works, brought the old subject of the granite finish for the new Hunter street bridge before his committee at the meeting last night.

"How often have we discussed this question already?" asked Ald. Edgar.

"This is the sixth time anyway," answered someone and the statement went uncontradicted.

[illegible] Ald. Edgar had had a portion of the granite chipped and compared it with the smooth rub finish. He favored the granite because it looked much better.

Then Mr Barber, bridge engineer, read an extract from an editorial in one of the leading engineering magazines of the country, in which it stated that after ten years of wear the chipped granite finish has the same lustre and appearance as the day it was put on. On the other hand it spoke of the darkened dirty appearance of the smooth rub after years of wear.

He explained that the smooth rub is more or less pourous and absorbs the smoke and dirt from the air The granite has the difference in presenting a hard glossy finish to the atmosphere that the rain will keep washed of any dirt and grime.

As regards the increase in the cost of the granite Mr. Barber stated that if his orders had not been interferred with by someone and the granite purchased before a certain pit was closed down it would have saved the city at least $2,000. He complained of some of the aldermen interferring with his orders and gaining information in other ways than through him, their representative.

Ald. Edgar and Morrison moved that the bridge be finished in granite as formerly decided upon on five different occasions, but withdrew the motion as they deemed it unnecessary.

Then Ald. Gainey and Garside moved that the previous motion be rescinded and the bridge be completed with a smooth rub finish. The motion carried 6 to 4.

After the meeting Mr. Barber gave instructions to the contractor to stop laying the concrete for the winter on account of the cold. This means that no part of the work will be prepared for the finish until next spring when the new Council will have the matter under their control.

A PERPLEXING MATTER IN COURT

A very complex hearing was before Judge Huycke at Division Court this morning. It was the case of the Higgins Hardware Co. versus L. Murphy and A. O'Brien for some material supplied for repairs to a building in Ashburnham.

Now, the question confronting the court is, who should pay teh account to the hardware company.

CHRISTMAS TREE FOR SOLDIERS' KIDDIES

LADIES AUXILIARY OF G. W. V. A. HAVE TAKEN UP THE WORK

The women's auxiliaries of this city are endeavoring to do their part toward lightening the burden of sorrow and privation which must follow in the train of the world war. The members of the organisations have taken in hand a commendable movement to bring happiness into the lives of the children of those who fell in the fight for liberty. It is their intention to arrange for a treat for the little ones in the form of a Christmas tree, to take place shortly before Christmas in the Great War Veterans' rooms.

Were it not for the solicitude of some such organization as this, many of the little ones would spend a cheerless Christmas, and it behooves the citizens of Peterborough to lend their hearty co-operation and financial assistance toward this worthy cause.

PUBLIC RINKS FOR SKATING SEASON

CITY WILL TAKE ADVANTAGE OF NATURAL ICE SUPPLIED BY BODIES OF WATER

The matter of public skating rinks was brought up and discussed at the meeting of the Board of Works last night. A report from City Engineer Parsons was read, in which he advocated the permanent location of the rinks. This, he said, was advisable because if the rinks were permanent a more efficient method of flooding could be instituted. He reported that much fire hose is being spoiled by cracking when in a frozen condition.

He suggested that next year's Council he recommended to deal with the matter early in the year and locate the rinks permanently. This would allow proper water equipment to be supplied and ensue better satisfaction at a lower cost.

It was decided for this year to make as much use as possible of natural facilities and if permission can be obtained in all uses rinks for this coming winter will be kept in condition at Goose Ponds, Little Lake, part of the canal between C.P.R. swing bridge and the lift lock and on either the artificial lake at Jackson Park or part of the creek which passes Green's foundry.

It was decided that the city would make no effort to make rinks on any public or private properties for this season.

PETERBORO BOARD OF TRADE REAL LIVE ORGANIZATION FOR PROGRESS OF CITY

Committees Report Activities Last Night to General Session of Organization—President J. J. Turner Promises Clean Financial Sheet at End of Fiscal Year—Fifty-One New Members Since Last Meeting.

President J. J. Turner of the local Board of Trade congratulated his colleagues in general session last night on their membership in a board which is very much alive and still "carrying on" to good effect. He referred to much activity by sections and the executive since the last general meeting in September, the outstanding feature of which activities was the presentation of memorial certificates to the next of kin of soldiers, who had given their lives in the war. He was pleased to welcome Mr. Ryerson Ritchie back after an absence on business, and with his valued co-operation with Secretary Fraser and the office staff, he trusted for the consummation of much Board of Trade business in this community's welfare.

A Live Organ.

This Board of Trade, President Turner [illegible] organ and had been and is of no mean value to the City Council, in reaching out for new industries and one feature of its activities in this connection is the furnishing of local statistics, and "it would surprise some of you members to see the questions, involving considerable thought and research, your officials are expected to answer to representatives of new industries seeking location." In warm eulogy of the work being done by this Board of Trade, the president declared that, were he called on to adopt a motto for this body it would be that of His Royal Highness: "we serve."

Delegates' Report

Mr. G. O. Cameron, one of the Board's delegates to the convention in Toronto, of the Associated Boards of Trade of Ontario, gave a clear and concise report of proceedings. He congratulated Peterborough's Board on having had at that convention, a larger representation than any other Board of Trade in the province, and also on its delegates having conserved the interests of this community on more than one occasion. For instance, he pointed out, members from [illegible]on and from Wallaceburg — two extreme points in this province—brought in a resolution to equalize hydro-electric rates. But fortunately, Mr. H. O. Fisk, told that convention a few plain truths, backed up so strongly by Mr. G. Walter Green that the Kingston-Wallaceburg proposition was quashed. Peterborough with power at its own doors, is paying $17.50 per electric horse power and why should we pay for leakage between Kingston and Toronto, and between Niagara and Wallaceburg which would be the case were a pooling of Hydro-Electric power adopted in the province.

Continuing, Mr. Cameron touched on the importance of good roads, both provincial and local, a question acted on by the convention, and he contended that once a Board of Trade steps out from its individual community affairs and enters into provincial or Dominion interests, it must do so in a broad way, not forgetting what is due its own home district.

At this convention, he added, Peterborough was distinguished in having had in the person of Mr. R. R. Rogers, the only U. F. O. representative present. In conclusion, Mr. Cameron was optimistic of acceptable reforms being introduced by the U. F. O. -Labor Government, and his report as a whole elicited warm congratulations.

Town Development.

Dr. Harvey reported for the Committee on Town Planning and Developing, much of which has already been published. He endorsed Mr. Thomas Adams' view that proper housing conditions would prove a factor in increasing the output in factories and also prove a means for solving, to a large extent, the problems of capital and labor. He also held the view that the solution of this city's planning and development hinges on a union station to centralize railroad activities, and such railway centralization must be the hub from which all planning for parks, public recreation resorts and development in general would radiate. Dr. Harvey was happy to report that the City Council have agreed to appoint a Town Planning Commission and he looked for future city development from which would emerge a metropolis where utility and beauty go hand in hand.

Executive's Report

Mr. Thomas Barrie, chairman of the Executive Committee, reported much committee work since the last general meeting, including the addition of 51 new members, and the expectation of the membership roll numbering at least 500 by the annual meeting in February. He also referred to the acquisition recently by this city of two new industries — the Western Clock Co. and the Nashua Gummed and Coated Paper Co. —in which his committee had interested themselves; and he reported negotiations [illegible] large American factory, which will, if it locates here, see that their employees are properly housed.

Saw Wood

Mr. Joseph Wearing wanted to know how the Board stood financially, and President J. J. Turner assured him that at the end of the present fiscal year the board's officials would show a clean sheet.

Mr. Wearing was also curious to know the reason for this assurance, and the president answered as follows:

"I take it, Mr. Wearing, that if Mrs. Wearing tells you she needs wood for the kitchen stove, you just get out and saw wood, to keep the kitchen fire burning. Well, this board's officials, when they find anything needed in the welfare of the organization, get out and saw wood, so to speak. And I have, in consequence, every reason for assuring you that the end of our fiscal year will find us with a clean sheet."

Coal! Coal- Coal!

A member here remarked that 1200 tons of coal stored in Peterborough is being loaded in cars and sent to Toronto for sale. "Can't it be kept here for our own factories, he enquired?

Mr. Joseph Wearing, who is again one of this city's fuel commissioners replied that this coal is soft and has been considered worthless. Then it is owned privately, and the owner cannot be stopped from selling it However, one of our manufacturers went to Toronto today in the hope of buying it.

AUTO CAUGHT FIRE

But Brigade Managed to Save Important Parts.

A very unusual fire occurred in East City on Concession street south, near Downer's Corners, when an automobile owned by Mr. P. Carroll caught fire. The quick action taken by the fire department enabled the saving of the chasis, wheels and engine.

It appears that the car, which had just been remodelled by the Duffus Garage Co., Water street, with new chassis parts, entire new wheels and ton and new engine fittings, was being tried out, when from some cause unknown the car caught fire. Considerable damage was done, no estimation being placed on the loss.

WATERWORKS STAFF ASK FOR INCREASE

TORONTO EMPLOYEES HAVE FORMED ANOTHER ORGANIZATION

Toronto, Dec. 6.— Another group of civic employees have formed an association, namely the waterworks staff, who have organized under the name of "The Toronto Civic Waterworks Association," and are asking from the city an increase of 75 cents per day, or $5.25 per week in addition to the wages and bonus already paid It will be remembered that the waterworks men stayed at their posts during the last strike of civic employees, rather than deprive the city of water

ARRANGEMENTS MADE WITH CONTRACTORS

PROPERTY COMMITTEE AND GARBAGE COLLECTORS AGREE ON SECURITY

The garbage collection contract, which was formerly awarded to P. [illegible] and [illegible] W. Johnston, was practically closed last night by the Property Committee of the City Council. The only difficulty in the way of final settlement was the matter of security from the contractors to the city for the fulfillment of the contract.

At the suggestion and motion of Ald. Edgar the following proposition was presented to and accepted by the contractors. If the contractors can secure a bond from an approved company to the extent of $2,000 it will be accepted as security at any time. If they fail, or do not desire to adopt this arrangement, the city will hold back 20 per cent. of their monthly pay for the first three months and 10 per cent. for the remainder of the year as security. At the end of the year this money will be handed over to the contractors with bank interest. The option of the two methods is with the contractors and as they expressed their agreement to be held down to one or the other the Property Committee is now freed of the garbage collection business.

CITIZENS ARE URGED TO CONSERVE COAL

FUEL COMMISSION HELD MEETING LAST NIGHT AND CANVASSED SITUATION

At the meeting of the city Fuel Commission last night it was suggested that a big dump of very poor soft grade coal, which has been left beside the C. P. R. tracks in South City be acquired by the municipality. Enquiry elicited the fact that this coal, which was owned by a Mr. Cox of Toronto, had already been sold in that city at $14 a ton and was being rapidly removed. At the present time the situation in the city is not at all alarming, but a very serious shortage is expected by February. The Auburn Woolen Mills and the Canadian General Electric Co. are at present facing a shortage of about 1,500 tons. Mr. E. Worth has gone to Toronto to see if it is possible to buy up 1,500 tons of soft coal to relieve the situation for the firms mentioned. If this is impossible the matter will be taken up with Mr. [illegible] H. Harrington, provincial fuel administrator.

All householders are requested to conserve their coal supply as much as possible, as a conservation by everyone of their stock will not only materially help each individual singly, but also the city as a whole, for the fact cannot be disguised that hard and soft coal will be at a premium about the middle of the winter, on account of interruptions in mining through strikes and the increased hardships of the railway companies in transportation facilities.

PLAN TO KEEP MEN EMPLOYED

GOVERNMENT MAY DECIDE TO CONTINUE SHIPBUILDING PROGRAM ALL WINTER

EXPENDITURE OF $40,000,000

VETERANS WHO ARE OUT OF WORK TO BE CARED FOR

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—The general question of unemployment during the present winter is engaging the attention of the Government. There are several ramifications to the problem, and in it several questions of policy are involved. In the first place it must be considered directly in connection with the provision made last session by the Committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and approved by Parliament for assistance to veterans in need during the winter. In the second place it is being considered indirectly in connection with the various demands made upon the Government for an extension of its shipbuilding program, and for consideration of proposals for the expenditures of money on public works.

An Expenditure of $40,000,000

The recommendations of the committee above-mentioned involved an estimated expenditure of forty million dollars. This is to go to equalizing Imperial pensions, reimbursing dependents who paid their own passages from overseas and the remainder for a fund for the actual needy.

It is proposed that the last question shall be dealt with by the organization of the Patriotic Fund. Local conditions are to be studied to prevent indiscriminate giving merely upon the representations of individuals.

At present there is no unemployment in Ontario and Quebec, which is not wilful. There is, however, serious unemployment in British Columbia and the number idle will be increased if shipbuilding is curtailed.

This brings up another national problem. During the war Canada embarked upon a shipbuilding program which initially called for the construction of 55 vessels. As a consequence capital totalling $47,000,000 has been invested in thirteen plants in the Dominion, with employment, directly and indirectly, to about 43,000 people.

Twent-Two Ships Ready.

By the end of the year, twenty-two ships will be in commission on the Atlantic and Pacific, and the majority of the remainder will be approaching completion. Already some of the yards are slacking down, and while the French Government has intimated its desire to build ships in Canada, further orders are not yet definitely in sight. Naturally, the shipbuilding yards, are anxious to secure orders and undoubtedly one of the main means of pressure being brought to bear upon the Government to induce the granting of further orders, is the plea that if the yards close down there will be serious unemployment in coast centres.

Most of the vessels now in commission are at present engaged on the Atlantic trade. The Volunteer and Trooper built on the Pacific, have started on a voyage through the Panama laden with lumber. The Aviator will shortly start upon a voyage to Australia (the first undertaken by a Canadian vessel) with a cargo of paper. But the cost of the vessels is high, and if the question of providing employement were the only consideration, it is doubtful whether the Government would undertake to extend the program.

The woman's auxiliary to the G. W. V. A. wish to acknowledge with thanks the sum of $50 contributed by Mr. G. N. Gordon for the purpose of providing gifts for the children of this city left fatherless by the war. It is hoped that the citizens will be generous in their response to this appeal and also that contributors will do so at an early date, in order that the ladies may be able to further the work as soon as possible. Contributions will be received at the Review office or by Mrs. (Col.) Mills, 451 Hunter street.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Dec. 6.—According to Excelsior, Germany will be called by a rigorous note which the Supreme Council will complete today to yield immediately to an Allied demand that the protocol of the treaty be signed The newspaper says it has reliable information that Washington has advised Berlin to adopt a more conciliatory attitude. If ratification is not completed by December 31, says Echo de Paris, certain clauses of the pact will be rendered impracticable and the Allies will be obliged to submit a new protocol causing further delay

ANNUAL MEETING OF O. H. A. TODAY

SEVERAL IMPORTANT AMENDMENTS TO BE DEALT WITH — [illegible] TO COMPETE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Dec. 6.—Hockey representatives from four provinces are attending the thirteenth annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association today, R. M. Glover, Peterborough, presiding. Many important matters are down for discussion the chief being the proposal of B. W. Dick of Seaforth to permit the champion club of the intermediate series to compete in the Allan Cup series, and the amendments barring senior players from competing in the intermediate section.

The high cost of living is reflected in the amendment of Father Gorman of Peterborough to increase the expense charges from ten to twenty cents per mile for clubs.

There may be some opposition to the rule recently laid down by the executive restricting membership in the association to teams representing permanent and well-established organizations.

There are eight candidates for four places on the executive committee. All the principal offices have been filled by acclamation. About sixty-five teams are expected to compete in three series this winter.

W. WHEELER WINNER OF 2 TONS OF COAL

SPLENDID ENTERTAINMENT AND CONCERT BY VETERANS BAND LAST NIGHT

A very enjoyable concert was held last night in the G.W.V.A rooms under the auspices of the Veterans Band. The rooms were very tastefully decorated and over two hundred and fifty were present. The proceeds were in aid of the G. W. V. A. band fund.

The Band opened the concert with two selections, "Old Comrades" and "Light Cavalry." These were followed by a vocal solo by Bandsman C. A. Everett, the well known local tenor, entitled "When the Great Red Dawn Is Shining." The next item was a piano selection by Miss Agnes Logan, Peterborough's gifted young pianist. "The Reminiscences of Verdi," by the band, came next. Mr. D. Carlyle, a talented baritone, sang Another selection by the band, "Joy Land," followed. Mr. W. A. Logan rendered a recitation which met with much applause, after which the band gave the "Chicago Marine Band." Miss A. Logan was the pianist for the vocal selections. Her well known skill in technique and rendition elicited much appreciation.

After the concert the prize drawing took place. The first prize of two tons of coal was won by Mr. W. Wheeler, with ticket No. 1562. Mrs. W. G. Nicholls won the second prize of one ton of coal with ticket No. 2538. The third prize of a bag of sugar was won by Mr. Shaughnessy with ticket No. 706. Mrs. Perrier was winner of the fourth prize, a bag of flour, ticket No. 1841; fifth prize, a turkey, was won by A. J. Lashbrook, ticket 1510; sixth prize, a ham, Miss V. Petrier, ticket 154, and the seventh and last prize, a box of cigars, was won by Mr. D. M. Minicola, with ticket No. 303.

A very enjoyable evening was the verdict of all present. The committee in charge are to be congratulated on the splendid program they offered. The drawing of the tickets was done by a Boy Scout.

U. S. CONSUL REFUSED TO ACCEPT FREEDOM FROM THE MEXICANS

Attemps to Get Into Jail Again But is Refused Admittance, Jenkins Wants Full Freedom or None--Mexican Danger of War Has Been Avoided.

Mexico City, Dec. 6.—W. O. Jenkins United States Consular Agent at Puebla, who was released from prison there on Thursday night attempted to secure his reimprisonment there yesterday, according to special despatches, received here late last night by Excelsior. The Judicial authorities at Puebla refused to allow the consular agent to re-enter the prison. Mr. Jenkin's move, according to the despatches, was prompted by a desire to secure unconditional liberty Jenkins being quoted as declaring that bail was furnished by his friend, J. Salter Hansen without his knowledge and that he refused to accept conditional freedom.

Hilario Medina, Under Secretary of Foreign relations is quoted by Excelsior as stating that the release of Jenkins had removed all cause for friction between the United States and Mexico. Advices to E. Democrata state that Consul Jenkins was set free after authorities had been handed a cheque for $500, signed by J. Salter Hansen, drawn on the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York.

It is declared that Mr. Hansen conducted all negotiations for the release.

NAVAL HERO IN TORONTO TODAY

TORONTO IS PUTTING ON AIRS

TRIES TO IMPRESS VISITORS WITH FACT IT IS MARITIME CITY

Toronto, Dec. 6.— Viscount Jellicoe of Scapa Flow, with Lady Jellicoe and members of their party on a world tour of the British Dominions, arrived here this morning and received an enthusiastic reception. Toronto, with its location on the Great Lakes, considers itself a maritime city, and the reception committee of Provoncial and Civic dignitaries today did their best to impress the British sea hero with that claim. The crowd at the reception on the arrival of the train to which Admiral Jellicoe's car was attached, included several military and naval officers and a guard of honor of thirty naval veterans. After a reception at the station the distinguished visitors were driven to the residence of Mr. George Beardmore, where various reception committees waited on Viscount Jellicoe to present their respects and adresses of welcome and appreciation. Tomorrow the party will visit Niagara Falls and on Monday various functions are planned in honor of the Admiral. Visitors will leave for Montreal at 11 p.m. Monday night.

RECORD MARK WAS REACHED ON LOCAL MARKET THIS MORNING

Eggs were quoted on the market this morning at 90 cents per dozen, an increase of five cents over last week's quotation. This is the highest price quoted in the city so far this year.

Potatoes were going at $2.50 a bag. They were a fair grade of potatoes, considering the poor crop in this locality.

No. 1 Spies were quoted at $7.50 a barrel. There was a large stock on the market, also a few Greenings and Snows.

RATEPAYERS WILL VOTE ON QUESTION OF PURCHASE OF RIVERSIDE PARK

Owners Offer the Property to City for $11000, With Reservation That it be Used for Athletic Purposes Only for Ten Years—Boom in Real Estate on East Side.

If the present intention of the Special Parks Committee of the City Council are carried out Peterborough will have a splendid park and athletic ground immediately east of the new Hunter street bridge.

At the meeting of the committee last night offers were received from the parties owning the property that is desired for that purpose.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall was present representing Dr. H. W. Wightman and J. Howden, owners of the Riverside Park. They offer the park to the city for $11,000, provided it will be used for a park and athletic ground. Mr. Hall thought they would make this reservation for ten years.

Mr. Stabler, on behalf of Mr. J. H. Bettes, offered the property belonging to the mat factory immediately east of the river, for $10,000.

"How much do you think it is worth?" asked Ald. Hamilton "5,000?"

Mr. Stabler would not make an estimate of its real value but simply stated the price set by Mr Bettes.

Mr. D. J. Lundy offered the property and building of the rapid tool company for $7,500.

Ald. Hamilton stated that he was sick of these people holding up the city on the price of property and at first was unwilling to consider these last two offers. The price presented for the Riverside Park be considered reasonable and fair.

It was finally decided to request the Council to submit a bylaw to the people for the purchase of Riverside Park at the price named provided the owners would consent to limit the athletic reservation to ten years.

It was further decided to offer the rapid tool company $5,000 for their property and $14,000 for the property owned by J. H. Bettes and J. C. Ellis.

If these arrangements can be completed it will provide a handsome park for this city. It will extend from the corner of Hunter and Burnham streets and include all the property along the river from the bridge to the end of the present Riverside Park. The city also own a couple of small islands at the south end of this property that could be fitted up and added to the park. A couple of houses that would be included in the purchase could be used for a caretaker's residence and a club room for athletic activities.

Those present at the meeting were Ald. Edgar (chairman), Mayor Duncan, Ald. Hamilton and Garside.

MARKET VALUE OF EXPERIENCE.

MEMBERS of the local Board of Education now, and always have, set a high market value upon experience. A teacher in their employ begins at a minimum salary and works himself up to a maximum by slow and laborious process. Every year, provided his services are retained, he is given an increase. About all that can be said on behalf of such a system is that it encourages continuity of service and acts as an inducement to the teacher to render the best that is in him and to remain in his position.

Not all men, however, require such an inducement to exert themselves. There are conscientious workers among teachers and other professions with whom the monetary reward of their labor is a second consideration. There are men in love with their vocation and who labor earnestly through sheer enthusiasm in their work.

It makes no difference when a teacher is brought from the outside. He must start at the bottom of the ladder regardless of his experience in other places. Suppose for example, that a man has acted as principal of a school in London or Brantford and has established his reputation. If he is brought to Peterborough he is placed in the ranks of the pedagogical novices and must start at the foot of the ladder. A man thoroughly trained in the teaching profession, no matter in what city, is of equal value [illegible] as he becomes familiar with his surroundings and has learned the names and peculiarities of his pupils. With the trained teacher this is a matter of a few weeks at the most.

Experience certainly has a financial value, but experience gained in one place should stand a man as an asset in another.

But the Board of Education is not the only department of the civic government that follows this plan. It is adopted in every branch of the city's administration. Any civic employe is required to start at the bottom, no matter what his training may have been in other lines and work up with a tediousness that is exasperating. There is no position in the gift of the city with duties so complex as to require a lifetime for their mastery. And no man should be sentenced to a life term of what is in effect privation in order to attain a goal which should really have been used for a starting point.

THE SERIOUS COAL SITUATION.

UNFORTUNATELY Canada has no means of controlling its own fuel situation, being dependent for its supply upon the mines of the United States. There is no getting away from the fact that the situation today is serious, not only in Peterborough, but throughout the entire Province. In the city the dealers say that the stock on hand is below the normal. This condition is bad enough, but it becomes worse when the announcement is made that there is little prospect of laying in a fresh supply owing to the situation at the American mines.

The officials who are charged with supervising the fuel situation in Ontario are on the job day and night. It is given out that Fuel Controllers McGrath and Harrington have succeeded in releasing all the coke held in border towns for immediate use in Canada. An official notice from Mr. Harrington, published in another column, calls upon all companies in Ontario using bituminous coal to forward to him not later than Monday next an affidavit submitting a statement of the amount of all kinds of coal on hand and the amount of the daily consumption. By taking such a census the available supply can be ascertained and the work of regulating the consumption can then be systematically undertaken.

PREMIER DRURY'S ROAD POLICY.

AN ARTICLE in another column of this issue gives in detail Premier Drury's policy with regard of the construction of highways. It appears that he is opposed to the building of trunk lines, but holds that improvements should be made on the branches to these avenues of transportation. It is to be hoped that the Premier will yet come to moderate his views in this regard, otherwise the Province will be the loser.

The Federal Government has made a grant of twelve million dollars to the provinces, this amount to be allotted according to population, and to be used in the construction of trunk lines. Unless the money is applied to this purpose, no portion of the subsidy will be available. If Premier Drury persists in his policy as now amended, Ontario will receive nothing from this Federal road fund. The Province is likely to find itself in the same position as Peterborough County is today, alone in its policy on the road building problem and receiving nothing of the Government allowance for that purpose.

When the railways of the country were built it was the trunk lines that were first constructed, lines that connected the chief traffic points to be served. These trunk lines, too, were constructed with a view to permanency. The building of branch roads followed as a matter of course. Why should not the same system be adopted with regard to the building of highways for vehicular traffic? Let the roads that are to carry the bulk of the traffic is first improved.

The Hamilton highway connects two of the leading cities in the Province, and the traffic upon it, both as regards business and pleasure, exceeds all expectations. Branch lines leading to this thoroughfare are being improved. The entire country through which the big highway passes is being built up and property of all kinds has increased in value. If the road is used chiefly by automobiles, that is only to be expected, for autos are the chief means of vehicular traffic in the Province today. The improved trunk line is not mainly an advantage to the residents of cities who own cars. The farmers of Ontario are now leading among the car owners, and no industry has been benefited by this modern invention to the same extent as agriculture. Improved highways will prove a boon to the farmer.

Premier Drury has an excellent opportunity to aid the cause of the class which his Government most directly represents. To follow his announced policy means the rejection of an offer from the Federal Government to lend a practical helping hand.

BARRISTER MADE TO ORDER.

IT SEEMS THAT the unfortunate James Guise-Bagley did not pass through the orthodox academic process to which members of the legal profession are subjected, but that he was made a barrister by special Act of the Ontario Legislature. Perhaps investigation would show that this was done for him as a reward for some political service rendered his party.

Naturally enough, the lawyers who have attained their professional standing by orthodox methods object to having men turned out as barristers through the courtesy of a Legislature. Members of the local Law Society, through their secretary, Mr. Joseph Wearing, have addressed a letter to Premier Drury asking that there be no repetition of the Bagley incident and that all men who aspire to legal standing be required to pass all the examinations.

No one can blame the lawyers for jealously guarding the honor of their profession. They have Benchers representing all sections of the Province, and these constitute in effect an examining board before whom all candidates for the profession are required to appear. Something more than mere academic attainments are required in order to survive the ordeal. The character of each applicant is closely scrutinized and his record investigated. Perhaps as many men fail at the final test because their personal record is against them as are rejected for scholastic deficiency.

Every profession should be to a certain extent the judges of those who aspire to membership in it. The doctors of Ontario are of a high standard of honor because none other are retained on the roster of practitioners. Sharp practice is not countenanced. The ethics of the profession must be maintained. Local lawyers will rise in the estimation of the public because of their promptitude in jettisoning a former member who has brought reproach upon the profession.

SIMPLE WHEN YOU UNDERSTAND.

MEMBERS of the Pickwickian Club, searching for adventure, discovered a stone with some letters that to the finders spelled nothing but mystery. They bought the stone and vaunted it highly as an archaeological specimen, a relic of the days before the flood.

The dream of these amateur antiquarians was shattered when an illiterate countryman translated the so-called heiroglyphics. "Bill Stumps, his mark," was really all that was to it.

Premier Drury reduces his own salary by $3000 a year, and old line politicians marvel as to what kind of a specimen he really is. Even some of the Toronto papers are puzzled. But the real solution is not difficult. Premier Drury is simply an honest man, a member of a class by no means rare outside political lines, perhaps, a man who has so far shown himself sincere in his profession, a man entitled to the confidence of the people whom he has been called to serve.

ODD REASONS GIVEN FOR NOT VOTING

There are always a certain number in Peterborough who for some reason, rarely if ever, vote at Dominion, provincial or municipal elections. On January first next these non-exercisers of the franchise will be in evidence. In view of these conditions, the following article by W. S. Edmonds in the Toronto Sunday World is of special interest. Mr. Edmonds says:

If the compulsory voting law, which the Hungarian Government proposes putting into effect at the general election to be held on December 20, was to be applied to elections in Canada, there are a great many citizens of the Dominion, who would subsequently be compelled either to pay fines or spend terms in prison. As a matter of fact, unless, heeding the warning, they mended their ways to a substantial extent, more than one-half of those whose names are on the voters' list would find themselves in this position.

The human mind in respect to the franchise is a paradox. In the days when the franchise was possessed by a select few, the non-possessor, women as well as men, clamored for it as if its possession was as necessary to their well-being a breath to their phsical existence. For the right to drop a ballot into a ballot-box some were even ready to lay down their lives. And yet now that practically everybody in all civilized countries has the right to exercise the franchise less than 50 per cent. of them do so when election day comes around. In other words the fought until they obtained the franchise and then had no ues for it. The psychology of the human mind is indeed a curious and unfathomable phenomenon.

O have recently come across two Torontonians who make no use of the franchise. One is a man of 70. He hasn't voted for forty years.

"Why don't you vote?" I inquired.

"Simply because Government is no good. There isn't such a thing as good government in the country — federal, provincial or municipal."

"Well, don't you realise that a government is just what the people who have the franchise make it?" I ventured. "If good people such as you do not exercise the franchise, how in the world do you expect the country to have good government?"

"I tell you there is no such thing possible as good government, for all government is of the devil," he concluded, as he turned on his heel and walked away. And this man holds a prominent position in the city.

The other non-voter is a young man about 40, holding the position of general manager of a large industrial concern.

"I have never cast a ballot, and I never intend doing so," he explained, "And why?"

"My dear fellow all politicians are not crooked."

"Well, if theyare not when they are out of office, they are when they are in. Don't misunderstand me. I don't mean that you can bribe the most of them. But I mean that practically all of them put party before country. And the man who is prepared to do that is in my opinion crooked. That is why I am not prepared to assist putting any man or any party into office."

But strange to say, this paticurlar man is noted for his deficiency in ideals. No great issue, social or political, has the slighest interest for him. But after all is it not in the final analysis, deficiency in ideals that is the root cause of the apathy which characterizes 50 to 60 per cent. of the citizens who absent themselves from the polling booths when issues, great as well as small, are at stake?

Mainly About People

The three sons of the late Col. Theodore Roosevelt have gone into business in New York. They are about to open a coffee house near Broadway, not with any idea of supplying a substitute for the saloon, but purely as a business venture and because they think that a New York coffee house will pay. The experiment is not as spectacular as Bishop Potter's effort to make the coffee house take the place of the barroom, but it may prove more successful. The average hard drinker does not find in coffee a substitute for his favorite beverages and those who imagine that he does overlook the fact that coffee was as available to him when the saloon was in existence as it is now. As a matter of fact, the necessity of an effort to find a substitute for the barroom will decrease with the passage of time. The generation that is growing up, without knowledge of the saloon, will not need a substitute for something they never experienced and therefore never will miss. The present generation of hard drinkers are likely to remain unreconciled to any substitute, but even with these the passage of time will remove much at the present tendency to "grouch" about conditions which give every evidence of becoming permanent. From a political point of view the Roosevelt boys would appear to have a natural monopoly of the coffee house business. It was the colonel himself who explained away his awkward announcement that he would not accept a third term for the presidency by asserting that this statement was comparable to that of a man saying that he would not accept a third cup of coffee at the same meal.

MAYOR CHURCH IS COY

Promises to Take Request to Run Into Consideration

Toronto, Dec. 6.—A deputation consisting of Messrs. J. R. MacNicol, Henry Parfrey and others waited on Mayor Church and it is alleged pressed his Worship to run for Mayor. His Worship was as coy as Richard the Third when a deputation asked him to accept the crown after he had cut off the heads of the young princes in the tower. He promised to take their prayer into consideration.

Millions of people know that it is needless to be bothered with indigestion, dyspepsia or a disordered stomach. A few tablets of Pape's Diapepsin neutralize acidity and give relief at once.

When your meals don't fit and you feel uncomfortable, when you belch gases, acids or raise sour, undigested food. When you feel lumps of indigestion pain, heartburn or headache, from acidity, just eat a tablet of Pape's Diapepsin and the stomach distress is gone.

The cost is so little. The benefits so great. You, too, will be a Diapepsin enthusiast afterwards.

WIT AND WISDOM

That Settled Him.

Mrs. Knott—Didn't your husband rave when you showed him the dressmaker's bill?

Mrs. Spott—Rather.

Mrs. Knott — And how did you quiet him?

Mrs. Spott—I showed him the milliner's, and then he became simply speechless.

Declared.

Mrs. Rusher: "Has Mr. Goldcoin, with whom you have been dancing all the evening, at last declared his intentions, Mabel?"

Mabel: "Yes, aunt."

Mrs. Rusher: "I am so glad! And what did he say?"

Mabel: "He declared he would never marry."

Perfect Happiness.

Young Lady (to newly-engaged friend)—I have come to congratulate you, dear. I have only just heard of your engagement. I hope you will be happy.

Friend—Oh, yes, I think I shall be. You see, George has got plenty of money, and—no mother! What more could I wish?

All Right Then.

Father (building a hen-house)—Tommy, take this new saw back to the shop and tell him to return the money. The saw is absolutely blunt.

Tommy—But, father, surely you must be mistaken. Why, I sawed a brick in two with it this morning, and it cut fine!

Sarcastic—Very!

Mrs. Newrich—Strange that you find it so hard to keep your help. I never have any difficulty in keeping mine.

Mrs. Hauton—Ah, but you have a great advantage over us. You naturally find it easy to humor them by treating them as equals.

One Better.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general.

FIVE WAYS OF SAYING "SHOP EARLY FOR CHRISTMAS"

After all, slogans are very closely allied to musical instruments—the longer you play on them, and with them, the more tunes you learn and the less monotony there is to your effort.

Kaufman's, in Colorado Springs, emphasize the pleasure angle when they state in their advertisements: "How much more pleasure the early Christmas shopper will have—how easy it is to get what you want now, before the crowds and the holidays come! Though our store service is the best, the rush will come and the finest, rarest things will go before some people even see them. Better write some of these suggestions down in your memo book and come here this week." Then follows a list of such items as Kaufman's desires to attract particular attention to.

"Be One of the Early Birds" is the way that Herz Brothers, in Terre Haute, Ind., phrase the slogan, explaining it with the statement "D-e-c-e-m-b-e-r here spells Christmas. We're head over heels in holiday work, getting ready to handle the crowds and to show our Christmas stocks to the best advantage.

"If we could only impress more of you with the fact that early buying is profitable, particularly at Christmas time. There is no possible advantage in waiting until the week before Christmas. If you buy this week or next, you buy from holiday stocks at their best. Many of the articles are exclusive and cannot be duplicated and these one-of-a-kind things are often the first to go. You [illegible] leisure and take your own good time in paying, whether your gift be large or small.' You'll find the aisles broad and comfortable and the stocks well arranged. Later on the Christmas crowds will congest even our aisles and the stocks—well, you know what stocks are around December 20!"

Abraham Straus of Brooklyn, adds a new note to the same idea with a line in display type to the effect: "Please shop early and you will make even the horses happy," while the Holman Jewelry Company, of Columbus, O., stress the personal advantage of early shopping in the following manner:

"The great bulk of holiday shopping is within a week or ten days before Christmas. Possibly nothing will ever completely change this custom, but every year increasing numbers of people make their selections before the big rush is one. Those who do so get the pick of the stock and they also have the personal satisfaction of knowing that their tasks are completed while others are hurrying and worrying through the turmoil of Christmas-week crowds."

But the Fair, also in Columbus, doesn't stop at painting the advantages of this policy. To early Christmas shoppers who take their purchases with them, the Fair offers "genuine live Norway spruce Christmas trees from four to five years old growing in pot."

The trees are distributed each morning in order to encourage shopping before the afternoon rush to every one who presents a duplicate sales check, and the plan according to officials of the store, has worked like a charm."

BUYS BACK STOLEN SHOES

PUBLIC NOTICE
Anybody having in their possession any of our shoes which were taken from our window Tuesday night during the riot return them and receive $1 apiece,
as they are mismates.
NO QUESTIONS ASKED

Up to the present writing a matter of twelve pairs have been brought in.

"THE BEST CHRISTMAS AD WE EVER USED"

For many reasons books form the ideal children's gift at Christmas time—particularly from the view point of the bookseller. But the problem of how to advertise them is one which has grayed the hair of many a bookstore.

"If you advertise the particular [illegible] in mind, you have to include a list of your entire stock," argues one man who has tried it, "else you run the risk of excluding the volumes precisely suited to a certain class of trade or age. Personally I think it's best to let the whole thing take care of itself. Those who want to give books will give 'em anyhow, so why worry with publicity?"

C. W. Smith, a bookseller of Rochester, N. Y. didn't subscribe to this idea, however. He felt that he must advertise his children's books at Christmas: if he wished to maintain a respectable volume of trade. So, his advertising appropriation being limited, he hit upon a plan which produced exceptionally good results.

Under his instructions an artist made a simple, but appealing, drawing of two old-fashioned children, a boy and a girl. Above them appeared just the outline of holly-sprigs and between them, so that it was centered in the space, was a banner reading "We Want Books for Christmas—Visit the Children's Book Corner." Below, hand-lettered was the Smith nameplate and address.

"Possibly it was the very simplicity of the whole thing that put it over," said Mr. Smith, in discussing the results of the advertisement. "The appealing childish faces and the entire absence of type made a striking contrast to other and more larger announcements. But I'm not prepared to say what was the real reason for the success of the advertisement—I'm content to know that it greatly increased our business in the line featured, in spite of the fact that the entire announcement occupied a space of only ninety lines by two columns."

ADVERTISING DRIVE SPEEDS "SLOW PAYS"

Public acknowledgment has been made by the merchants of Minneapolis of the success of their advertising campaign to induce slow-pay customers to pay up.

The campaign has also been successful, the merchants declare, in another and very important way. It has welded the bond of friendship much tighter between the consumer and the merchant.

In a final advertising announcement the Minneapolis Retail Credit Association says:

"The Minneapolis public has learned and realized as never before how important the meeting of all bills is to the very life and prosperity of Minneapolis and the Northwest, and especially how much the cost of doing business and the retail cost of goods depend upon the good credit of those who buy.

"To the small number who have not yet realized how important to their own welfare as well as to the welfare payment of obligations, the association only wishes to point out that their records are known and listed, and they will find it increasingly difficult to get credit. The remedy for this condition lies with them entirely. Prompt attention to bills received is all that is necessary. To those temporarily embarrassed [illegible] will bring his hearty co-operation as to methods and time for payment. Pay your bills promptly for the sake of your own prosperity and the prosperity of the Northwest."

MLLE ANTOINETTE BOUCHER

917 Darion St., Montreal.

"I am writing to tell you that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' for the remedy relieved me when I had abandoned all hope of ever recovering my health.

I suffered terribly with Dyspepsia. I had it for years and all the medicines I took did not do me any good.

I read something about 'Fruit-a-tives' being good for all Stomach Troubles and Disorders of Digestion so I tried them. After finishing a few boxes, I was entirely relieved of the Dyspepsia and my general health was restored.

I thank the great fruit medicine, 'Fruit-a-tives', for this wonderful relief."

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

MYSTERY OF LIFE

Who Knows Where It Comes From or What It Is?

Some folks talk about "the mystery of life," and it is as good a way as any to speak of it. For, truth is, nobody seems to know anything about life. Yet everything pays more attention to living than to anything else. Practically every motive in the world, among the wild things, is to live.

Not even man, with all his knowledge, knows where life comes from, or what it is, George F. Burba writes in the Columbus Dispatch.

It is just the opposite of death, he will tell you; one either lives or dies. If he is living, the body is in a certain condition. The blood flows through the veins. The heart beats. The body is warm. One is conscious of that which goes on about him. The very opposite is true when a thing is dead, whether the thing is a man or a dog or a bird or a fish. But the why of it all, nobody understands that.

The wild things strive with all their might to escape death, but they pay little attention to the dead things about them. It doesn't seem to make any impression upon an animal to run upon another animal that is dead, out in the woods. They fear death, but they do not respect the dead, nor show any emotion in the presence of death. They do not know what it is—that is, they do not know that the dead creature they encounter in the woods is dead and done for. If it is something they want to devour, they devour it. If it is not, they pass on without paying much attention to it.

Death is more of a mystery to man. That is, it impresses him to a greater extent. He thinks more of it. He tries no harder to live than do the wild things, but there is something in connection with the presence of a dead creature that impresses a human being. This is especially true if one encounters death out in the fields or woods. Tramping through a forest, and coming suddenly upon a dead animal, one pauses in contemplation of the mystery before him. Yesterday a splendid stag, let us say, roaming the woods in triumph, strong and swift and beautiful; [illegible] and fleetness; living—breathing, seeing, feeling. Today—there he lies. His coat roughened by the winds or rain, his eyes sightless, his limbs without motion—unconscious he lies there like a log rotting in the elements. Can this be the stag of yesterday? Is the thing called life all he needs today to arouse him from the slumber—to smooth his splendid coat, to bring the gleam of light into the eye, to give speed to the limbs? Then, whence the thing called life? Or, from whence did it come in the beginning?

Thus do we meditate and marvel at the mystery of life and death when we are in the presence of death—especially if we encounter it in the great shadows of the forest—out where there is nothing to interrupt us, out where reigns that which gives life and which recalls it!

Few Reminders of Raids.

Studious lovers of London will not fail to notice how swiftly, true to her marvelous gift of eternal youth, she is obliterating every trace of the air raid period as if it had never been. Some of the scars made by enemy bombs still remain, as in the wholesale market in Covent Garden, but they might pass as unnoticed as the effects of recent fires, which are always to be found in the great city. Notices of the air raid shelters are, however, already hard to find; an odd one may be discovered on a lamp post in Tottenham Court road, or at Gresham college, which had not found leisure to tear down the shabby poster about its use as an air raid shelter; while in Southampton row the New Zealand record office has not yet demolished its sandbag revetment. Speaking generally, however, all signs of the reign of terror by night have "vanished like the baseless fabric of a dream, leaving not a wrack behind."—London Globe.

Two Explorers.

Martin Killin and Adelbert Gumaer, the last two member of Vilhjalmur Stefansson's Canadian Arctic Expedition to leave the Arctic, are reported aboard the trading schooner Anna Algu, which is working its way toward Nome.

Killin and Gumaer were not members of Stefansson's original party. They were members of a party Storker Storkerson, Stefansson's lieutenant, led on to an icefloe last year in the hope that the Arctic drifts would carry the floe westward to Siberia. After spending eight months on the ice the men found themselves about fifty miles from their starting point. They all came ashore and Storkerson and one other member headed overland for the outside world. Killin and Gumaer boarded the Olga and started for Nome.

Storkerson's trip outside was his first in eleven years. He has been an explorer, trader and trapper along the northern rim of the continent ever since 1908. He expects to associate himself with Stefansson in handling the Canadian Government's proposal to stock the northern tundra plains with reindeer.

Dogs Eat Esquimo Church.

In the Hudson Bay country, where the dogs are half wolves, a band of these famished animals actually ate up a church. The Esquimo Christians had built a tiny chapel to hold twenty people. But the poor converts did not long enjoy the little church, of which they were so pathetically proud. The building was of whalebone, an edible substance, and one Sunday the pagan dogs ate every morsel of the sacred edifice.

Flax Used by Maori Natives.

The Maoris, before they became acquainted with the white people, wore clothes made of a species of flax, called "Korari," which grows in great abundance in their country. They are draped only from the waist to the knee; they often wear a sort of mantle which reaches from the shoulders to the feet. Their clothing is very coarsely woven by hand by the women and girls, and they go about bare-legged and bare-footed. Their dwellings are made of branches of trees, shrubs and twigs. They have but one opening, which is very low, and through this comes the daylight that illumines the dark interior of their houses. They light their fire in the middle of the hut and the smoke escapes by the door. They sleep on the ground on mats or on fern. In all their houses one generally sees their war weapons (their "mere," a large greenstone sharpened), their axes, their guns, their cartridge boxes, and sometimes their trunks and cases, which they have purchased from Europeans, and in which they keep their clothing and such objects as they most value. These people are in the habit of tatooing themselves. The common people are tatooed on the face; the chiefs, moreover, tattoo their lower limbs.—Family Herald.

MUST TAKE CARE OF THE GROWING BOYS

CANADA'S YOUTHS ARE THE NATION'S ONE BEST ASSET TODAY

The conference of delegates to the Tuxis Movement came to an end last night. Among the evening's speakers were Rev. Dr. Robinson, Rev. M. Doyle and Mr. Taylor Statten.

Rev. Dr. Robinson of Toronto gave an outline of the movement. He said that there was an advisory committee for co-operation in boys' work which had been in operation for five years. It had been demonstrated as possible for leaders of denominations and organizations to unite in a common program which belongs to each denomination, each unit contributing to the limit of its capabilities in the development and promotion of the movement. Dr. Robinson also said that there should be frequent and complete consultations between the leaders of the various units in regard to the policy of their program. The fellowship between the workers in the various churches and organizations had been a delightful experience to all.

Dr. Robertson then went on to say that, vitally important as the great national reconstruction movements are, it was just as necessary and vital to conserve and develop the country's "boy power." The boy dynamics is unquestionably Canada's greatest asset with his lofty idealism and fervor and ability to render society really valuable service. Here is for Canada's tomorrow a potential leadership, worthy of the older brothers who served overseas, giving their all that the country might live, and, if wisely guided now, it will be equal to the heaviest tasks a great nation can lay on its stalwart shoulders.

"DOES IT PAY?

The Rev. F. E. Malott's theme in Trinity Church tomorrow evening will be "Does It Pay?" His morning theme will be "Power, Its Source and Use." There will be good music at both these services. A special invitation is extended to young people to attend. Strangers and visitors are always welcome at Trinity Church. The pastor wishes to meet all the members of the Official Board at the close of the evening service.

EDITOR'S MAIL

MR. SISSON NOT A CANDIDATE.

Peterborough, Dec. 6, 1919.

Editor Review: The article in your issue of December 4 reporting the proceedings of the Trades and Labor Council on the evening of the 3rd inst., is misleading in some respects and I would appreciate it if you would kindly correct the impression given by the article.

Mr. Sisson is not a candidate for a place on the Utilities Commission, neither has the Engineers' Club a candidate. A number of engineers and others believe that Mr. Sisson has unusual qualifications for a place on the Utilities Commission, and are endeavoring to sound out public opinion as far as possible. If the general opinion of representative bodies of citizens is favorable to Mr. Sisson an endeavor will be made to persuade Mr. Sisson to stand as a candidate.

Yours truly,
G. R. LANGLEY.

WAS ON VERGE OF GIVING UP

LASSARD GAINS 16 POUNDS AND OVERCOMES TROUBLES BY TAKING TANLAC.

"If any man had told me that Tanlac could do me just half the good it has done me, I would have laughed at him," said John Lassard, who lives at the Richelieu Hotel, Edmonton, Alberta, to a Tanlac representative the other day. Mr. Lassard saw three years service in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces and was in the thickest of many of the great battles. He is now a popular brakeman on the Canadian National Railway.

"Just ask any of the boys I work with, they'll tell you what Tanlac has done for me and what I think of it," he continued, "Why, three bottles of Tanlac have not only put me in good health but they have added sixteen pounds to my weight.

"I went through such a nerve strain while in the trenches in France that when I got back over here I just went to pieces all at once. I lost my appetite almost entirely, and it seemed that everything I ate soured on my stomach, and it seemed that everything I ate soured on my stomach and caused gas to form so bad that I would be in misery for hours after every meal. My nerves were in such an awful condition that it was next to impossible for me to get more than a few hours sleep at night, and if any kind of an unexpected noise happened, it made me jump like I was shot at. I was in such a run down condition that I couldn't do my work. At last, I thought I had just about reached my limit and I had decided to give up my work altogether and take a long rest to try and build myself up.

"But before I quit one of the boys who heard I was going to leave, came up to me and told me what Tanlac had done for him and kept on insisting so much that I agreed to try it. Well, sir, I would hardly believe it if anybody else told me that Tanlac had helped them as much as it has helped me, why, I'm not the same man at all. My nerves are so steady that I can stand any kind of a noise. I can sleep like a log and I never felt better in my whole life than I do right now. I eat anything I please without ever having a pain of any kind anywhere in my body, and that [illegible] built up in every way, [illegible] troubled with anything in the least, and as I told you, I have gained sixteen pounds. I wish you would publish this testimonial of mine so that other soldiers who may come back from France in a weak run down condition will know that Tanlac is the very thing they need to build them up and put them in fine shape."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood, by G. Pringle and Son.

Indian Gamesters.

Although the natives of India do not operate on the stock market, they have adopted a unique form of gambling for which the cotton market reports are responsible. Every day five quotations are cabled from New York announcing the cotton situation. The natives looked upon this as a direct invitation to them to establish a simple but none the less absorbing form of gambling. The gambling consists simply in guessing what the five figures will amount to, and the man getting nearest to the right amount takes the stakes.

Nineveh's Pathetic Ruins.

Past Mosul the river Tigris rolls its ancient, almost legendary, waters and opposite on the left bank, the dream of antiquity continues undisturbed. There in the blazing sun or in the shimmering Persian moonlight, lie the ruins of Nineveh, the last and greatest capital of the Assyrian empire. The wall of the disappeared city still stands to a height of 50 feet and is 12 miles in circumference. Close by the bank of the river are the still imposing remains of two citadels.

Economy in Telephone Use.

A Brazilian newspaper has been for some time enjoying the privilege of using one telephone line for three simultaneous conversations. With three telephone sets at each end of the line, one pair of users talks English, one pair French, and one pair Portuguese. The listeners seem to find no difficulty in selecting the sounds intelligible to them and ignoring the others. The newspaper people express great satisfaction with the result, especially as they pay for only one line.

Use for War Materials.

The British ministry of reconstruction, according to the Daily Mail, is embarking upon a scheme of rural development by the construction of a large number of light railways to connect the country districts with the main railways. The cost will be shared by county authorities and the government. The lines will be leased to operating companies under adequate guarantees. Enormous quantities of material used by the British army in France will be utilized.

PREMIER DRURY'S ROAD POLICY

If Given Effect Will Deprive Ontario of Any Share in Federal Grant to Provincial Highways.

Ontario under the U. F. O. Labor administration will receive none of its five-million-dollar share of the federal grant to provincial highways if the coalition government adopts the highway policy outlined by Premier Drury at a meeting late last week. So much the more for division among the other provinces at Ontario's expense. Isn't it sweet, isn't it lovely to think of Ontario contributing multi-millions to the construction of highways in Quebec and the other provinces, while this, the premier province, wallows in the mud of self-abnegation. The Hon. E. C. Drury declared:

"When the farmer hears about a cement highway, he remembers that closer at home he is confronted with five or so miles of rutty roads from his farm to the town, so do you wonder that he does not want all the money spent on trunk highways? The farmer knows that you, in the city, can do without highways, for you have the train services to take their place, but he knows that he cannot do without roads, for he has not the same convenience of the railways. What he asks is a fair distribution of the money derived from automobile licenses, and he does not want $30,000 spent on one mile of road, quite as much as he wants 30 miles of good road at $1,000 a mile. He feels that the best way to spend the money is to see that the present roads are resurfaced.

"The cement roads are all right. We have nothing to say against them provided there is enough money to go around, but we want the small roads first. And I believe that you in the cities do not want the expenditures limited to the trunk roads any more than does the farmer, for I feel you want to be able to get out into the country on good roads. That appears to be one respect in which other politicians failed to gauge public opinion. So it seems to me that the fairest and most economical policy with regard to highway improvement would be one of continuous repair based on an even distribution of the funds available."

He said he wanted to see the revenue derived from motor licenses spent on roads "where it comes from." But why quote further. It is no unkindness to say that the premier of Ontario is at his worst on the subject of good roads. Federal aid is to be extended by the Dominion government to the construction of high efficiency, all-year trunk highways only, during the next five years. The premier purposes maintenance work on our trunk roads, with maintenance and improvement of the lateral roads first. If the premier's program is implemented—kiss federal aid goodbye. Also kiss good-bye rural motor express, and all ultra urban truck transportation save over the Toronto-Hamilton Highway and other constructed all-year roads. With them bid adieu to the decrease in the h. c. l. that this most efficient and economic form of transportation would bring.

The premier's proposal is analagous to a suggestion to restrict the capacity of the bed of the St. Lawrence River to the capacity permitted to the beds of all tributary streams, or to build lateral (feeder) and trunk railway lines, alike, with 65-pound rails, despite the fact that trunk lines for economic maintenance require 90, 100 or 110-pound rails according to traffic conditions. Traffic must be the criterion of the type of pavement in highway construction—not parochial theories of class affections and prejudices.

Most everyone who has enjoyed a larger radius of travel than from farm to market riglity-jig, knows that it has been demonstrated times without number that to build a gravel or water-bound macadam surface road that will stand the gaff of the intensive, all-year traffic which a main trunk highway must bear, is impossible. That on heavily-trafficked roads like the Toronto-Hamilton Highway, maintenance costs would be prohibitive were a less permanent type of pavement than concrete, asphalt or brick used. The commissioner of highways of New York State recently declared that it had cost the Empire State ten of millions of dollars to learn this.

Our highways must be built with a view to continued service and rapidly-increasing highway transportation, where they will best serve—the greatest good to the greatest number.

Few highways in the world carry a greater volume of traffic than the Toronto-Hamilton Highway. The best gauge of its usefulness and popularity is the extent to which it is used. Those who criticize it as an extravagance and "a speedway for joy riders," either deliberately tamper with veracity or speak from wild conjecture only. To say that a macadam or gravel road would do just as well, any of the property-holders along the highway what they think. Their real estate has been enhanced in value from two hundred to a thousand per cent. by the highway. It is worth many times its cost to the communities it serves.

A thoroughly democratic and equitable highway scheme has been drawn up by the legislative assembly, based on investigations extending round the world, and pronounced by international authorities as being as near ideal as is practically possible. It is not to be thought of that the new administration, after deliberation, will be so ill-advised as to adversely tamper with it.

The general plan of the province in connection with good roads has been to improve the 20 per cent. of them first which carry 80 per cent. of the traffic. This has been done by making grants for what are called county provincial highways, as well as for the provincial highway proper. For the latter, the province provides 70 per cent. of the cost, and the municipalities 30 per cent. For the county provincial highways, the province puts up 60 per cent. and the counties 40 per cent. It is hoped that, as the result of federal grants, the counties' contribution will be reduced to 15 per cent., with the province providing 45 per cent. and the Dominion 40 per cent. The province also aids ordinary county roads to the extent of 40 per cent.

The township roads, while representing 80 per cent of the roads in Ontario, carry only 20 per cent. of the traffic.

A railroad company first constructs a main line and then its laterals or feeder lines. Efficiency and economy demand this procedure. If a company were constructing roads, the same sequence would be followed, for the same reason. A government has yet another reason for so proceeding—the greatest good to the greatest number.

Yet there has been complaint that the so-called provincial highways have been given a disproportionate amount of government money. Toward the cost of this class of road the government pays 70 per cent compared with 40 per cent. toward the cost of county roads. The concrete highway between Toronto and Hamilton, which is cited in some quarters as an example of this discrimination in favor of urban motorists, was not built under the 70 per cent. regulation. Of the total cost of about $1,250,000, the province paid only $500,000, an amount which will be collected in license fees from Toronto and Hamilton motorists in two years. The city of Toronto paid about $250,000 toward the highway, the city of Hamilton about $50,000, and the remainder came from municipalities along the route and from frontage assessments. Toronto will pay an additional $50,000 toward the cost of widening a stretch of the road. The highway was classified as a semi-suburban road, and on that account much of the cost was levied on the cities most directly interested. The 70 per cent. provision applies to provincial highways, which are not so obviously inter-urban and which are designed to run through the province from end to end and link up the other road systems.

It is important, of course, that township market roads be improved with all possible dispatch—but not at the expense, as Hon. Mr. Drury would have it, of the more important highways. The tail must not wag the dog. Let it be remembered that the provincial revenue from motor car licenses has in equity been earmarked for highway improvement work. If the Hon. Mr. Drury meant what he said when he declared that the revenue derived from motor vehicle licenses should be spent in the districts it comes from, then much more money would be spent in the interprovincial road, with its offshoots to Ottawa and the Falls, than under the present plan. While farmers lead all classes in the purchase of motor vehicles, numerically the cars in the cities, towns and villages far outnumber those in the country, and, per mile of road!—but why continue. Obviously Mr. Drury, no more than city motorists, wants the money derived from the licenses of city motorists spent on city pavements, despite his words. Nor do we think he means what he contradictorily says about uniform distribution of the motor vehicle license money over the roads of the province for improvement. If every deserted cadge road is to receive an equal mileage appropriation for improvement and maintenance as will the main highways—why, the appropriation will be so attenuated that it will not keep half the weeds off the roads of Ontario.

The premier may be interested to learn that several years ago Toronto

cy's sake to lay no more macadam, let alone gravel roads, and that aside from five or six main thoroughfares, there are few streets in the city that carry anything like the burden of traffic that the Toronto-Hamilton Highway. Yonge street beyond the city limits or the Kingston road do. Our lanes are not all permanently paved, Mr. Premier—that will come in time. Our main streets were first taken care of, though doubtless people living on Darling avenue or Pine Terrace would have preferred to have had their roads given precedence. Now, if your equal distribution policy had obtained here, our roads at best would still all be gravel, with a maintenance cost that would have long ago bankrupted the city, and I fear, Toronto, like that "loveliest village, perhaps unwept, unhonored and unsung. So much for the premier's "equal distribution" roads policy.

Now for his contradictory "small roads first" policy, the second of his unholy trinity, all conflicting and contradictory. What the premier under this policy suggests is that the province construct the small roads before touching the main highways. To logically apply this policy the smallest and most unimportant road would be improved first, the largest and most important last. Applied to our cities, this would mean that the smallest alley, the least lane, would be the first to be paved, and the main streets last. King, Queen and Yonge streets in Toronto under this policy would still be hog wallows—with vehicles mired to the hubs (if there were any vehicles to get mired) at this season of the year.

The third of the premier's road policies—revenue expended where derived—would leave no money for many of the small roads and a negligible amount for most of them.

With the whole civilized world committed to record-breaking con-

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at very little cost. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

DRINK HOT WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST

If you are accustomed to wake up with coated tongue, foul breath or a dull headache; or if your meals sour and ferment, you have a real surprise awaiting you.

To-morrow morning, immediately upon arising, drink a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is intended to first neutralize and then wash out of your stomach, liver, kidneys and thirty feet of intestines all the indigestible waste, poisons, sour bile and toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal.

Those subject to headaches, backaches, bilious attacks, constipation or stomach trouble are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store and begin enjoying this morning inside bath.

Just as hot water and soap cleanse, purify and freshen the skin, so hot water and a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Limestone phosphate is an inexpensive white powder and almost tasteless.

PETERBOROUGH BOARD OF

Citizen Appreciated

President Turner here referred to the removal of Mr. T. F. Matthews, to Toronto, and his resignation from the Commission of Public Utilities. So long and highly esteemed a resident of Peterborough, should not, he said, be allowed to leave town without some mark of appreciation. Mr. Matthews had always been one of this city's leading public spirited men and the Board of Trade should arrange for some testimony to his worth in the shape of a public dinner. "I have taken the liberty, therefore, to select the following representative citizens to go into the details of this propostition: Mayor Duncan, ex-Mayor W. H. Bradburn, ex-Mayor Duffus, ex-Mayor W. G. Morrow, Mr. W. R. Breyfoble. This suggestion met the Board's hearty approval.

Transportation.

Messrs. J. E. Firth and A. H. Stratton, moved that Secretary Fraser forward this Board's endorsation of the Toronto Board of Trade's application to the Dominion Railway Board for improved service on the I. B. & O. branch of the C. N. R., between Bancroft anh Kinmount Junction. This carried.

Mr. Fife explained that at present there are only three trains each way a week, transportation is consequently badly congested and one train each way a day will be asked for.

No More Than Due

In seconding a vote of thanks to Mr. J. A. McKone, for the use of his school room on general meeting nights, Mr. F. D. Kerr emphasized the importance of the Peterborough Business College to Peterborough, in furnishing on demand by local industries and business houses, trained and efficient office help. This fact, he said, was duly appreciated.

Incidentally, it might be here remarked that this educational institution means to Peterborough a circulation in currency of $50,000 a year.

struction of permanent, high-efficiency, all year roads in well planned and co-ordinated systems, it is no time to let retrogression drag the highways of Ontario in the mud. Moreover, this province, with its abject poverty in good roads, can not afford to contribute five million dollars to highway construction in other provinces, while they contribute not one penny to the construction of Ontario highways.

The premier would be well-advised to drop his three roads policies that have in common only their detrimental class or sectional appeal, and adopt as his own the equitable democratic policy and program evolved after years of experience and investigation, as a non-party measure by the legislative assembly.

THEATRICAL

Jefferson De Angelis Who Will be at the Grand With the Gallo English Opera Company Next Week Speaks of the Old Time Theatrical Plungers.

"The present day stories about fabulous salaries for movie stars and stage productions that cost a hundred thousand, more or less, give some people the impression that there were no theatrical plungers in the so-called 'good old days.'" This from Jefferson De Angelis, the comedian with the funny legs, who is coming to the Grand Opera House with the Gallo English Opera Company, Wednesday and Thursday evenings and Thursday matinee, Dec. 10 and 11.

Mr. De Angelis maintains that there never were better gamblers than those of a generation ago, and he also makes the point that producers of the olden days produced with their own money instead of adopting the present day corporation system wherein innumerable persons are given an opportunity to put up their money and take down a share of the profits—if the show "goes over."

"I figured in one of the notable productions of the last generation," said Mr. De Angelis recently, "and in regard to this particular production, I know exactly what I am talking about. I saw the contracts; saw them written on white foolscap paper with black ink.

"I refer, of course, to "The Wedding Day," the Stanislaus Stange comic opera in which I was starred jointly with Lillian Russell and Della Fox. The three stars represented only a small part of the expense. And the three stars cost considerable.

"Senator William H. Reynolds of Brooklyn, who had dabbled more or less in the show business in a small way, had ben aroused from a deep sleep one morning to find he had become fabulously rich over night. His speculations in Brooklyn real estate had turned into 'pay dirt.' He found himself a millionaire many times over.

Senator Reynolds had two chief ambitions. He wanted to build a theatre in Brooklyn that would surpass, architecturally, anything of the kind ever attempted. The Senator's second great ambition was to produce a gorgeous comic opera. There was no limit on the money expenditure. The best composers, librettists, stage directors, chorus directors and scene painters of the day were called in to do the best job they ever had attempted.

"I long previously had won my spurs at the Casino, albeit I had my good hard knocks while getting up to the working end at the top of the ladder. Miss Russell then was the most widely advertised woman on the American stage, Della Fox was established as the greatest comedienne in light opera. Miss Russell's salary figure was $2000 a week with a guarantee of 40 weeks. My salary was contracted at $1000 a week, with the same guarantee. Della Fox was engaged at a salary of $750 a week with the 40 weeks' guarantee.

"Just study those figures. There was $3750 for the three stars alone, and that didn't do much more than begin the story. I believe the production could not have cost a penny under $100,000. The costumes for each chorus girl represented an outlay of $300, and we had 50 chorus girls. Not press agent figures, mind you. We had 50 of them. They were there to be counted, and there were many who were there counting them every night.

"The show itself cost approximately $9000 a week in salaries and incidental expenses. Keeping in mind the theatre's share of the receipts, it can be seen that the company had to play to at least $15,000 a week before there was a chance to break even. Few people realize it, even Wedding Day" was one of the most staggering attempts at a costly comic opera production ever made in this country, and it is still more staggering to recall that Reynold's 'got away' with his bargain The piece was a sensation at the New York Casino, where it ran the full season, and the receipts often went beyond $25,000 a week. The following year 'The Wedding Day' was taken on tour with the metropolitan cast intact, and it was as great a success on the road as it was in New York. Reynolds backed his judgment in an extraordinary way; he didn't raise the price beyond the $2.00 mark, and he presented the greatest light musical comedy known up to that time. The public met him full way, and laid their money in the box office. That was all there was to it.

"You know," concluded Mr. De Angelis, "I have been in this business a long time, and it has always been my observation that the public will come to you and invest their money gladly when you deliver the goods."

Bald Heads at Peace Conference.

An amusing sidelight on the recent Peace Conference at Versailles is thrown, says Answers, by a correspondent, who not only reported the proceedings proper, but took notes regarding the hair, moustaches, beards and whiskers of the peacemakers.

Two-thirds of the delegates were more or less bald. Perhaps some of them made up for this by wearing moustaches. Out of 65 men who sat around the peace table, all had moustaches but 14.

Whiskers, on the other hand, were not popular. Only three people wore them, and by a curious coincidence, the names of all these three people began with V. They were Venizelos of Greece, Vandervelde of Belgium and Vassitch of Serbia. The latter's whiskers were particularly prominent.

In regard to dress, there was less formal attire than one might have imagined. The British paid no special attention to dress. Bowler hats and frock-coats, once a combination that would never have been sanctioned, were quite popular; but there were some countries which put all they knew into their attire. These [illegible] Japanese, and some of the South American states.

Button boots and lace boots, we are told, came out even.

Vivisecting the Frog.

The frog is the vivisectionist's favorite victim, not because his structure is at all human-like (though he is built somewhat like a man), but for the reason that he will endure being chopped up to a remarkable extent and still retain life. If his brain be removed he can get along without it, swallowing whatever is put into his mouth and otherwise behaving much as usual, though in automatic fashion. If his lungs are cut out he will survive for a long time because he can breathe through his skin. The corpuscles of his blood being remarkably large, that fluid serves admirably for the instruction of the seeker after medical knowledge.

Of Course Paul Wasn't Mad.

Paul and Billy live in the country There are two girls in the family also Their aunts in town are fond of sending them things. One package contained nothing for Paul or Billy. Paul wrote to his grandmother: "What's the matter with my aunts? They sent a package out here and there wasn't a thing for Billy or me in it, and Billy's pretty mad about it."

Tattoo Removal.

Various methods for removing tattooing are employed, the best of which consists in going over the tattoo marks with a strong solution of tannin using the tattooing needle, then rubbing with silver nitrate crayon. Nitric acid, salicylic acid and glycerine, chloroform and a mixture of pepsin, glycerine, hydrochloric acid and water are other substances used for this purpose

Thriving Table Leg.

Among the furnishings of a South Carolina home, says Popular Mechanics magazine, is a small willow table that is the talk of the neighborhood. Although it has been kept indoors and far from any moisture ever since it was built and properly painted, several months ago, one leg is now the proud parent of four leafy sprouts, which thrive in their strange surroundings.

Combines Three Signals.

A newly designed triple-tone electric bell yields a clear ring from one push button, a buzz from the second, and a combined ring and buzz from the third. The buttons may be placed on three different doors of a house, or in office or shop the signals may be used for calling three different persons.

Pleasures Coming Fast.

Merle was fond of bananas. When his father took him into his mother's room to see the new brother that had arrived the night before the child was given a banana as he left the door "Gee," he cried delightedly: "a new brother and a banana, both the same day!"

First Advertisement.

Although the first periodical paper which contained news in England appeared in May, 1622, the first newspaper advertisement published does not seem to have been until nearly twenty-five years afterward. The advertisement related to the sale of a book "applauded by the Clergy of England."

A Dance Among the Pioneers

WHEN the Prince of Wales and his immediate suite left the train at Orient Bay for three days' fishing, the reporters were shunted down to the township of Nipigon and laid aside in the middle of the settlement on the C.P.R. tracks.

Some genius made a happy discovery — there was a Finn dance held every Saturday evening in the little yellow hall away behind the C.P.R. station, and there was a beautiful floor, and there were in normal times two men there to every woman, and there would be lots of fun, so let's all go. Well, all went, from Mr. A. B. Calder, who represents the president of the C.P.R., to the little boy who peels the potatoes, and the marine orderlies of the Prince of Wales.

By nine o'clock at least fifty people from the royal train, almost half the outfit, had found their way to the little dance hall. Each paid his quarter, received his slip, and then handed it back to the fair-haired Finn at the door, who smilingly received each newcomer. It was a pleasant little hall, with a beautiful floor. A curtained stage at the end showed that it was used for other kinds of entertainment. Plain chairs lined the sides and ends. A single, strong oil-lamp swung from the middle of the ceiling, and lent the dim, soft light that makes the dance a dream. All around the wall were Finnish signs, "Do not smoke. Intoxicating liquors strictly prohibited." Over the stage was displayed a Finnish pennant which, translated, read "The place of gathering of the working people." On either side of the stage hung two Union Jacks.

The visitors distributed themselves on the chairs round the walls, not quite sure of the etiquette of the gathering, but the natives soon began to arrive, and they followed suit, so all felt at ease. Presently Nestor Mannila, the Finn accordeon player, began to tune up. He was an artist, that Nestor. His hair was not worn a la Paderewski, but plastered down flat as paint streaks on a graven image. But his platform technique, his vanity, the elaborate affectation of the slow, solemn movement of his head from side to side as he laid one gaunt cheek after another on the ends of his instrument, [illegible] all pointed to the [illegible] of quality. He was a master and one felt it as he played. He started off with a wild, weird skirling, but broke into a waltz. The tune he played throughout the evening never varied except once when he broke unexpectedly into "Comin' Thru' the Rye," but he changed the time to suit the different dances.

None of the Anglo-Saxon party knew just how to start, but then Mrs. McKirdy, a dear old lady who constituted herself a sort of chaperon for the strangers, came up and asked if they would like to meet some of the ladies. Of course they would. Few had yet come, but she introduced two Swedish girls, Hulda Sjolander and Regua Olsen, one dark, the other fair, both fine dancers and the floor was soon full.

Gradually more people came in and the dances went along merrily. All constraint wore off and the men went up and begged dances from the girls at random. There was no sitting out. You just led your partner back to her seat and bowed gravely. Chairs were at a premium and you had done your duty when you got her one.

The cosmopolitan nature of the affair, the strange chance that brought these people together from a hundred corners of the world to take pleasure for a few brief hours in each other's company, that was the outstanding feature of it all. If you glanced round the room between dances you saw first a group of Indians sitting together, half a dozen girls, mostly clad in black which they greatly affect, but one of them, a beautiful slip of a girl with a faint red like the first rosy blush of the dawn tinging her dark cheeks and clad in a bright sweater, just out of the convent, and half a dozen braves. Next to them sat the Swedish girls, fresh and comely and as well-dressed as the girls in Toronto and then the Canadian folk, women who had followed their men to the wilds for love of them. The majority of the Finlanders sat at the head of the hall.

The little Toronto girl danced as happily with the boy camp cook from the power plant as with the best dressed men there. A New York camera man, who has travelled the world, waltzed with an Indian belle, who looked joyous enough to decorate a tombstone. A London clubman, who had burnt himself to a lean, long, brown shadow in twenty-five years of India's sun, tried to one-step with a fair-haired daughter of Sweden, but found that his training in British ballrooms could not give him a dancing equality with his partner in the latest American hop and had to lead her back to her seat, bending gracefully over her and murmuring many apologetic "Bah Jove!" A diminutive blue-coated English marine discovered a lady from London among the Canadians present and was happy for the rest of the night. A son of the Southern States, one of America's foremost "movie" camera men, was eloquent with his soft, slow; "Ah, don' know when Ah enjoyed mahself so much," after leading back a speechless Finn girl to her seat.

Oh, Jehosophat, if the little prince had only been there!

REPUBLIC'S TWO GREAT DAYS

The republic of Ecuador celebrates two national holidays, and, strange to say, both are "independence days." Both are observed with the same enthusiasm and patriotic fervor that is displayed here on the anniversary of the adoption of the immortal declaration, according to the Pan-American Union.

The liberty-loving patriots had to shoot two bolts at Spanish domination before they succeeded in gaining permanent independence. The first time they had a quiet but determined revolution in Quito, the present capital of the republic, the patriots assembling at the house of Manuela Canizares, a brave and beautiful woman, on August 5, 1809, when they prepared their declaration of independence and chose the officials who were to compose the provisional government. That night the conspirators gathered their forces in different parts of the city, and Captain Salinas, who commanded the two companies of regular troops and guarded the city, sent to their barracks, read to them the declaration and won them over to the cause of the patriots. They overpowered the bodyguard of Ruiz de Castilla, the Spanish governor, early on the morning of August 10 and thus established the first republic without shedding a drop of blood. It lasted only about a year, when Castilla succeeded in overthrowing the patriotic government and again brought the country under Spanish dominion.

The fires of liberty had been kindled, however, and the Ecuadoreans kept up their heroic struggle notwithstanding many reverses, until in 1820 the people of Guayaquil, the leading seaport of the country, succeeded in rebelling on the 9th of October. With the aid of Gen. Simon Bolivar, the great Venezuelan emancipator, and of his compatriot, Gen. Antonio Jose Sucre, the Ecuadoreans after many bloody battles succeeded in completely annihilating the Spanish forces and established freedom in Ecuador forever. Therefore it is that the Ecuadoreans celebrate two "independence days," the 10th of August and the 9th of October.

New Male Garment Planned.

Get ready for next fall, fellows, for the blanket cape. For you are going to [illegible] The new sartorial style is really a cape-and blanket, which will be hung over many a pair of masculine shoulders. Just how many it will hang over is yet to be determined, but if the interest the invention aroused at the concluding session of the semi-annual meeting of the American Designers' association in the Martinique hotel is sustained the garment will acquire considerable vogue, writes the New York correspondent of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. The blanket cape consists of an army blanket with a few holes and buttons and a detachable collar. When the owner is asleep the blanket cape performs its primal functions of keeping the sleeper warm, and nothing more. When he awakens he removes a circular bit of cloth buttoned to the middle of the blanket and unbuttons a slit about a foot long that starts at the hole. This gives him plenty of room in which to insert his head. A Napoleonic storm collar is then attached to the hole collar and the two dies that fall over the arms are connected into sleeves by concealed buttons. And there he stands, in a smart-looking poncho that gives him lots of room to get into his pockets and keeps away the cold also! It can be any color or any cloth the wearer chooses, but these details are left for the author of "What the Men Wear" to have a little fun with.

"Another year comes to a close with far more than 500 new postage stamps having been issued," writes Kent B. Stiles in his department, "Stamps," in Boys' Life. "The chronicle at this writing shows a total of 511 varieties, but it will be several months yet before American collectors can gain information regarding many issues reported abroad, so that the record for 1918 may tell of as many as 600. In 1917 there were 900 varieties.

"These 511 varieties were put forth by nations and their possessions—such as islands, protectorates, colonies, dependencies, occupied territories, etc.—to the number of 88 governments. Of the 511 varieties 388 were due to the war alone. The United States has issued more than fifty varieties, including shade and die varieties due to inferior dyestuffs and to worn plates, but the British empire leads the list with nearly 200 varieties."

Mexico Market for Tractors.

In the fiscal year 1918 the United States shipped almost as many tractors to Mexico as to all other Latin-American countries. Mexico's share lacking only 34 of the combined total of the others. The leading position of this neighboring country in our export trade in tractors is due to the action of the Mexican government in stimulating agriculture by exempting farming implements from import duty, and even by importing such machinery for sale at cost to Mexican farmers.

Both are correct, "autumn" being rather more classic and generally used in England, while "fall" is now distinctly American and more expressive in its reference to the time of falling leaves. In England, the autumn is still sometimes called "the fall of the leaf." An English writer says: "Fall is better on the merits than autumn, in every way; it is short, Saxon, picturesque; it reveals its derivation to everyone who uses it, not to the scholar only, like autumn; and we once had as good a right to it as the Americans, but we have chosen to let the right lapse and to use the word now is no better than larceny." But if "fall" is more expensive, "autumn" has sanction of long usage and classical approval. The poets all give it the preference. Different ones speak of "congenial autumn," and "yellow autumn, weather with nodding corn."

Prince an Indian Chief.

"Dawn of Day" is the latest distinctive title to be conferred upon the Prince of Wales, who was invested with a chieftainship in the Six Nations (Iroquois) in the course of five hours spent in Brantford. At the Mohawk chapel the prince signed the register which contains the signatures of his grandfather and great-uncle the Duke of Connaught. He was particularly interested in the Bible presented to the Six Nation Indians by Queen Anne. The women of the tribe requested that he convey to his royal mother the Queen an address from them. The prince unveiled a bronze tablet inscribed with names of the 35 members of the Six Nations who died overseas.

FULTON SHOULD MEET OTHER THAN MORAN

IF HE TRYING TO COME BACK HE SHOULD PICK FORMIDABLE OPPONENTS

The proposal to match Fred Fulton with Frank Moran hardly will meet with the favor of followers of the glove game. Such amtch, with its almost inevitable outcome, would mean nothing. Fulton punched Moran full of holes two years ago and could do it again in a round or two, for the Pittsburger has gone back a long way and has lost even the lusty wallop which made him famous. If Tom O'Rourke is wise he will decline to have Fulton again meet the red-haired husky. Fulton still is on probation, and while he should receive every chance to make good, he must reinstate himself through the medium of bouts with dangerous rivals and not with boxers of Moran's present status.

GOOD GRAVEYARD AFTER THAT

This is a story of faith and what it accomplished. It was brought in to Paris by a dispatch-bearer and found its way into the Red Cross scrapbook over a cup of tea.

An American artillery detachment lay waiting for a report from the air scouts. All at once a message fell from the clouds: "Fire on moving graveyard."

What on earth did he mean? Was he joking? That particular airman was a born wag. Did he mean, perhaps, some body of enemy troops not yet visible? Off in the distance the crosses of a military graveyard were to be seen, quiescent and innocent under the afternoon sun. He could not possibly refer to that.

"Yes, by heaven!" said the officer in command. "I believe in that fellow. That's the only graveyard in sight. He must mean that."

He gave the order. The guns spoke. Great masses of smoke arose from the quiet graveyard and a long series of explosions ensued.

Shortly afterward the airman alighted.

"Well, you did have faith in me," he said. "I wondered if you would think I was joking. I saw what looked like a military graveyard on the right of the road. A little later I looked down and it was on the left of the road. I couldn't believe my eyes, but I did, and flashed you the word. Rather a new dodge to get munitions up to the front!"

Coal Preserved by Water.

The advantage of storing coal under water, where deterioration is much less than in the air, has been amply proved. It is recognized that the gases concealed in the pores of the coal—oxygen in particular—are responsible for both heating and deterioration, and their escape should be prevented as far as possible.

A WORLD WIDE BOXING AGREEMENT

AGITATION FOR UNIFORM SET OF RULES SO AS A BOXER BARRED IN ONE COUNTRY IS BARRED IN ALL.

London, England, Dec. 6.—Probably one of the most momentous meetings in the annals of boxing, and one which is bound to have a far-reaching effect for the good of the game, took place at the National Sporting Club of London, when accredited boxing representatives of Great Britain, France, and the United States gathered together to discuss an international boxing code and the formation of rules and regulations to govern the manly art throughout he world.

Those present were the official representatives of the International Sporting Club of New York, and the Army, Navy and Civilian Board of Boxing Control of the United States; A. F. Bettison, manager of the National Sporting Club of London; Eugene Corri and other British boxing authorities, and Victory Breyer, the well-known French promoter and sportsman.

Uniform Set of Rules.

The standardization of boxing thoroughly was gone into, plans made for a comprehensive scale of weights and a uniform set of rules. Mr. Bettinson favored an agreement among the boxing authorities of France, Great Britain and America through which a boxer, manager or promoter disciplined in one country would be barred throughout the rest of the world, or at least in countries party to the agreement.

Much was accomplished before the meeting was adjourned. The conference will conclude its sessions today, and there will probably be some important and good news for lovers of boxing on this side of the Atlantic.

PORT FOR INLAND NATIONS

Project That Has Aroused Much Interest in Commercial Circles in Switzerland and France.

A project to provide an independent Atlantic port for Switzerland, Bohemia and other inland European nations in order to render them economically independent of Germany after the war is receiving attention in France and Switzerland, according to a report to the department of commerce from Consul General Ravndal at Nantes, France.

This project, the consul states, has aroused much interest at Nantes, whose municipal authorities are conferring with commercial interests in Switzerland with a view to combined action. The business men of Lyons also are said to be watching the movement with deep interest, although they have not yet joined it. The general idea seems to be to construct suitable rail connections between the inland production centers and one of the Loire ports—Nantes, St. Nazaire, La Rochelle or Bordeaux. It is also thought possible the project may be forwarded by the construction of canals linking up the Rhine and Rhone rivers with the navigable lake system of Switzerland.

Existing railroads are available to form the backbone of such construction. Port facilities already have been developed at several of the ports because of war demands and railroad yards and warehouses ample for the beginners of such a project are available at Nantes and St. Nazaire.

It is thought that after the war American passenger and freight traffic with central Europe as well as with France will tend toward the Loire ports in preference to the more distant channel and North sea ports, which, owing to their location and meteorological conditions, increase the cost of navigation and insurance.

A Characterization.

She was a woman of experience at least if not of wisdom, with strong passions, but with a not ungenerous heart; outspoken from the knowledge of her "great possessions," perhaps as much as from a natural frankness; a warm friend and not a very bitter enemy; and at the bottom of it all with a certain simplicity of character, of which her love of flowers was an example.—James Payne.

ARE BROTHERS IN TREACHERY

The German is not the originator of the "Kamerad" ruse, according to Ed Houston, a farmer living north of Junction City, Kan., who followed all accounts of battles in the big war very closely.

Mr. Houston says that the Indian was an adept at crying "Kamerad," in his own tongue, of course, long before the German empire was formed, and cites an experience of his own to prove it.

Mr. Houston was a member of Troop G, Seventh cavalry, the regiment commanded by the gallant Col. George Custer, for eight years. Under Captain Edgerly he went to the scene of the Pine Ridge troubles. The troops lined up to disarm a band of Indians that had given themselves up. They included the chief, Big Foot, and a large number of braves, as well as women and children.

The captives were herded together and soldiers formed a hollow square around them. Each Indian wore his blanket draped over his shoulders, and, with arms folded across the chest in the customary Indian position, maintained a stoical silence. It was known that a number of the Indians [illegible] suspected.

Suddenly, apparently without a given signal, one Indian opened fire on the surprised troopers. Instantly all of the other braves followed suit, and even the squaws and older children joined in the attack upon the soldiers.

Little Indian boys with sawed-off shotguns fought until killed and the battle was a bloody affair. It ended when there were no more Indians, because the soldiers, angered at the trickery that had been shown, gave no quarter and the Indians asked for none.

The following day the Seventh went to Drexel Mission, where another battle took place. After the Pine Ridge trouble had been stamped out, the regiment returned to its station at Fort Riley, where Mr. Houston continued in service for a number of years.

Glory of a Nation.

The true glory of a nation is an intelligent, honest, industrious people. The civilization of a people depends on their individual character, and a constitution which is not an outgrowth of this character is not worth the parchment on which it is written. You look in vain in the past for a single instance where the people have preserved their liberties after their individual character was lost.—E. P. Whipple.

About the Tourmalines.

Tourmalines were discovered to us as gems in the eighteenth century, when some Dutch children, playing with bright colored stones on a warm summer day, noticed that they attracted and held straws and ashes. For some time after this the stones were called "ash drawers," and later it was discovered that they have electric power, greatest between the degrees of 100 and 200 Fahrenheit.

Oil Cheaper Than Coal.

The high price of coal and the prospects of it becoming dearer still has resulted in a big demand for oil fuel. It is now cheaper to use oil fuel in ships and factories than it is to use coal. Perhaps before long we shall be using it in our homes, too.

The great coal strikes of 1911 and 1912 made hundreds of big firms turn towards oil, and it is a remarkable fact that once oil fuel has been used coal is abandoned forever.

Oil is not only cheaper than coal, but it is cleaner and less trouble. It is ever so much easier to transport and to supply to engines. A few feet of tubing and a main line express engine, for example, can take in 600 gallons of oil fuel in from four to five minutes. Oil, too, has the advantage that there are so many big deposits of it in various parts of the world that it is not affected by strikes so much as coal.

When proper oil-burning machines are used, here is no smoke attached to it at all, and factories using oil have no tall chimneys, no piles of ashes, no tedious shovelling of coal into the furnace. Just a few pipes, that's all. A few taps regulate the oil supply to the boiler furnace, and, in fact, with oil the grimy coal stokers can be replaced by girls in spotless white caps and aprons.

Gull Gets Into Ashpit.

"It's crying like a baby and fighting like a devil," shouted Engineer [illegible] McQuade of the state steam tug Governor Irvin, lying in the slip between piers 18 and 20, as he ran waving his arms toward police officers, John Malcolm and John Maloney, on duty at the piers, writes a San Francisco correspondent.

"Get Captain Symon on the phone—tell him something awful is aboard the Irwin," said McQuade as he came alongside the officers, but the officers thought it better to investigate before communicating with Capt. James Symon, superintendent of the state tugs.

The officers hurried back to the tug with the engineer. Ash-pit doors were thrown open and there, gasping for breath, lay a seagull that had flown down the smokestack.

"I started working its wings with my hands and blowing down its throat, and Maloney fanned it with his headgear, and in a few minutes it began to breathe all right, and flapped its wings to be off. They were scorched badly and it flew a little wobbly as it made away toward Yerba Buena island. I bet that bird will remember this day," said Malcolm.

To Polish Glass.

A good polishing powder is made of rock alum, burned and finely powdered, five parts; levigated chalk, one part; mix and apply with a dry brush. There is nothing better to polish glass than chamois leather, or velveteen. They should be kept entirely free from dust, or grit.

When Glass Is Scratched.

To remove slight scratches from plate glass, first clean the surface by gently rubbing with a pad of cotton-wool; then cover the pad with cotton velvet, rubbed with fine rouge. This will not only remove the scratches, but will also impart great brilliancy to the glass.

TEACHERS OF YOUNG FOLK NOT PAID AS MUCH AS HODCARRIERS SAYS C. R. BANKS

Board of Trade Requested to Express an Opinion on Salary Question—Roland Denne Explains Situation in Peterborough Public Schools.

The local Board of Trade, which met in general session last evening, had before them a communication from the Peterborough Male Teachers' Association, asserting the need of an adequate re-adjustment of male teachers' salaries, as previously published in the press. This letter characterised the Board of Trade as an approved channel for the dissemination of public sentiment in this as in all matters affecting the city's welfare, and urged that this question be taken under consideration, and given impartial discussion, to strengthen the hands of the Board of Education. Reference was also made to the Chamber of Commerce of Brantford having recognized the inadequacy of male teachers' salaries, and recommended the increase which teachers in that city asked and subsequently were granted.

Mr. Frank Whitehouse contended that as this request for increased salaries is already under consideration by the Board of Education, it might be considered an act of presumption were the Board of Trade to advise a board composed of intelligent men as to what course they should pursue.

Under Consideration.

Mr Roland Denne, chairman of the Board of Education, explained that last year this board decided to continue the ten per cent. war bonus to teachers through 1919, and this year their salaries for 1920 had been adjusted in keeping with those paid in other cities of the size of Peterborough.

The school year, he explained, begins at the end of June, in which month teachers are re-engaged for another term. Last June all teachers signed up and the Board of Education took it for granted that no dissatisfaction existed as to the salaries schedule struck for 1920. Their first intimation to the contrary was through the press last week, followed by a request by male teachers for an increase beyond the schedule presented at the Board's meeting Monday night. The matter is now in the hands of the Committee on Appointments who will give it due consideration.

Wretchedly Paid.

Mr. C. R. Banks interpreted the letter under discussion as mainly of Provincial importance. It is a regrettable fact, he said, that teachers of the young are paid less than bricklayers and hod-carriers. He did not look on the letter from the Male Teachers' Association merely as a complaint of salaries paid here, but rather as a seeking for some expression of opinion on the teachers' movement in this Province to secure the standing which is their due.

Dr. Harvey and Mr. Whitehouse moved that the secretary be instructed to reply to the Male Teachers' Association that as the question referred to in their correspondence is under consideration by the Board of Education, the Board of Trade deems the time inopportune to move in the matter. This carried.

BOYS' CONFERENCE IN ITS CLOSING SESSION

PROMINENT CHURCH WORKERS DELIVERED ADDRESSES AT THE MEETINGS TODAY

The second session of the "Tuxis Boys' Movement" took place when the conference met in Murray Street Church at 9 a.m. yesterday. After a service of worship an address on the "Church Program for Boys' Work and the Organization Needed" was given by Rev. C. P. Muirhead, of Bowmanville, who represented the Anglican Church. Mr. Muirhead's address was very clear and concise and reviewed the work gone over at the first session.

Mr. Taylor Statten of the Y. M. C. A. then went through the business of organising the Trail Rangers into squares, after the manner of the meeting last night. Mr. Statten then explained the order of the mid-week discussions.

Group games were then discussed and explained to the delegates and a short talk on "Denominational Conferences" was given by Mr. Fletcher.

At the third and last meeting held in Murray Street Church in the afternoon the subject of "Community Responsibility" was dealt with by Rev. W. P. Fletcher, while "Principles of Leadership," "Mentors' Training" and "The Co-operative Movement" will be explainde by Mr. Statten.

The leaders of the conference in this city wish to take this opportunity to thank those who offered to provide billets for the delegates from the various outside centres. Owing to outside forces over which leaders had no control, the number of delegates who attended the series of lectures was not quite so great as was counted upon. The leaders, nevertheless, appreciate the spirit in which the offers were made, and the splendid way in which the citizens of Peterborough responded.

ORILLIA VETS AFTER GRANT.

At the last regular meeting of the Orillia town council the G.W.V.A. branch in that town requested a grant of $10,000 for a new Memorial Home, and exemption from taxes on the homes of all returned soldiers for a period of ten years. It is likely, if admitted to be legal, that both these propositions will be submitted to a vote of the people on January 5th at the municipal elections.

ABOUT 170 years ago tea sold in England for $14.60 a pound. It was a luxury which only the wealthy could afford.

Thanks largely to the great increase in the area of tea plants under cultivation in India during the past fifty years, there is enough tea grown to-day to supply tea to the world at a price even the poorest can afford.

A cup of "good" tea—Red Rose Tea—costs only a fraction of a cent. There is hardly anything sold in the grocery store that gives more value or more pleasure for the money.

Consisting chiefly of ASSAM teas—the richest and strongest of Indian teas—Red Rose is exceedingly fragrant, flavory and economical. It is a tea of real quality and real value.

PRICE SLAUGHTER STILL GOING ON

Ladies of Peterborough are reminded that there are still a host of bargains in ready-to-wear, etc., for their selection at H. J. Zacks' selling-out sale, 422 George street. Mr. Chesler, who has purchased the stock, has again slaughtered prices for a clearance to make room for new Christmas goods now on the road, consequently his shelves are being cleared at less than wholesale cost. All this afternoon and tonight you may effect startling savings at this big sale, while Monday will see a resumption of selling with new bargains in many seasonable and attractive lines.

WINTER PRICE OF MILK

Toronto, Dec. 6.— Application of the Milk Producers' Association for authority to increase milk prices from $3.10 to $3.35 an 8-gallon can, opened in the City Hall yesterday before Commissioner Murdock, of the Board of Commerce.

Major Lewis Duncan, chairman of the Toronto Fair Price Committee reviewed the steps leading up to the agreement reached in September last. He urged that proof of the producers' contention that feed prices had advanced since September, be exacted before the increased price was granted. Major Duncan read a letter from the Neighborhood Workers' Association, urging an investigation of the milk situation with a view to ordering a reduction from the present prices, which were described as "unfair" and prohibitive to the poor.

COAL STRIKE MAY END TOMORROW

SHOPS CLOSED; HUNDREDS IDLE

NON-ESSENTIAL INDUSTRIES ARE SHUT DOWN TO SAVE COAL

MANY TRAINS ARE CANCELLED

PASSENGER SERVICE IN THE UNITED STATES REDUCED BY ONE-THIRD

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Hundreds of passenger trains were withdrawn from service on railroads of the country today, mostly in the middle west, the south and southwest, in accordance with instructions issued last week by the Railroad Administration.

Hundreds of others had been ordered annulled on Wednesday next, chiefly in the East. In New England alone orders were out to cancel three hundred trains on Wednesday. The reduction in the passenger service in the United States, since the strike began, amounts to approximately one third of the total. Many hundred thousand workers were idle today on account of the closing of non-essential industries. Measure to conserve fuel supplies went ahead in nearly every part of the country.

McBRIDE ATTACKS MAYOR CHURCH

DECLARES HE WILL DO ANYTHING TO EXPELL "TELEGRAM" RULE FROM CITY HALL

Toronto, Dec. 8.—Controller McBride, speaking at the North Toronto Ratepayers' Association meeting in Eglinton Hall Saturday night, expressed himself so bitterly against the administration of the city's affairs by Mayor Church and Controllers Maguire and Robbins, and of his determination to oppose their re-election, particularly that of the Mayor, that he has practicaly placed himself in the position of having to retire from municipal life at the end of the present year or be a candidate for the mayoralty for 1920. While taking this very strong stand, Controller McBride declined to make a definite statement regarding his intentions, but said he would do anything and everything possible to defeat the men who had to take orders from one newspaper, and if he were a candidate for any position it would be simply to put an end to "Telegram" rule at the city hall.

HENRY WINNETT NOW SOLE OWNER OF QUEEN'S

BUYS OUT OTHER INTERESTS IN TORONTO HOTEL—PLAN IMPROVEMENTS

Toronto, Dec. 8.—Henry Winnett, who for over half a century has been connected with the Queen's Hotel, is now sole owner of the property and business. Mr. Winnett has purchased all other interests in the Queen's, and is now planning extensive improvements to the property. The Queen's is one of the landmarks of Toronto. The buildings, originally a row of three-storey houses, were built in 1828. In 1844 they were converted into one to accommodate Knox College. When this college moved in 1859 the property became a hotel. It was purchased in 1862 by a Capt. Thomas Dick, who gave it the name it now holds. Twelve years later Messrs. McGaw and Winnett formed a partnership and took over the enterprise. Upon the death of Mr. McGaw some years ago his interest was held by an estate from which Mr. Winnett has now purchased.

STRIKE OF COAL MINERS LIKELY TO BE DECLARED OFF TOMORROW

President Wilson Offers Men an Increase of 14 per cent and an Investigation Into Their Complaints—Offer Likely to be Accepted Labor Leaders Believe.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The following formal statement was issued today at the White House:

"It is hoped that there will be a settlement on Tuesday afternoon of the controversy between the miners, the operators and the Government through the acceptance by the miners of a plan for a definite settlement proposed by the president, which proposal was submitted to Acting President Lewis of the miners by Attorney-General Palmer Saturday night."

Public in the Dark.

The public were still in the dark today as to the Government's last move to settle the coal strike. Not a hint of the nature of proposals had been made public either by the miners or the officials, but comfort is taken in Attorney-General Palmer's statement that he saw the end was in sight. The success or failure of the president's offer will not be determined until Tuesday when the court and the strike leaders will consider it.

The President's Terms.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—The proposal presented to John L. Lewis, acting president, and William Green, secretary of the United Mine Workers of America, by President Wilson and Attorney-General Palmer, in Washington Saturday night, included a 14 per cent. advance to miners and the appointment of a commission to study wages, profits and all conditions surrounding the industry upon resumption of work by the striking miners, according to private advices from the national capital received by Dr. F. C. Honnold, secretary of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association.

Attorney-General's Statement.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The following statement was issued by Attorney-General Palmer last night:

"A conference was held at the Department of Justice, in Washington, on Saturday, at which were present the Attorney-General, Mr. Tumulty (Secretary to the President), John L. Lewis (Acting President), and Wm. Green (Secretary Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America), with a view to reaching an understanding between the Government and the miners which would result in a settlement of the coal strike situation.

"At this conference there was submitted a definite, concrete proposition from the President looking to a speedy termination of the strike situation and an adjustment of the entire controversy. The officers of the United Mine Workers, in response to the suggestion of the President, agreed to and have called a meeting of the general scale committee, the representatives of all the district organizations and the international executive board of the United Mine Workers, to be held in Indianapolis on Tuesday, December 9, at 2 o'clock p.m., at which time the President's proposal will be considered and its acceptance by the miners urged by Mr. Lewis and Mr. Green. The Attorney-General will be in Indianapolis on Tuesday."

MAYOR GRAY ON WITNESS STAND

NAMES THOSE ACTIVE AS LEADERS

EXPLAINS WHY MEMBERS OF THE POLICE FORCE WERE DISMISSED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Dec. 8. — Giving evidence at the trial of R. B. Russell, one of the eight strike leaders charged with seditious conspiracy, Mayor Gray said this morning that Messrs. Winning, Russell and Veitch, took a leading part in presenting the strike committee during the strike. Members of the strike committee, Mayor Gray said, attended nearly every Council meeting but he saw more of them in his office than in the Council chamber. He said Russell was strongly in evidence most of the time.

A document and agreement between the policemen and the city was put in as an exhibit. The strikers referred to thihs as a "slave pact" he said. A. J. Andrews, M. C., read the agreement to the jury. It contained clauses stating that members of the police force would join no union and would not take part in favor of supporting a general strike. At the meetings of the strikers, he said, remarks were made regarding this alleged pact asking that none of the men sign it and stating that the strikers would do their best to prevent anyone signing such an agreement.

On May 1, a new agreement reached between the Adjustment Board of the police and the Police Commission was presented. It was modified to allow the police force to form a union among themselves without outside affiliation. The police refused to sign it and on June 9, the Police Commission dismissed the force.

Brantford election officials in municipal elections will get an increase in pay.

NO BREAK WITH MEXICO LIKELY

TO SEVER DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

CLAIMS RIGHT TO CONTROL THE FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Dec. 8. — President Wilson would be gravely concerned to see any such resolution pass Congress, he wrote Senator Fall today, in referring to the Fall resolution requesting the President to sever diplomatic relations with the Carranza Government.

"It would constitute a reversal of our constitutional practice which might lead to very grave confusion in regard to the guidance of our foreign affairs," he wrote. The President expressed confidence that he had the support of every competent constitutional authority in the statement that the direction of the government's foreign affairs was assigned by the Constitution to the chief executive and to him alone.

Senators Take Action.

When the President's letter was received Senator Lodge called Senators Fall and Brandegee, Republican, Connecticut, into conference, and in a few minutes announced that no further action on the Mexican situation would be taken by the Foreign Relations Committee.

PEACE TREATY WILL BE SIGNED

Bonar Law Encourages Parliament To Hope For The Best.

London, Dec. 8.—Bonar Law declared in the Commons today that there was little reason for doubt that the communications proceeding between the allied powers regarding the immediate ratification of the peace treaty would have a satisfactory issue.

NOTED ARTIST PASSES AWAY

FORMER RESIDENT OF OMEMEE

THAT VILLAGE MOURNS THE DEATH OF JUSTLY DISTINGUISHED SON

Omemee, Dec. 8.—William Albert Sherwood, O.S.A., A.R.C.A., an old Omemee boy and a well-known Toronto artist, died suddenly at 4.15 o'clock Friday morning in the General Hospital. Although Mr. Sherwood had been in ill-health for some time he did not enter the hospital until the afternoon prior to his death. At a late hour Thursday night, he appeared to be resting quietly, but after midnight his condition took sudden change for the worse and death came within a few hours. His brother, Rev. George Sherwooda, of Buffalo, N.Y., was at his bed-side when he died.

Mr. Sherwood was born in Omemee, Aug. 1st, 1859, and painted his first portrait at the age of 15 years. While still a young man he rose to prominence in Canadian art circles as a painter of portraits and Canadian genre subjects. The best known among the latter was "The Old Prospector" in the possession of the Ontario Government. "The Canadian Rancher," "The Canadian Backwoods Man," "The Mologist" and "The Negotiation," which later was purchased by the Gominion Government. Among his most successful portraits are those of Sir George W. Ross, Rev. Dr. Scadding, D. P. May, Lieut.-Col. A. E. Belcher, Alexander McLauchlan, the poet; Sir Aemilieus Irving and the Indian poetess, Pauline Johnson. Mr. Sherwood exhibited largely in Canada, Great Britain and the United States, in which countries his canvasses always drew individual attention. He was one of the founders of the Central School of Art and Design of Toronto; founded the Anglo-Saxon Union, of which he was president; was president of the Progressive Club of Toronto in 1898, and also of the Victoria Old Boys' Association. He was a councillor of the Canadian Ownership League and a frequent contributer of prose and poetry to the Canadian press. He was a member of the Ontario Society of Artists, an associate of the Royal Canadian Academy and a life member of the Canadian Institute.

Left to mourn the loss of such a talented member of the family, are two sisters who, with two brothers, Messrs. Harry and Joseph, reside in Omemee; the Rev. George Sherwood, of Buffalo, N.Y., and Mr. Thomas Sherwood, of Toronto.

The funeral will be held on Monday in Toronto, interment taking place at Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

GOV. WILL REDUCE COST OF MAINTENANCE

Toronto, Dec. 8.—Government House is to be retained as the official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor, but an endeavor is to be made to reduce the cost of maintenance. In a statement issued Saturday, Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General, stated that the Government had been advised that, while the funds received from the sale of the old Government House property were not ear-marked, the land upon which the present Government House is built is restricted by covenants to residential use for a period of 20 years from 1909. The Government, therefore, had come to the conclusion that under the circumstances the continuing of existing conditions was the only course left open to it. The matter will be discussed in the House next session, and in the meantime it is announced that in reducing the cost of maintenance the Government will have the active personal sympathy and co-operation of the Lieutenant-Governor.

ALLIES AGREE TO MODIFY SOME OF THE TERMS OF THE PROTOCOL

Question of Indemnity For the Sinking of Ships at Scapa Flow Referred to Hague Convention—Military Measures to Cease as Soon as Treaty Goes Into Effect.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Dec. 8.—The Allies have consented to modify some of the terms of the provocol, putting the peace treaty into effect, to which Germany had made objection. The clause providing for indemnity for the destruction of the German fleet at Scapa Flow is modified so as to refer to The Hague Tribunal, the question whether the delivery of the tonnage demanded will cripple Germany.

It is understood that the final paragraph of the protocol providing that even after the peace treaty has gone into effect the Allies might use military measures of coercion to ensure the execution of the treaty's terms has been eliminated entirely as also, has the clause relating to the evacuation of the Baltic provinces by the German troops.

Note Delivered Today.

The imputation of responsibility to Germany for the sinking of the ships at Scapa Flow is left in the protocol, according to best information obtainable. The note to the German plenipotentiaries regarding the signing of the protocol setting forth the Allies' position as indicated will be handed to Baron Von Lersner, head of the German mission, this afternoon.

Noske Refused to Sign.

London, Dec. 8.—Gustav Noske, Minister of Defense, is determined not to sign the peace protocol handed Germany by the Entente, and is resolved to recommend that the Government adopt his attitude, come what may, according to an interview, with Noske printed today.

"I cannot speak for the whole Government because it has not yet come to a decision," said Noske "but I shall recommend a refusal to sign the peace treaty protocol.

"The limit has long been reached. Let the allies occupy the country if they like. The peace now presented to us is not peace, but a prolongation of the war."

Plan to Destroy Germany.

"Were such a treaty accepted, the German nation would rise up and avenge itself upon the men who signed it," and it would be right. Great Britain and France are deliberately planning the destruction of Germany. All the confidence I ever had in the pledges of the allies is gone forever.

"By deceit and trickery the British and French Governments are working up opinion in their countries to cripple Germany still further beyond the crushing effect of the first treaty. We have yielded too often, and now must resist. Let the allies do what they please."

PLANS FOR BABIES' WELFARE WORK ARE DRAFTED BY THE PROMOTERS

A meeting composed of representatives from the Local Council of Women, and other important women's organizations, and a committee from the Peterborough Medical Society, was held last week to draft definite plans for the establishment of a welfare babies' clinic in our city.

Certain plans had already been made by the committee appointed to look into this work, and these were brought before the medical men present, and met with their approval.

The work will have for its object the conservation of child life.

It is proposed to secure the registration of all children in the city under four years of age.

Suitable premises have already been secured where the mothers will be asked to meet at different times, and where the general principles of caring for children will be taught. This will be done by lectures, by actual demonstrations and by sets of moving pictures.

Further, it is proposed to have a doctor, assisted by a trained nurse in attendance, to examine all children brought to the clinic. Those in need of medical care will be referred to their family physician.

This work has already been established in most cities of the size of Peterborough, and needs only to be understood by the citizens to meet with their approval and co-operation.

Canadians are beginning to waken up to the value of child life, to our nation, theoretically, but very little actual work has been done to ensure to the babies of this or other cities, the best possible care that can be given them.

The lack of proper care comes not from lack of love but from lack of knowledge, and this is true of mothers among all classes.

There are schools for the purpose of teaching those interested, how to successfully feed and house and care for farm animals and their young, but there are no schools where mothers or expectant mothers may go to learn how to best care for their young—the most helpless of all. Many mothers depend upon indiscriminate reading or upon advice given by other women, for as a rule, the advice of a doctor is sought only when the child becomes ill.

Further reports will be given as the work progresses.

WOMEN VOTERS' LEAGUE IN CIVIC POLITICS

MESDAMES MORRIS AND MEDD MAY RUN FOR SCHOOL BOARD

The Women Voters' League held a meeting on Thursday evening, Dec. 4th, when municipal politics occupied the attention of the members for the greater part of the time.

The league hopes to have short addresses from the aspirants for municipal office as soon as these have announced themselves.

It was decided that two women candidates could probably be elected to the Board of Education this year. Mrs. S. T. Medd and Mrs. W. R. Morris were asked to enter themselves as candidates for office on the Board, and every support was promised them.

It is expected that Mrs. Medd and Mrs. Morris will make an announcement in a few days.

WOULD TAX CHURCHES

Kingston, Dec. 8.— In the City Council meeting tonight, Alderman R. G. Armstrong will move that the land occupied by all secular buildings be taxed. He wants the Council to petition the Ontario Legislature to amend the municipal act in order that such land can be assessed. This would include the land occupied by all churches and the colleges, schools, hospitals and orphanages controlled by them.

WORKMEN FOR RAILWAY BOARD

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S PROMISE TO LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS AND FIREMEN

ENTITLED TO REPRESENTATION

DISPUTES BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOR MUST BE SETTLED PEACEABLY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 8.—Sir Robert Borden, addressing the annual meeting of the Canadian legislative board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers today, intimated the likelihood of the employes having representation on the managing board of the Dominion Government lines.

"We must give earnest attention to some means by which the employed shall have just representation in the executive administration of this system," he said.

Such proposal, he added, would have his sympathy. The Premier spoke of the necessity for devising some means by which the work of transportation would not be interrupted by the disputes between employers and employed. If between jealous and sometimes antagonistic nations the principle of settling disputes by peaceful means has been acknowledged and adopted, surely disputes between employers and employed can be investigated and adjusted by means other than those which may bring upon the whole people distress and suffering comparable to that entailed by war, he said.

LOCAL OPTION BILL IN BRITISH HOUSE

MEMBER FATHERS PROHIBITION MEASURE TO TAKE EFFECT IN 1923.

London, Dec. 8.—The text of a local prohibition bill, applying to England and Wales, has been made public. The measure will be introduced in the House as a private bill, whose author states that he has the backing of a small coterie of members.

The object of the bill is "to enable Parliamentary electors in prescribed areas by direct vote, to prohibit the issue within such areas of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and also the common sale or supply of such liquors in licensed premises, clubs or elsewhere.

The principal clause provides that during September, 1923, and in the same period in subsequent years, one tenth of the Parliamentary electors of any parish in a rural district or borough or ward thereof, in any urban district may address a written requisition to the borough, urban or district council, demanding a poll of the electors on the question of grant or issue of licenses to premises within the area for the sale, wholesale or retail of intoxicating liquors.

When the poll is decided for prohibition or against it, another poll may not be taken before the lapse of three years.

The bill is itnended to come into operation in 1923.

PETERBORO MAN FOUND DEAD

WAS LYING ACROSS HIS STORE FOR FORTY HOURS BEFORE HE WAS FOUND

The body of Robert Wright, formerly of Peterborough, and a pioneer rancher of the Gentanne district of the Bulky Valley, British Columbia, was found dead lying across the stove in his cabin. It was estimated that he had been dead about forty hours before he was found and the body was partly burned and partly frozen.

Thos. H. Field, a native of Galt, was killed in an auto accident at Dry Ridge, Kentucky.

MONDAY, DEC. 8, 1919.

WHERE THERE IS NO VISION.

"WHERE THERE IS no vision the people perish." That is how the Wise King of old expressed a great truth in a few words in his collection of proverbs. Related to present day conditions, the phrase might be rendered, "The city that has no ideals will never show progress, never attain anything worth while."

There is hope for Peterborough. The city has visions has lofty ideals. The Board of Trade is aiming high and the members of that organization are not men who dream in the shade. They toil in the sunlight. There is always hope for the temporal salvation and glory of a municipality or of individuals that have vision.

The Board of Trade aims at the election of model city officials, and that, too, without becoming, as a unit prominently active in civic politics. When the various classes in a community come to understand each other better there will be infinitely less of discord. That ideal can be reached only by education, a process which, unfortunately, requires time. The interest of no single element is supreme. General welfare depends upon co-operative action.

One of the best ideals cherished by the Board of Tarde is the ambition to make Peterborough a better place in which to live by improving the housing conditions and beautifying the surroundings of the people. There is a vast field for this endeavor. Perhaps there is no city in Ontario where Nature has been so lavish with her gifts. The natural advantages and location of the city are superb. But in a great measure Nature's gifts have been flouted and no attempt has been made to improve on the natural advantages with which the city abounds.

No man can live in sordid or even commonplace surroundings without having his temperament, his very moral nature, influenced to a degere by his environments. Improved housing accommodation and more refined outside conditions cannot fail to develop a better class of citizens. Good living conditions and a high standard of morality go hand in hand. The healthy man the one who is not the victim of sanitary defects easily possible of remedy, is the man to tie to.

A long step has been taken in advance, thanks to the initial move made by the Board of Trade. The City Council, at the request of that organization, has agreed to appoint a town planning commission of representative citizens who will work without pay. A program has been carefully mapped out. Citizens will be encouraged to clean up and beautify their premises. The public parks will be made ideal spots in which the people can seek recreation. Every natural advantage will be made the most of. The ideals set will eventually be maintained, and Peterborough will in time be made the model city of Ontario, model as to government, as to industrial and social conditions; in short, a desirable place in which to live and labor. Speed the day! The vision can be realized if all classes can forget their petty differences, their selfish strivings to advance their own interests, and help on this good work. Let all for the present at least, and for the purpose in view, regard Peterborough as the one and only place on earth that is worth considering.

Dr. E. E. Harvey is head of the committee of the Board of Trade that is charged with the task of town planning. No better man could be selected for the position. Dr. Harvey is a man of the kind of vision that saves the people. He has always identified himself with every good work that has ever been planned for the advancement of the city.

ELECTING POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

IT IS CERTAINLY a lame argument used by a contemporary in opposition to the idea of having the police commissioners elected by popular vote instead of holding office under the statute. The newspaper in question says:

> The work of a police department is different from that of any other municipal body, much as it is unpleasant work at best and work that would be impossible if the police were interfered with by aldermen or elected commissioners. Under such a condition of affairs, the department would be working under a constant handicap. John Smith, for instance, drives his motor car beyond the legal speed limit, and the traffic constable makes a note of the number of his car, and a summons is the result, with an elected commission practically controlled by the council. Mr. Smith, who has considerable interest politically, hustles to an alderman friend or one of the commission and asks them to intercede for him, and there is a telephone message to the chief of police suggesting that the case be dropped.

All of which is mere twaddle. With the commissioners elected, the aldermen would have no more say in the management of the police department than they have now, or than they have at present with the Utilities Commission. Imagine a member of the City Council approaching the chairman or the active manager of the later commission with a request that would be a gross interference with the authority of the commission.

If the police commissioners were elected, the chief of police would still have, or should have, the right to select the members of the force. This power should be given the department head who is responsible for the acts of his subordinates. The aldermen have no strings on the Utilities Commission, and they would have none over an elected police commission.

As The Review has stated before, advocating the election of the police commission does not reflect upon the integrity or efficiency of the gentlemen who at present compose the board. It is a principle for which the aldermen are contending, the right of the voters in a municipality to control their own affairs instead of being governed by the authorities in Toronto.

THE EVOLUTION OF SLANG.

"JOY RIDING" was a phrase which was coined by some master of words when the automobile came into general use, and certainly no expression in the English language could be found to so aptly describe the condition to which it applies. For years the phrase was regarded as a slang term, but now it has been adopted as a member of the English language household, and its legitimacy has been established beyond all question by its official recognition in the law courts of England.

The man who invents a machine to save labor is hailed as a benfactor of humanity. Why should not the man who enriches his native tongue by the invention of an expressive phrase be regarded in the same class as the inventor of a machine or the discoverer of a new island in the Arctic circle instead of being looked down upon by the super-conservative as a violator of an established rule of syntax?

SCHOOL TEACHERS' UNIONS.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

It is reported that ten thousand public school teachers in Ontario are soon to be organized into a teachers' union. Teachers' unions are in existence in the United States, and there seems to be work for them to do in securing improved conditions in life and living. It is a pity that in countries and among peoples professing to think so highly of education it should be necessary for teachers to resort to organized action in order to get a decent return for their services.

WOMEN'S WORK IN CITY PLANNING

That women, and particularly clubwomen, think of zoning particularly in terms of home building is indicated by the paper recently read by Madge Headley before the Englewood Women's Club of Chicago. She stressed this point and urged the women to take the initiative in order that better housing conditions might eventuate from the zoning plan. Introducing her subject, she said:

"Cities are growing, the bulk of our population live in them, and we must carefully consider the homes of the masses of the people—not your comfortable home or our apartment in a well maintained building—but the homes where one-fourth of the wage goes for rent and where home life is difficult. There is only one test of a house, a flat, an apartment: Is it a fit place for a child to grow up, a place which will make him a good citizen? There is only one test of a city: Are its children healthy, in body in mind, in character?

"So called property rights should have a lower value than the right of children to strong, healthy bodies, to healthy minds, to pride in themselves and their home city. A large part of the unrest which makes strikes, race riots, bolshevists, juvenile delinquency, comes from homes which are not homes.

"Men have left it to women for a long time to take care of the sick, the halt and the blind, to devise methods for dealing with juvenile delinquency, to keep the schools up to the mark, to foster and keep alive all the things which feed our souls. Now let us see what housing, incorporated in the zoning section of the city plans, will do to help make healthy children. The men will put it in the plan once they see the light. There are more renters and fewer home owners each year. Can we have a stable civilization, a healthy city growth, if this continues?

"In Englewood there are a large number of home owners, and a large proportion of families who like to rent an apartment and stay it in; that is, settled families, with an interest in the neighborhood, it churches, its schools, its recreations. It is really a city within a city, as are many other parts of the out-lying districts. A city plan and correct zoning can do much to stabilize the general good conditions. There are plague spots, which threaten the whole, but they can be confined. Many other parts of the city, especially those where our foreign born neighbors live, are not so fortunate. It will take not only zoning, but increased sanitary inspection and control to better conditions there. But every effort put on these districts will better the whole city."

At the close of her paper the speaker said: "The future city will provide homes, not perches in cliff dwellings. We shall work for health, not fight to stamp out disease. We shall have family life in the homes with its development of the child, its character building, and its intimacies. No longer will our children go to the streets to play and to learn the vicious side of life before they are ready to resist it. Our boys and girls will come back to the normal, sweet companionships which grow in home life—not learn from the dance hall, the poolroom, the street, habits and standards which do not fit them for good citizenship.

"It is a crucial time in the history of our nation. The home and family life are breaking down. We are not providing a substitute during the years of growth when children should have every protection. If there is a better place for children to grow up than in the home let us find it. But it is not likely that we shall do so and we must put every ounce of our energy, our training, our love for our country into the making of homes—not selfishly for ourselves—but for all the families of Chicago."

SOME EXERCISES SUGGESTED FOR SOUR DOUGHS

(Frank Crane in Chicago News)

1. A mirror is useful. Stand before a mirror. Think of all the people handsomer, richer and more famous than you. Distort features until you look as if you had swallowed a piece of bad fish.

2. Raise arms above head. Bend till fingers touch floor. This will squeeze the breath out of you. As breath is expelled say "D— the government."

3. Take six of your favorite catch phrases. Jiggle them until you can keep them all in the air at once. Try to avoid thought.

4. Draw map of England on barn door. Back off. Run and butt your head against it until exhausted. Hating England is essential in a complete Sour Ball.

5. Dry swim. Excellent for developing the nuisance muscles. Lie on kitchen floor and make motions, imagining you are swimming headed for Russia, the only land of liberty and joy, and away from the accursed bourgeois United States.

6. Crouch same as panther about to leap on prey. Repeat "capitalist class" until froth appears on lips.

7. Draw picture of some successful man who is minding his business, making money and looking contented. Draw it on punching bag. Haul off and lambaste it until your arm is sore again. Keep sore.

8. If you are tempted by unworthy thoughts (and we all have our moments of weakness and lapse into thinking this is a pretty good world after all, little children are happy, lovers gay, flowers still bloom and kittens chase their tails, use vertigo exercise, as follows: Turn head around rapidly until dizzy, stand on head until threatened with apoplexy, keep up until you don't know which way is north or what your name is.

9. Attend to diet. Go out in garden and eat worms. If you still feel decent, eat woolly worms.

10. Practice voice culture. Talk long and loud. Don't listen to the other fellow. Keep talking. In case of doubt, yell.

11. Never go to work feeling fine. Have assistant bash you over the head with a broom or a club until you feel abused, mad and snappy. Sour Balls should shun good humor.

12. Spend evening reading Russian novels and other literature of the gripe school. Drink vinegar, now that booze is scarce, until you get the cramps. Smoke only English mixture that takes the hide off your tongue.

13. As you go to sleep repeat the following, that your soul may sweetly sink into unconsciousness:

"I love rainy days. I want to see the hospitals full, I loathe respectability and religion, policemen and street car conductors. I hanker for revolution. I'm agin the government, whatever it is. What's the use? Whatever is, is wrong."

Try this if you want to be a Sour Ball. But who wants to be a Sour Ball?

SEEK EXPERIENCES OF SETTLERS IN CANADA

DEPARTMENT OF IMMIGRATION OFFERS PRIZE FOR BEST ACCOUNTS

In order that the Department of Immigration and Colonization may have at its command authentic accounts of the experiences of successful settlers in various parts of Canada, it has decided to offer cash prizes for letters on articles not exceeding two thousand words written by settlers in each of the nine Canadian provinces. The articles will be judged by a committee to be appointed by Hon. J. A. Calder, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, and should be mailed not later than February 14, 1920, to the director of publicity for the department. Three cash prizes will be given, one of $75, one of $50, and one of $25, in each of the nine provinces.

It is explained that he competition is not a literary contest, the official announcement stating that: "Literary style, correct spelling, etc., will not be considered essential. Tell your story in your own words." It is believed that the procuring of a number of graphic and truthful stories of how success has been won from the soil in all parts of the Dominion will do much to contribute to a future movement to Canada of the right class of settlers.

Full details of the competition are given on a poster hanging up in every post office throughout Canada.

HOME DISTILLING IS STOPPED IN DETROIT

REVENUE OFFICIALS ORDERED TO PUT AN END TO THE INDUSTRY

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 8.—The death knell of the "home brew" a product that has done yeoman duty since Michigan became dry, was sounded when John A. Grogan, internal revenue colector for the district, issued orders that all concerns dealing in the required ingredients immediately cease selling them.

The order terminates the existence of about sixty concerns in Detroit alone and a large number in other cities. According to federal authorities here the instructions to stop the activities of these concerns came from the federal department of Internal Revenue, which they declared, was surprised at the extent of the business in Michigan.

Many of the dealers, the federal officials say, advertised their product in national magazines and claimed they were immune from prosecution until January 1.

Miles standish, the gentleman who was foolish enough to commit his courtship to proxy, after surviving wars in Europe, the perils of the voyage of the Mayflower, and early conflicts between the Puritans and Indians, was drowned in a creek a man could jump over.

Aside from the courtship part of it, Miles had a modern parallel, an American who has jumped from half a dozen flying airplanes, sometimes a mile high; who has deliberately ridden motor cycles at race speed through open draw bridges; who had "stepped" from the top of the flatiron and the Bankers' Trust Building, in New York City, to the street below; who had permitted himself to be shot into the air in a steel skyrocket; who had jumped off the East River bridges until he who had gone up in a balloon and deliberately exploded it over his head. "BUNDLES WRAPPED TO FIT YOUR POCKET"

And small trifles, like the small wrapping of bundles, pays the Arcade big dividends, according to Mr. F. Ehrenreich, manager of the store.

"A man hates to carry a parcel," claims Ehrenreich. "I've noticed that whenever you wrap anything up for a man he invariably tries to stow it away somewhere in one of his numerous pockets. Sometimes he discovers that the package is too bulky for any of his suit pockets and he resorts to strategy by attempting to crumble or fold it up. Then he tries to insert it again, and, unless it's altogether too big, he generally gets away with his pet aversion.

"No man ever leaves this store with a parcel under his arm if we can help it. We always endeavor to make up the goods he buys into as compact a package as possible, and in nine times out of ten the customer is enabled to slip it into one of his pockets. They appreciate this little service and we believe that it has been the means of bringing quite a little trade into our store.

"A man will go out of his way to be accommodated in the way he likes, so the rule works out the same in this instance. Certainly the male spies never invented the shopping habit, because, as is well known, men won't enter a department store unless their furnishings aredisplayed right next to the door, and this peculiar trait applies equally to their dislike of carrying parcels in their arms if they can possibly get out of it by storing them away in hidden places.

"It seems to me that this was probably the reason why the pocket was invented, anyway!"

SAYING "FRESH PAINT" IN A NOVEL WAY

Seeing a store front a few days which was turned over to the painters reminds one of the resourcefulness of a clothing dealer in Mitchell, S.D., who refused to surrender unconditionally to the painters who were putting the new look on his store.

When these men were at the height of their work the store front looked far from inviting, with the result that men would walk by as quickly as they could, passing up the show windows. Noticing that habit, the clothier pulled from the back room one of his discarded dummies. On this he put an old suit, a hat and shoes.

"Here, Bart," he said to one of the painters "put a couple of stripes across this fellow's back. There, just where he would strike the side of the window."

Then he removed the dummy to the sidewalk and set him face to the window. At first glance it looked as if some careless person had backed against the painted woodwork and then turned to look in the windows. Soon a man came and stared and smiled at the misfortune of a fellow citizen. Then he saw that it was a dummy and smiled some more.

"It may not have sold goods," commented the clothier, "but it did say 'fresh paint' in a new way and caused a number to talk about the store."

EXPLANATIONS HELP INCREASE BANK'S BUSINESS

"Almost every day there are tips in the newspapers which the live advertising manager of a bank can turn into dollars and cents," said F. D. Conner, of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, recently in discussing the success of his newspaper advertising campaign.

"Too many banks," continued Mr. Conner, "rely upon the fact that they are the oldest or the largest institutions in the city or state, and let it go at that. They insist that their copy must be dignified, and they lean backward to preserve that attitude, while the experience of others can easily be made the guide posts to the road of success.

"Some time ago, for example, an old farmer was killed in a railroad accident not far from Chicago. Among other things, the papers stated that he had made a will many years ago, and after a diligent search it was found. Meanwhile many things had happened and the will was broken.

"That story gave me an inspiration to run an advertisement on behalf of our trust department. The headline was 'He Made a Will, But ——' and went on to tell the circumstances about the will that was hidden away and was out of date. A few days later an old gentleman came to the trust department with this advertisement in his hand. 'This,' he said, 'strikes me very forcibly, because I, too, am guilty.' The result was that his will was rewritten and our institution was named executor of an estate which involved a sum in excess of $500,000."

HOW WINDOWS OPEN TO MOVIE HOUSE

According to Albert Applegate proprietor of Applegate's Furniture store in Eugene, Ore., the fine interiors of the moving-picture scenes have their effect on the women who see them. "We used to hear that the desperado pictures caused many a wild young man to hit the rail," says Mr. Applegate "and we have suspected that the movie mustache of the hero has had its effect on the upper lip of young men. Now we know that there is a merchandising benefit to be derived from the beautiful scenes and that women's eyes are not altogether focused on the gowns of the heroines."

There is a moving-picture theatre next door, and its stairway runs up along the wall of the Applegate store. Considering this, he has cut in that wall two large oblong windows, each almost as long as the av- [illegible] lses of which strike the theatre patrons about the knees. Applegate leaves his interior lights on until almost midnight. This gives him a show window that includes his entire store. He hooks up by the use of picture show slides and about four newspaper insertions per week. And his business has grown from a low-water mark—when it was losing money—to a total of around $100,000, which he expects to hit this year.

FIND NO BEAUTY IN BILLBOARDS

This is the opinion of the League of Improvement Societies in Rhode Island, which has started a fight against the use of billboards. The organization proposes to take the matter up with the city council for a fight to the finish.

Plans for such a campaign were made at a recent meeting of the organization. The league has this to say regarding the billboards: "Use of this form of advertising during the war was recognized as necessary, but under present conditions is objectionable and altogether contrary to the purpose of numerous plans for beautifying city property."

WILL TAX EX-KAISER, AS DUTCH RESIDENT

PARLIAMENT OF HOLLAND DISCUSSES STATUS OF WILLIAM AS CITIZEN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Hague, Dec. 6. The Dutch Parliament yesterday discussed the question of the former Emperor William's permanent residence in Holland, in connection with the possibility of forcing him to pay income tax. In answer to a question the Minister of Finance said that if the former kaiser really had been permitted to buy a house at Doorn for a permanent residence, the Government would undoubtedly tax him as a resident of Holland.

English People Dislike Frame Houses Like Those Used in Canadian Cities

THE prejudice being exhibited in England toward frame houses seems curious to the Canadian mind. Not many frame houses are built now in the larger cities, because fire regulations and the high cost of lumber stand in the way. The severity of the winters makes brick or stone more substantial. But England has a climate that resembles the British Columbia coast, and in Vancouver, Victoria and other coast cities the frame residence is the regular thing. And in the hands of British Columbia builders, who are so familiar with timber and woodwork, they become things of beauty. The attempt to introduce frame dwellings in England does not arise from an excess of lumber, or cheapness of it, but simply because the materials for a sufficient number of brick or stone houses cannot be obtained. Army huts, tents, river boats and shacks are occupied by hundreds of thousands of people waiting for more houses. The Government housing plan contemplates the erection of at least 300,000 more dwellings, but like most Government plans, the scheme gets great advertising with little result.

Dr. Addison, Minister of Health, recently stated that in England 500,000 houses were required. Housing schemes provided for 40,000, and of these about 8,000 were being erected. It may be mentioned that in 1919 Toronto alone is building 2,600 new houses. Such slowness creates a demand for a substitute. The editor of the Spectator, J. St. Leo Strachey, advocates cottages of rammed earth, technically known as "pise en terre." Others are booming hollow concrete blocks. But the wooden house is most favored, and the newspapers have been conducting an education campaign. Wooden houses are rare, but not unknown. In Kent and Essex "weatherboard" houses have stood the test of a hundred years. The economic argument for them seems unanswerable. A "mill-cut" cottage can be erected at a cost of about $1,400, against $2,000 required for a small brick or stone house. In larger houses the cost would be from two-thirds to one-half that of brick houses. Dr. Addison objects to the scheme, however, because, he says, the "mill-cut houses are only four walls [illegible] with a roof clapped on [illegible] they are, in the end, only 6 per cent cheaper than substantial brick houses, and claims that the damp climate is against them. But British Columbia has a damp climate, and so has Norway, where frame houses abound. The fire risk is met there by having detached dwellings, located in the small towns and villages in such a way that risk is kept to a minimum.

A very substantial difficulty in the way is the obstruction offered by the local ordinances or "by-laws" in most districts. The requirements imposed by these by-laws are often absolutely prohibitive of the erection of any wooden houses. But the Ministry of Health has the power to supersede them by general regulations of its own, and it was announced a few days ago that steps are to be taken in this direction. The Ministry declares itself eager to investigate the whole question, and to that end it has accepted the offer of the Agent-General for British Columbia to send over a sample house, which is to be placed on public view, so that its advantages and disadvantages may be impartially weighed. In contrast with this is the offer of William F. Regan, once well known in the mining world, who undertakes to deliver in various English ports 60,000 American wooden houses within one year, at the rate of 5,000 every three weeks, from a given date, at prices ranging from £250 to £750 each. These, he says, will not be disreputable, cast-off, worn-out army huts, but artistic residences, furniture saving, labor saving, warm in winter, cool in summer, and fit for any man to occupy, be he a workingman or a capitalist.

As the situation is to-day, the question of the comparative merits of the wooden and the brick house is rapidly becoming irrevelant. The wooden house may be cheaper or dearer than the brick house; it may be less durable or more; it may run greater risks of being burned down or it may not; it may or may not be as comfortable as the house in which the Englishman has hitherto been accustomed to live. The great thing is that the wooden house is a house. Every other consideration is nowadays beside the point. It is no longer a question of the ideal place to live in. There are tens of thousands of people in England just now who would jump at the chance of getting a house of any kind or pattern. At the Manchester City Council recently it was declared that if the building of municipal houses proceeded only at the present rate it would be twenty years before the local building scheme was completed. The shortage affects the middle and working classes alike, and it extends all over the country.

"Wrang In His Heid."

A North countryman, charged with having set fire to a large hayrick, was defended on the ground that he was not altogether responsible for his actions, relates the Edinburgh Scotsman. One of the witnesses testified to the belief that the prisoner was "wrang in his heid." "Can you mention any occasion on which the prisoner behaved in a manner to warrant your statement?" he was asked by the learned counsel. "Yes," answered the witness. "Once at work he got half a crown too much for his wages an'—" "Well?" said the counsel, as the witness hesitated. "He took it back to th' manager," concluded the witness.

For the first time in its history the wives of the councillors will be invited to the Oxford county warden's dinner.

NO EXEMPTION FOR VETS.

Stratford, Dec. 8. — The council. Tax on Houses.

Stratford City Council Refuse To Lift sitting as a committee of the whole, met a deputation from the Great War Veterans' Association in regard to tax exemption for soldiers owning property. It was decided not to pass this bylaw, as such a scheme worked to the disadvantage of many householders not owning property and to the [illegible] of soldiers. A resolution was passed petitioning the Government to change the laws so as to take care of widows and others who are not householders, the government to assume the financial liability.

LICENSES ARE REQUIRED IN NEW YORK TO PUT CURB ON RENT PROFITEERING

Proposed Plan Will Prevent Trading in Leases and Will Give City a Club Over Landlords.

New York. Dec. 8.—The city can go no further in restraining rent profiteering, unless given some strong "legal club" to hold over the heads of the "gougers," Nathan Hirsch, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Rent Profiteering, told the Alderman le General Welfare Committee in urging favorable action on a proposed ordinance to license lessees of tenements and apartment.

The resolution presented by Alderman Clarence Y. Palitz, provides that licenses for all lessees be issued by the City Bureau of License wtih the [illegible] of the Health Department. The Mayor and other officials endorse the proposal, the alderman stated. The committee considered the subject after the hearing and announced that action had been postponed until next Friday. Considerable objection was offered to the wording of the resolution.

Ninety per-cent of the landlords are fair and do not seek to extort undue profits because of the housing shortage, but the ten per cent who for the most part are foreigners unable to read or write are exacting the last cent of profit. These men are professional traders and sell and resell their leases, each time adding about ten per cent. In one instance, a lease has been traded nine times, the committee was told. That would be impossible under the proposed ordinance, it was stated. Such a law as is proposed, while not curing all the rent ills, would have a restraining influence, Mr. Hirsch told the committee. He said:—

"I predict that unless something is done conditions will be worse next year. In some cases twenty persons are living where ten should live. The lessees are to blame. There is very little building going on now and rents will increase, and therefore, it is imperative that something be done whereby we can curb the rent profiteer.

"We have no right to fix the amount of rent a man may charge, but if he is licensed we can hold a club over his head by threatening him with the loss of his license. which would de prive him of the right to rent his property if he charges excessive rents. The ordinance that I am endorsing here is the only thing that I have yet seen that begins to deal with the situation."

Rev. Dr. R. G. Peever is Welcomed Back to His Former Charge by Large Congregations—He Urges the People to Give Christ the Preeminence.

As stated by the pastor, the anniversary services at George street Methodist church yesterday were wonderful for their inspiring messages and uplifting music. Rev. Dr. R. G. Peever was the preacher, and his former congregation thronged out in large numbers to hear him. At both morning and evening services the church was filled to capacity and the attendance at the Sabbath school in the afternoon, at which Dr. Peever delivered a brief message, reached a record mark of 573.

Evening Message.

In introducing his evening topic Dr. Peever paid tribute to the George street church as a rallying place of the young people. He stated that his message was for the individual man and woman and he chose for his topic the Pre-eminence of Christ. The text was taken from the first chapter of Collosians, the 18th verse,"And He is the lead of the Body, the Church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the preleminence."

"If this mesage would enter our souls and our social and business relations, there would be a great change," commenced, Dr. Peever. It is a direct challenge to place Jesus supreme in the life. There are many who give Jesus a place, a prominent place in their lives, but there are few who give Him the pre-eminence. It is a necessity today to have a living Christ, enthroned in the hearts of His people, not in a prominent place only but given the pre-eminence. That is the place revelation gives Jesus Christ. He is recognized by the Father as being pre-eminent in all things.

"I do not believe in an absentee Lord," declared the speaker. He believese in the great powers of God and that though the living spirit of His son, all things will take their proper place. Jesus Christ reveals the attitude of God toward humanity; an attitude of love and mercy. Whosoever is willing to put themselves in that place through penitence will find that God has the power to forgive.

This is a day of thoughtfulness. The great students of the world are devoting themselves to thought about the great problems of the day. But the redemptive power of God is revealed by the cross of Christ. Give Jesus Christ the pre-eminence in our hearts and all things will take their proper place.

God Revealed

All down through history men have been endeavoring to find out what God is. They have tried to reveal the nature of God through all sorts of forms, grotesque and awful. But when Jesus Christ came to earth, He was the revelation of the perfect God. "If any man shall enter in after Me, he shall be saved," was His message. The proof of God's redemptive power is shown in the willingness of Christ to save. It is through His pre-eminence that He reveals God.

If you wish to live as God wishes you to live, live as Jesus lived and give Him the pre-eminent place in your heart and spirit. When you crown Jesus sovereign and Lord of your spirit, you will live to please God. When a Christian believes and trusts in the sovereignty of the Lord Jesus Christ, he can face trial and adversity with courage.

And by Christ all things are held together. When civilization is so wracked isn't it edifying and strengthening to know that all things are held together by Him and through His redemptive power all things will turn out right? If the sovereignty of Christ is realized, men will not tremble. He is still guarding His kingdom among men.

And the belief that Christ's existence is because of sin, is false. Christ was behind all creation. He is the fundamental influence of this wonderful orderly universe.

Orderly Universe

Then Dr. Peever went on to illustrate the wonderful magnitude of the universe in which Jesus Christ is the dominating spirit. The milky way is the revealing of millions of the planets of God's universe, all in orderly and consistent array. The power of Christ is infinite.

And His pre-eminence is revealed in the unseen universe of the hearts of men. Although we cannot understand God's wisdom and understanding nor the mysteries of His spirit in our hearts, if we make Jesus Christ pre-eminent, make Him the sovereign power and captain of our lives, furnish Him with troops, our aspirations, endeavors and intelligence, He will send us out to do great and mighty services for His kingdom. God will honor the man or woman, boy or girl, who gives Him His proper place and will change the spirit of their home, surroundings and influence. Let us follow Jesus Christ through Gethsemane to Calvary if the need calls us there. Give Christ the pre-eminence in our souls and lives.

REV. PRINCIPAL FRASER PREACHES THE ANNIVERSARY SERMONS KNOX CHURCH

Dealt With the Life to Come in His Evening Discoures Excellent Musical Service Rendered by Local Orchestra and the Choir.

A very impressive service was held in Knox Presbyterian Church last night, commemorating the church's anniversary. A musical program was rendered. Rev. Principal D. J. Fraser, of Montreal Presbyterian College, preached on "Revelations of St. John." His earnest manner and his clear logical reasoning held the strict attention of his hearers, especially was this so in that part of his address where a comparison of the views of the average man before and after the war, on the ideas entertained of the life after the grave was made. Mr. Fraser contended that the average man has totally different ideas now to what he had before 1914. He claimed that the war had undoubtedly given every one a broader and wider outlook on the life everlasting, and entreated his hearers to remember the sacrifice of those who had fallen in action on the fields of Flanders that might should not triump over right and wound up his discourse with the quotation which is becoming so familiar and so real to all, "If ye break faith with us who lie 'neath the poppies, we shall not sleep in Flander's fields."

Mr. F. Whitehouse gave a very clever selection on the violin in "Hymns With Variations." Lloyd's "Te Deum" was rendered by Rev. J. A. McKenzie with violin accompaniment. A duet, "My Faith Looks up to Thee," sung by Miss Penrose and Mr. F. E. Walden, was received with great appreciation. The Knox Church choir are to be complimented on their clever rendering of "There Are No Shadows Yonder." Mrs Hughes, as soloist, rendered her part with admirable effect and the assistance rendered her by the choir was excellent.

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.20 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

DEGENERATE YOUTH WAS CHANGED FROM THIEF TO NORMAL BY SURGEON'S KNIFE

Richmond, Dec. 8.—How S. Dabney Crenshaw, Jr., former University of Virginia student, son of a high official of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company with headquarters in Richmond, and a grandson of the late General Cassiuc M. Clay, of Kentucky, former American Minister to Russia, was transformed from a person with criminal instincts to a perfectly normal being by an operation on his skull by Dr. William Sharpe, emminent New York surgeon, was described by Dr. B. R. Tucker, local nerve specialist and alienist. The explanation was made during habeas corpus proceedings in City Circuit court, which resulted in Crenshaw's discharge from the Southwestern hospital for the Criminal Insane at Marion, Va.

Crenshaw was committed to that institution last July, after being tried three times at Charlottesville, Va., for robbing the chemical laboratory at the University of Virginia, early in 1917, of a quantity of platinum and then burning the building in an effort to cover up the theft.

At each trial the jury failed to agree. The defence was that he was insane at the time of the commission of the crimes, but had since been restored to normal mentality by an operation on his skull.

Earlei Character Altered

Dr. Tucker testified in the proceedings that he considered the operation eminently successful in every respect, the whole character and attitude of the patient having undergone a marked change. When he first examined the patient, soon after the latter's arrest in 1917, he said, his pulse was far below normal, his blood presure never over 100 and his spinal pressure fully three times what it should have been. The patient showed many abnormal mental symptoms, non-appreciation of the crime he had committed and no affection for his family.

The alienist gave a technical description of the operation, which was performed in his hospital here, saying that the brain had been exposed and found in a diseased condition. Since the operation he had observed Crenshaw at his three trials and frequently at other times and had detected no trace of moral lapses or delinquencies.

"I consider his cure absolutely permanent and I now consider him a normal man," he declared.

Abnormal From Youth

Dr. E. H. Henderson, superintend- when he was sent to Marion and that tailing the history of the case, said that, from his early youth, Crenshaw was decidedly abnormal, suffering from excessive intracranial pressure which had led him to commit many thefts and other criminal acts.

It was brought out at the hearing that the two indictments against Crenshaw had been nolle prossed when he was sent to Mrion and that there was nothing of a legal character to cause him to be detained there

As Judge Scott entered the formal order granting him freedom, Crenshaw leaned over and kissed his mother, who was seated behind him

REV. DR. CHAFER AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

The Rev Dr. Chafer, who is conducting a week of meetings in St. Paul's Church, delivered two messages of great power at the services yesterday. He took for his general theme, both morning and evening, God's revelation of Himself in the cross of Christ. He spoke in the morning on the cross as the revelation of the love of God. Every moment of Christ's life on earth was a manifestation of God's love, but the event in that life through which, above all others, God's love was manifested, and His bosom unveiled was the death of Christ. His death is more than a moral example. It was the final answer to the great necessities and problems which sin imposed on the very heart of God. The eternal issue of sin was called into question at Calvary's Cross, and a sufficient substitute stood in the sinner's place until the grounds of condemnation were forever past and every righteous judgment of God was perfectly met. On the Cross of Infinite God bore upon His own breast the doom of those whom His own infinite love would save.

In the evening he spoke on the cross as the revelation of man's sin and of God's righteousness. Every human act in the crucifixion was a revelation of the sin of the human heart. The crown of it all was the act of one man, who took a spear and drove it into the heart of God In that act he was the representative of a fallen race. All who continue in sin "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame." The cross was also the declaration of the righteousness of God. God in the cross stepped down from His judgment throne and took into His own heart the very doom He had in righteousness imposed on sin. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." He can now be just and yet the justifier of them that believe. The death of Christ was the greatest possible thing that God could do for a lost world. If the sinner rejects what God has done for him the responsibility for his being lost rests wholly with himself. When he believes and accepts what God has done he is a saved soul, and God will not forsake him until perfected into the very image of His Son He sets Him in the eternal glory.

Dr. Chafer will speak every afternoon at three thirty o'clock and every evening at eight o'clock. The public are invited. These meetings are part of the Forward Movement in which all churches are taking part.

DEGENERATE YOUTH WAS CHANGED FROM THIEF TO NORMAL BY SURGEON'S KNIFE

Richmond, Dec. 8.—How S. Dabney Crenshaw, Jr., former University of Virginia student, son of a high official of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company with headquarters in Richmond, and a grandson of the late General Cassiuc M. Clay, of Kentucky, former American Minister to Russia, was transformed from a person with criminal instincts to a perfectly normal being by an operation on his skull by Dr. William Sharpe, emminent New York surgeon, was described by Dr. B. R. Tucker, local nerve specialist and alienist. The explanation was made during habeas corpus proceedings in City Circuit court, which resulted in Crenshaw's discharge from the Southwestern hospital for the Criminal Insane at Marion, Va.

Crenshaw was committed to that institution last July, after being tried three times at Charlottesville, Va., for robbing the chemical laboratory at the University of Virginia, early in 1917, of a quantity of platinum and then burning the building in an effort to cover up the theft.

At each trial the jury failed to agree. The defence was that he was insane at the time of the commission of the crimes, but had since been restored to normal mentality by an operation on his skull.

Earlei Character Altered

Dr. Tucker testified in the proceedings that he considered the operation eminently successful in every respect, the whole character and attitude of the patient having undergone a marked change. When he first examined the patient, soon after the latter's arrest in 1917, he said, his pulse was [illegible] below normal, his blood presure never over 100 and his spinal pressure fully three times what it should have been. The patient showed many abnormal mental symptoms, non-appreciation of the crime he had committed and no affection for his family.

The alienist gave a technical description of the operation, which was performed in his hospital here, saying that the brain had been exposed and found in a diseased condition. Since the operation he had observed Crenshaw at his three trials and frequently at other times and had detected no trace of moral lapses or delinquencies.

"I consider his cure absolutely permanent and I now consider him a normal man," he declared.

Abnormal From Youth

Dr. E. H. Henderson, superintend- when he was sent to Marion and that tailing the history of the case, said that, from his early youth, Crenshaw was decidedly abnormal, suffering from excessive intracranial pressure which had led him to commit many thefts and other criminal acts.

It was brought out at the hearing that the two indictments against Crenshaw had been nolle prossed when he was sent to Mrion and tha there was nothing of a legal character to cause him to be detained there.

As Judge Scott entered the formal order granting him freedom, Crenshaw leaned over and kissed his mother, who was seated behind him

REV. DR. CHAFER AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

The Rev. Dr. Chafer, who is conducting a week of meetings in St. Paul's Church, delivered two messages of great power at the services yesterday. He took for his general theme, both morning and evening, God's revelation of Himself in the cross of Christ. He spoke in the morning on the cross as the revelation of the love of God. Every moment of Christ's life on earth was a manifestation of God's love, but the act in that life through which, above all others, God's love was manifested, and His bosom unveiled was the death of Christ. His death is more than a moral example. It was the final answer to the great necessities and problems which sin imposed on the very heart of God. The eternal issue of sin was called into question at Calvary's Cross, and a sufficient substitute stood in the sinner's place until the grounds of condemnation were forever past and every righteous judgment of God was perfectly met. On the Cross of Infinite God bore upon His own breast the doom of those whom His own infinite love would save.

In the evening he spoke on the cross as the revelation of man's sin and of God's righteousness. Every human act in the crucifixion was a revelation of the sin of the human heart. The crown of it all was the act of one man, who took a spear and drove it into the heart of God. In that act he was the representative of a fallen race. All who continue in sin "crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put Him to an open shame." The cross was also the declaration of the righteousness of God. God in the cross stepped down from His judgment throne and took into His own heart the very doom He had in righteousness imposed on sin. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." He can now be just and yet the justifier of them that believe. The death of Christ was the greatest possible thing that God could do for a lost world. If the sinner rejects what God has done for him the responsibility for his being lost rests wholly with himself. When he believes and accepts what God has done he is a saved soul, and God will not forsake him until perfected into the very image of His Son He sets Him in the eternal glory.

Dr. Chafer will speak every afternoon at three thirty o'clock and every evening at eight o'clock. The public are invited. These meetings are part of the Forward Movement in which all churches are taking part.

ENGLISH PLAYS TO BE FEATURED AT GRAND UNDER NEW REGIME

Best British Companies Now Before the Public Will Be Brought to Peterborough—American Drama, Spoken or Silent, to be Relegated to the Background.

The recent sale of the Grand Opera House to the Trans-Canada Theatres, Limited, means vastly more to the patrons of the drama than a change of ownership. Mr. Harry Dahn, the poular manager, is to be retained in that position, an announcement that will please every man or woman who has ever attended a performance at the Grand. Under his direction the management has been perfection itself.

The program, as well as the ownership, however, is to be changed. English plays, presented by the best companies before the public, are to be featured. The high-class drama only is to be recognized. The legitimate, in the highest sense of that [illegible], is to come into its own.

It must be admitted that under the old order, that now appears to be passing, the theatres and picture [illegible] of Canada were becoming thoroughly Americanised. Plays dealing with subjects across the border, films of the same tenor, have enjoyed an almost uninterrupted run, and their influence upon the public was becoming more and more apparent. If the object of the drama, silent or spoken, is education, then that object can best be attained if British subjects predominate on the [illegible].

Military plays beyond all question will hold a prominent place on the boards for years to come, plays that are based on incidents in the late [illegible]. This is certainly a chapter in the history of the world that should be taught from the British rather than from the American viewpoint.

The change of bill referred to has already taken effect. English plays presented by bona fide English companies have already been staged and more are advertised. There will be variety and every form of entertainment; programs to suit all tastes will be provided.

One of the best plays ever staged at the Grand was "The Luck of the Navy," which was presented two days last week. There was nothing disappointing about the performance except the attendance, but this showed an encouraging increase at each presentation. Saturday night a fair-sized house greeted the performance and appreciation of the excellent work of the entire company was not lacking. Patriotism is nurtured by such entertainments. Those who witness them are likely to leave the theatre prouder than ever that they live in a country which forms a part of the British Empire.

The play opened with a thrilling picture of a section of the British navy engaged with a German Zeppelin, which is located by searchlight and brought down in flames, an admirable introduction that rivets the interest of the audience in what is to follow. The plot of the play is fascinating, dealing as it does with the intrigues of German spies operating in England, camouflaged in the uniforms of Belgian and British officers But the Luck of the Navy is supreme and the plotters come to grief.

The Gallo English Opera Company will be at the Grand Wednesday and Thursday, and on the latter day a special matinee performance will be given. The company consists of one hundred artists of fame with a chorus of fifty voices and an orchestra of twenty pieces. "The Mikado," "Pinafore" and the "Chimes of Normandy" will be presented, famous and popular operas revived. Peterborough theatregoers are for the coming season assured the highest class of entertainment ever offered in this city.

JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS TELLS WHAT KILLED OPERA OF TWENTY YEARS AGO

(By a Press Agent.)

When the first felicitations were over, and everybody had expressed himself on the beastly weather and what a darned shame it was that pork chops were getting to be too costly even for actors, I felt that Jefferson De Angelis was in sufficiently good humor to explain why the good old-fashioned comic opera has taken so many years to come back.

Twenty years or so ago Mr. De Angelis gambolled freely with the chief comedy roles in the McCaull Opera Company—opera that was built on substantial lines with big dramatic moments thrown in. It was opera in those days, light, perhaps, but still opera. "What killed the fine old operatic organizations of twenty years ago—the Bostonians and the McCaull's?" I asked

Mr. De Angelis threw the whole blame for the dearth of real comic opera during the past several years upon the public. "It's no use to deny that for some time light musical entertainment did not move forward. I wouldn't presume to say that the public taste deteriorated, but it certainly for a while slipped on the ice. Of course, had there been any public demand during this period for the class of light opera that was so popular in the good old days, the present reviving interest in these splendid works would have occurred long ere this. It looks, however, from the success with which the Gallo English Opera Company, which opens at the Grand tomorrow, is meeting everywhere, that real comic opera is decidedly back to stay."

Like so many of our prominent playerfolk, Mr. De Angelis was born in California, but he is modest about that, and ventured the opinion that his own observation had taught him that actors can be born anywhere. Perhaps he feels that way about it, because his early days on the stage in California were not overcrowded with prosperity.

Now, you wouldn't credit the average comedian with possessing more than passing courage, but Mr. De Angelis put himself in the heavyweight class of fighters for glory and reward when he told us about his tour of the world with a dramatic company that consisted of a bunch of manuscripts and a few actors, of which he and his sister passed themselves off as stars. He left San Francisco full of hope, and returned in two years over-running with joy at the thought that he was able to get home at all. Just listen as he tells it:

"I was determined to get rich or bust, and the only reason I didn't do the latter was because I didn't have enough of anything worth while to bust with. Australia looked good, and we didn't bother to take along any scenery; we set sail for Sydney. Inasmuch as we had embarked upon this tour without any pocket money, and as Australians were evidently poor theatregoers that season, we promptly collapsed on our first stop—Sydney. The venture proved a failure almost at the start, which was most provoking. If we had lacked nerve, I doubt if we would ever have reached home again.

"While pondering gloomily over our distress I met an actor-manager almost as destitute as myself, and we agreed that the only solution of our troubles lay in combining forces and touring Queensland, on the opposite coast of Australia. We finally succeeded in borrowing enough money to carry us to the first stand on the tour, and arrived there, playing to bad business and leaving with still no money. By using every effort that human engenuity and desperation could invent, we finally reached the coast, no better off then when we started on the tour. In fact, we were in more desperate straits than ever, as we had gotten every penny we could out of the territory, and there was no possibility of retracing our steps. We faced the unhappy problem with as much philosophy as we could command. We were stranded with the ocean on one side and the grim bush on the other.

"When we were all in the deepest depths of despair, fate threw a rugged old sea captain in our path, and he, learning of our predicament, offered to give us credit for passage to China on his sailing vessel, allowing us to repay him when we secured sufficient funds. This literally saved our lives.

"He took us to Honk Kong, his only security being two old shotguns and a diamond ring belonging to one of the ladies of the troupe, the total value being about $180.

"In China we found the first ray of sunshine. The wheel of fortune turned in our favor, and we remained there three months, proving a big success professionally and socially. Thus encouraged we decided to venture farther, and, accordingly, went from that country to Singapore and on through India. For a while fortune continued to smile upon us, but after six months of it we were compelled, by the breaking out of cholera, to leave the country suddenly, leaving everything behind. Not profiting by our former hardships, we had been living on the best in the land, and consequently had very little money left. With our remaining funds, we hired a small sailing vessel and set out for Mauritius. We were poorly equipped for such a trip and you may be sure that with storms and calms and many other varieties of rough weather we enjoyed some unspeakable hardships. Gosh, it was awful!

"But we were repaid for our sufferings by finding ourselves sailing into a friendly port. Those good people of Mauritius were hungry for any kind of a show—and we gave it to them.

"At this time the Gilbert and Sullivan operas were having a great run of poularity in London, and as a third of the people were English we decided to give them the real thing. One of the members of our company had several scores of opera and we produced them, without chorus. When we had to have a chorus we drew on the population and the regimental band. We managed to spend three months on the island, and with our pockets filled with money and our hopes high we sailed for South Africa. We were esuccessful there, though, especially in the diamond country.

"It was here that Barney Barnato, the diamond king—only he wasn't a diamond king in those days—joined our troupe and tried to be an actor. He was so bad that we dropped him and urged him to return to labor better suited to his talents.

"We started for home over the same route we had just travelled, and, with sweet memories of our good fortune in Mauritius, we returned there for a second engagement, only to find that another opera company was playing there and had a long lease on the opera house. We finally got passage to Ceylon, and after playing in Bombay, Shanghai several Japanese towns, Hong Kong, Manila and Honolulu, we landed once more in San Francisco. Was the trip prosperous? My sole possession was a wife and family acquired on the way, and $20."

Mr. De Angelis confessed that after that trip no tour of one night stands had any terros for him. But if you watch close you will observe that nowadays he sticks pretty close to Broadway shows that confine their operations to the large cities.

PIRATES IN PETTICOATS.

Only Two of Them Recorded In World's History.

There have been only two women pirates — Anne Bonney and Mary Read, who were captured in the Caribbean Sea a little over a century ago and charged with "having piratical tendencies," says Tit-Bits.

At her trial Anne Bonney confessed her reason for becoming a pirate. The daughter of a Carolina planter, she was disowned by her father for marrying a common sailor. After the elopement and marriage—she ran away dressed in male attire—she discovered that her husband was a pirate, and decided to join him in his adventures.

From her childhood days the garb of man had always had a fascination for her, and when she joined her husband in his piratical voyage she donned the full dress of the bold buccaneer.

None but her husband was aware of her sex or identity. She took rank above her men comrades and obtained a high reputation for courage.

The manner in which she met Mary Read, the only other woman pirate known to history, is curious in the extreme and makes fascinating reading. Mary Read was on another pirate ship, and, as often happens, the two came to blows on the open sea

After a terrific combat the ship on which Anne Bonney was sailing admitted defeat, and among the boarders was Mary Read.

Although at first each was ignorant of the sex of the other, the two female pirates became fast friends They only found each other out when Mary Read began to fall in love with Anne Bonney's husband.

Even this, however, did not impair the mutual feelings of friendliness, for Mary Read soon married another man who was also a pirate.

Curiously enough the two women became widows at the same time; this was during an engagement when the ship flying the skull and crossbones had perforce to flee before one of his Britannic Majesty's schooners.

The piratical careers of these women plunderers ended in an engagement with a British ship, which went disastrously against them. Mary Read died in prison, and Anne Bonney, who had several people to plead for her, was restored to her family.

Why We Must Have Sugar.

From the earliest times sugar formed a large portion of man's food.

Negroes and other intabitants of tropical countries live largely on plantains, mangoes, dates, breadfruit, cocoanuts, and other fruits, which all contain a considerable percentage of sweetness.

Sugar, as such, is not to be purchased in a Central African village, but the people do not need it, for they have fruit all the year round, and the children have sugar cane to suck or the sweet stalks of the maize plant to chew.

Here, in the temperate zone, fruits are less plentiful, or, rather, they are plentiful during only three months out of the twelve, and we live on seeds rather than fruits. Wheat, barley, oats, rice, maize, and millets are the principal food stuffs of the human race in our latitudes. And our chief root food, the potato, is starchy, not sugary.

Now, races that have to go without sugar, such as the Samoyedes or Eskimo, are almost invariably stunted. We ourselves and nearly all North Europeans were small people until supplies of sugar began to reach us. In the forty years between 1860 and 1900 Great Britain's consumption of sugar trebled, and those were just the years in which the height and weight of our people, as well as their general health, improved most wonderfully.

Pass Along Inspiring Words.

Miss Etta V. Leighton, civic secretary of the National Security league, has started a "Me and You" lip to lip, American propagnnda. In this the plan is that for every Hun lie uttered there shall be spoken an American truth. The truths are embodied in slogans taken from President Wilson's speeches, General Pershing's messages, and from literature sent out by the committee on public information, the National Security league and other organizations.

Miss Leighton is also advising club women, teachers, and other groups to write the slogans on slips of paper and to inclose them in all letters sent to France and Italy, these slogans to be written in the language of the country for which they are intended, so that they can be handed to soldiers and civilians.

New President Every Year.

In Switzerland, where many of the kings of old Europe have taken refuge, the people elect a new President each year in December. This year the name of the President is M. Gustave Ador. During the year he holds office M. Ador is known as the Swiss President. A citizen of Switzerland must serve as President when called upon by the people, but he cannot be chosen a second time.

Set a Fashion.

JAKE SOLOMAN, Proprietor

Georges Carpentier stands a shade ver six feet in height, was born arly in 1894. and is, therefore, a little more than twentyfive years old. fighter of modern times has had ch a varied and peculiar career; al his rise to fame was by no meteoric, neither was it due any fluke. The progress was by ey stages, for he has successfully ld the flyweight, bantamweight, therweight, lightweight, welter ight, middleweight and heavy ight championships of France and at is of still more importance, he held the welter, middle and heavy ight championships of Europe. In d, just prior to the war he struck t in a new direction. Gunboat mith, of the United States. the man o torpedoed Billy Wells at Mad n Square Garden, was coaxed to ndon by an enterprising promoter d matched against Carpentier. It a matter of history that Carpentier n on a foul.

As far back as 1907, when he was rteen years o'd, Carpentier, who n weighed 98 pounds, began to ke ring history, for it was then won his flyweight championship. was a year or so afterwards that r. Lucas, an authority on boxing, ote that France possessed a boxer o would yet startle the world. In 10, when he was sixteen, he gain a decision over young Warner and on afterward beat Wally Pickard eight rounds, but was beaten on nts by young Shine at Liege a lit later When he was nearing sev Carpentier met another set when he was beaten by Young owball in four rounds.

In July 1911, Carpentier lost to the xie Kid. but a little more than a ar later knocked out Jim Sullivan the European championship. Two ockouts over Bombardier Wells, last one only lasting a round, are the credit of the Frenchman. In 14 Joe Janette won over Carpen r on points, and the bout was re rkable for the fact that in the t round Carpentier knocked out giant negro flat on his back with blow on the jaw

Much as the Frenchmen admire rpentier as a boxer. he is still more ed as a native son and a pa ot. When the war broke out he one of the first to jump to the fence of the colors. and he chose ation, one of the most perilous of branches of the army. At the time was the possessor of a bank ac nt of over $200,000, every cent which he earned from boxing uts and exhibitions. yet a few onths ago he was not worth a cent. subscribed to everything floated his government and addition made ations whenever the money was st needed and whenever he could lp the fighting men at the front. was also generous to American Englishmen.

All through the war Carpentier as good for an exhibition for the ldiers and never asked nor would accept a franc for his services. and time again he flew from e firing line. and often after a rtie over the German lines, to ex hit for the amusement of the sol ers.

As an aviator Carpentier was absolutely fearless. For fully three years he was constantly on the job, and the fact that he has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre and the military Medal is proof enough that he was a flyer of the first rank. The latter distinction was conferred on Carpentier in 1917 when Douaumont was captured, and for fully sixteen months afterward not a week passed but the boxer was mentioned for bravery in the despatches. On the firing line he knew no fear, and in refering to his work the "Order of the Day" once said:—"This aviator shows great bravery and never returns without accomplishing his mission and often with his machine damaged by projectiles. He has never hesitated to fly at a low elevation over enemy positions in order to regulate with accuracy our artillery fire."

CARPENTIER-BECKETT FIGHT

(New York Herald.)

Ring history was made in the High Holborn Stadium, London, last night when, in the presence of our fellow New Yorker the Prince of Wales, the nobility and gentry of Great Britain, the sporting men of London and a representative group of Americans, Georges Carpentier—a French soldier lately with the colors — won the heavyweight championship of Europe by knocking out the champion of England in the first round.

There was a time when persons of the English speaking races thought—bless their simple hearts—that whereas a Frenchman might be superb with a duelling sword or pistol in his hand, when it came to the manly art of John L. Sullivan and Bob Fitzsimmons he simply was not in it. At any rate, every schoolboy knew that a son of France could not do anything unless, in rough and tumble fashion, he was allowed to use his feet as well as his fists. Thus are delusions destroyed!

Our greatest men, from Lord Byron, with his limp, to Theodore Roosevelt, loved the excitement of the roped arena. In literature written in English alone has boxing been glorified. George Meredith, no less, gave the finest description of a bare fist fight in the open air in one of his novels. George Borrow, author of "The Bible in Spain, was responsible for an acount of a royal rare set-to, without intermissions, that would stir the blood of an anchorite, while in "Tom Brown at Rugby" is the classical battle of the school playground.

But the glory is departed, and an exclusive Anglo-Saxon, American and Irish occupation has become that of Gaul as well.

Mr. Dempsey, holder of the world's championship, now has come to reflect on the benefit that may be derived by a professional pugilist from active service at the battlefront.

Vive Carpentier!

Men have faith in what they believe only when they want to believe it.

SOME GENTLEMEN WHO SHOULD HAVE JOINED THE PUGILISTS

George Lytton was considered as good as any of them, and he was willing to tackle anybody for the sport of seeing how good he was. He was a great favorite with the professional boxers and in the early days he boxed with all the best men in the country and generally held his own. And since he boxed merely for the exercise and did not train regularly he was wonderful.

Two of the best bouts I ever saw were between Lytton and Kid McCoy and Frank Childs, then colored heavy weight champion. Many a time I have seen championship contests where there was much less action.

After Dr. Pine beat Swift at the Chicago Athletic Club (the bout was in private in George Dawson's room and only three on a side were allowed in the room), Pine and Lytton gave a private exhibition in the old Hub building and honors were even. Both displayed wonderful cleverness and both hit hard and often. Parson Davies was present that day and remarked that both the gentlemen were real champions.

Stories of "Sport" Herrmann.

A few days ago a newspaper called attention to "Sport" Herrmann licking a scalper. The scalper is lucky that he got off with a licking. Herrmann is a fellow who, if he had followed the game, could have licked his weight in wildcats. I know what I am talking about. Away back in 1898 I ran a big show at Tattersalls and I was compelled to do a lot of advertising.

In those days a great deal of bill poster sniping was going on and the fellow that got the best showing was the king. Well, I had my eye on "Sport" Hermann, then a raw bone circus guy, and I approached him and asked him if he would do a little billing for me.

At the time he was through with the circus work and had closed a contract to go with a theatre. I told him that I wanted an advertising agent and would furnish the paper and the money and he should be the boss and if he got in trouble I would stick with him. He took the job. Did he deliver? I should say he did For three days before the show was to be pulled off it rained cats and dogs, and it was almost useless to post paper, for it was immediately washed off.

"Sport" Could—and Did.

"Sport," said I, "can't you cover the empty store windows in the loop?"

"Will you stand the consequences?" demanded "Sport."

"Sure thing," was my reply, "get a gang and go to it."

The morning of the show the town was flooded with paper. He put up 5,000 one-sheets alone in the loop, covering every empty store window and also a lot that were rented. For a week we were busy answering complaints from owners and landlords. Suits were started and we had plenty of trouble, but we got what we went after, and were perfectly satisfied. "Sport" was pinched seven times for licking fellows that night, and then and there I made up my mind that he was a gamester from the flag fall.

Billy Stift, Joe Choynski, Tommy Ryan, Frank Childs and Bob Armstrong always liked to get "Sport" to exercise where they were training because he was aggressive, game and rough, and he gave them real work.

Why "Sport" Didn't Quit.

I saw him box one day after Billy Stift had sent in one of his famous man killers amidships, and "Sport's" eyes were glassy and his knees shook. It looked as if he would take the count, but he went after Stift and finally clinched and came around all right. Stift asked him why he didn't holler.

"Well," said Sport. "I couldn't talk and so I had to keep going." I boxed him once and he swung his right and landed flush on my jaw. I didn't drop, but my neck stretched about a foot. We finished the round and I asked him what he had in his love. He took off the mitts and I discovered he had a crooked finger and when he landed on my jaw he knocked out one of my jaw teeth clean as a whistle. He thought it was the best joke ever. I couldn't see the joke, but I was perfectly satisfied that he could punch and many times later we mixed matters, each trying to land another tooth. We never succeeded, so he won finally, one up. I have often regretted that "Sport" Hermann never boxed professionally, for had he done so he would no doubt have been at the head of the heavy weight class.

STRIKE LEADERS GO TO INDIANAPOLIS

EVERY INDICATION THAT COAL MINE TROUBLE IS NEAR SETTLEMENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Dec. 8.—It was learned that the proposal to settle the coal strike came from President Wilson himself and was in the form of a memorandum written by him.

Phillip Murray, president of District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, will leave Pittsbur gtonight for Indianapolis with seventeen other members of the scale committee to take part in the conference which Mr. Murray said he believed would end the coal strike. Mr. Murray today received a telegram from John L. Lewis containing the information that he had tentatively accepted the propositon made in Washington Saturday night and ordering the committee to be in Indianapolis by tomorrow.

G. A. GILLESPIE WAS ELECTED A DIRECTOR

ONTARIO CREAMERYMEN'S ASSOCIATION DISCUSS GENERAL DAIRY CONDITIONS

Mr. G. A. Gillespie has had the honor to be elected a director of the Ontario Creamery Men's Asociation now in session at Toronto.

The other officers elected were: President J. A. McFeeters, Toronto; 1st. Vice-President, Mack Waddell, Strathroy; 2nd. Vice-President. R. M. Player, Walkerton; Secretary-Treasurer, H. S. Johnson, Lindsay.

Mr. Gillespie's associates on the board of directors will be: E. E. Patterson, Brooklin, Ont., F. E. Keys, Elmira, and R. L. Hefler, St. Catharines.

The sitting of the association has resolved itself largely into a round table discussion, membersexchanging ideas on the subjects of quality, cost of production and marketing in a more or less confidential way. The publication of an article in a local paper stating that Ontario butter was inferior to that from other provinces, notably Alberta and Quebec, caused considerable dissatisfaction, especially in consideration of the position gained at the Toronto Exhibition this year when Ontario butter was judged superior.

The view that while a quantity of poor butter was undobtedly produced by some Ontario creameries in spite of this no province turned out so much good butter, appeared to be the general one. Attention was also drawn to the fact that a great deal of educational work was being done among the butter-makers of the province, and this was undoubtedly having good results in raising the standard.

A resolutinon was pased approving the method employed by the Ontario Government, in grading butter, and expressing confidence in the officials carrying on the work and urging that it be continued. The President, in his address, regretted the lack of co-operation between the departments of the Provincial and Dominion Governments. He emphasized the value of the conference of butter manufacturers of Eastern Ontario last year and hoped that such conferences would be held in both the Eastern and Western dairy schools this year. He expressed the hope also that the cream stations of Western Ontario would not be passed to the Eastern counties.

ENGINEERS HOLD INSTRUCTIVE SESSION

W. H. Smith, Hydro Superintendent for Central Ontario, Delivers Address at Empress Saturday Night.

A very enjoyable meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada took place in the Empress Hotel on Saturday night, when Mr. W. H. Smith, of Belleville, superintendent, Central Ontario Hydro-electric Power System, assisted by Mr. G. Blackwell gave a very interesting and instructive address on the Hydro-electric system in Central Ontario. Mr. Smith stated that the system serves the territory approximately included between Whitby and Kingston, including Prince Edward County on the south and Fenelon Falls and Tweed on the north. Before 1916 this area was served by the Electric Power Co., which was started by Messrs. Smith, Kerry and Chase, in 1908 and 1909, when they built No. 11 power house at Campbellford to feed the Deloro Mining and Reduction Co.

The system developed very rapidly in 1911 and 1912, taking in the Peterborough Light and Power Co., the old Auburn Power Co. with its contract with the Quaker Oats Co., and also the Trenton Electric and Water Co. at Trenton, and all their lines. By the end of 1913 there were seven power houses operating in parrallel and feeding into a system of 250 miles of 44,000 volt transmission line.

The generating stations are all Hydro-electric developed along the Trent Valley Canal, the greater number being on the Trent River, which are numbered to correspond with the number of the dams along the canal.

The operation of the system is under the direction of the load despatcher at Belleville. It is his duty to see that there are sufficient generators in service to carry the load, and to maintain the proper distribution of load and excitation between the various power houses. In the case of trouble he [illegible] the necessary switching and gives all clearance for work on the lines.

The population served by this system runs well over 100,000 and the industries served include plants for the manufacture of chemicals, automobiles, Portland cement, rubber goods, ore reduction, wood pulp, crushed stone, and the various industries found in the different towns.

Mr. Smith then went on to explain the situation of the various power houses and how each one was operated. After his lecture technical questions were asked by the different members of the club, to which Mr. Smith made satisfactory replies.

It was then moved and seconded that a vote of thanks be tendered Mr. Smith and Mr. Blackwell, which motion was heartily carried. Mr. G. Reid Munro, as president of the club, then made the suggestion that the Board of Trade assembly room be the meeting place of the club in the future. The suggestion was adopted. A screen for lantern slides is to be erected in the Board of Trade room for the club with suitable electric appliances.

Major Miller was then welcomed to the club and to Peterborough. Major Miller will be connected with the Trent Valley Canal.

The following letter from Mr. Ryerson Ritchie was then read to the members by Mr. Munro:

"My Dear Mr. Munro,—

"The hearty congratuations and cordialy good wishes of the Board of Trade are extended to the Engineers' Club upon its affiliation with the Engineering Institute of Canada. Your society has already rendered generous and valuable service to this community, and it is most gratifying to note that ,aside from your primary professional interest, your study and deliberation are to be mainly centered upon the civic and industrial development of our city. May we not now invite your attention to the major problem of that development.

"In co-operation with the city administration this Board has become increasingly interested in the problem of water power and available electric energy for industrial use. Of late years incidents have occurred to cause some anxiety, but now we appear to be confronted with a situation that threatens to weaken the economic advantage nature has given us and which is vital to the city's manufacturing expansion. This Board and indeed the whole community will be under special obligation to your society if you will survey the whole situation; indicate Peterborough's commercial power zone, what the local consumption of electric energy is, what is distributed beyond this zone, and the maximum of power available within it.

"The city administration and this Board is negotiating with some important British and American industries, which, if located here, would add materially to Peterborough's prestige as a centre of specialized industry, estimate the electric energy required by these industries at approximately 28,000 horse power. Of course Peterborough should be able to answer that question in the affirmative.

"Thanking you in advance for your interest and co-operation, I am

"Yours respectfully,
"RYERSON RITCHIE,

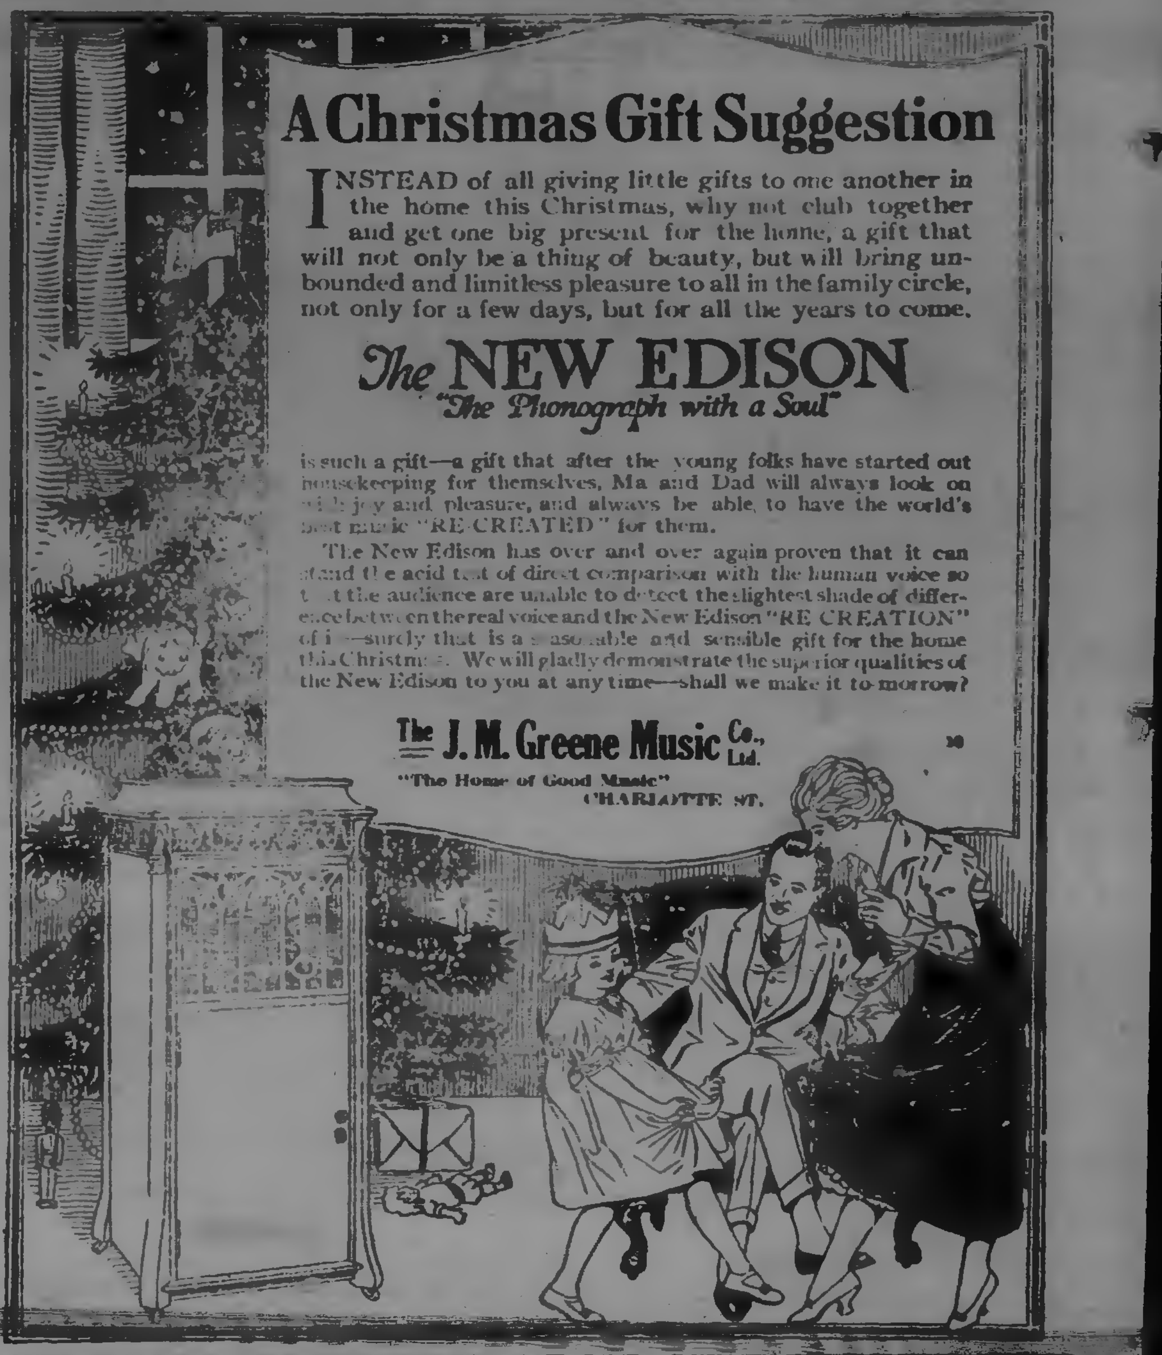
SANITARY INSPECTOR GROWING ACTIVE

NOW USES THE FORCE OF THE LAW TO ENFORCE HIS ORDERS FOR CLEANLINESS

Mr. C. L. Stapleton, Sanitary Inspector, is making very active endeavors to have his presence felt for the sanitary betterment of the city. At police court this morning, J. T. O'Connell was ordered to pay $3.10 costs for a charge laid by the sanitary inspector against him, to which he pleaded guilty. He was charged with an outhouse on property owned by him, 439 Park street, without the permission of the Board of Health, contrary to the city by-law.

Abraham Lowe was called on to pay $3,10 costs for filling a cellar window of 217 Hunter street with common manure. There is no glass in this window and the owner took this method of keeping out the frost. The sanitary inspector ordered the stuff to be removed, but as this was not done, court proceedings were adopted.

This case should be taken as a direct and forcible warning that the sanitary inspector is going to have proper conditions in the city, even if he is forced to use law courts to carry out his orders.



A Christmas Gift Suggestion

INSTEAD of all giving little gifts to one another in the home this Christmas, why not club together and get one big present for the home, a gift that will not only be a thing of beauty, but will bring unbounded and limitless pleasure to all in the family circle, not only for a few days, but for all the years to come.

The NEW EDISON

is such a gift—a gift that after the young folks have started out housekeeping for themselves, Ma and Dad will always look on with joy and pleasure, and always be able to have the world's best music "RE-CREATED" for them.

The New Edison has over and over again proven that it can stand the acid test of direct comparison with the human voice so that the audience are unable to detect the slightest shade of difference between the real voice and the New Edison "RE CREATION" of it—surely that is a seasonable and sensible gift for the home this Christmas. We will gladly demonstrate the superior qualities of the New Edison to you at any time—shall we make it to-morrow?

SCOTLAND'S NATIONAL DISH

Recipe for Making Haggis, the Food Immortalized by Burns

The Scotchmen of the city, banded together in the Caledonia Society, announce that they will celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns by giving a haggis supper. Scotland's national poet and national dish will thus alike be honored. It may be, however, that it will be necessary to import a special cook who will be able to prepare the comestible according to rule. For the haggis is a food by no means in common use, and there are plenty of Scotchmen in the city today who have never regaled themselves upon it. Here is the recipe for the preparation of the haggis:

"Procure the bag and pluck of a sheep, also one neck of mutton. Boil the neck of mutton for stock. Boil the pluck, mince the heart, light and a small portion of the liver, grate the remainder of the liver, add three-quarter pound beef suet minced, two handsful oatmeal toasted in the oven, one-half nutmeg, one teaspoonful of white pepper, one-half teaspoonful of red pepper and other spices to taste. Do not forget the salt (and some onion if desired). Mix all together with the stock, making the consistency of porridge, and half fill the bag and put on in boiling water. Prick bag frequently to keep from bursting, and put a plate in bottom of pot. Boil three hours."

Ye Powers, wha mak mankind your care,
And dish them out their bill o' fare,
Auld Scotland wants nae skinking ware
That jaups in luggies;
But if ye wish her gratefu' prayer
Gie her a Haggis!

FARMERS WANT AN UP-TO-DATE STORE

REALIZE THEY MUST GIVE SERVICE TO GET BUSINESS—CARPENTERS AT WORK

Carpenters and painters are busy getting the new U. F. O. co-operative store ready to be stocked with goods. President R. B. Rogers of the local club and Mr. Ferguson of Toronto are planning for an exceptionally well equipped modern departmental store on Simcoe street. They feel that if they give service, and they are confident that they can, the people will do business with them. An announcement of all the arrangements will probably be made at the U. F. O. meeting tonight.

GILMOUR MEMORIAL CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

LARGE CONGREGATIONS ADDRESSED BY REV. W. T. GRAHAM OF TORONTO

The seventy-seventh anniversary of the Gilmour Memorial Baptist church was celebrated yesterday.

Unusually large congregations attended both services and listened with undenied attention to the remarkable sermons of Rev. W. T. Graham of the First Avenue Baptist Church, Toronto. The evening message on "The Divinity and Personality of Christ," was exceedingly inspirational and educational.

The music of the day under the direction of Mr. William Paul, choirmaster and Miss Mabel Paul, organist, was of an exceptionally high order. A notable and much appreciated musical feature was a vocal solo by Mrs. James Young, "If with all your hearts ye seek Him."

Peck, Kerr & McElderry notified City Council last night that a rtion of the roadway extending m Simcoe street to the western proach of the temporary bridge, cted by the city over the Oton- ee River, has been laid out by the y upon the lands of the Quaker ts Company, and across railway lings of the C.P.R. now used and intained on the said lands as an proach to the Quaker Oats Com- ny's mills. The company, there- e, holds itself in no way respon- le for any damage that may occur any person by reason of the diver- of traffic across their property. ceived.

[illegible] M. E. Heffernan complained t owing to the city not having rchased her property on Hunter [illegible], south side, near the bridge. [illegible] sustained a loss of $90 in t. She gave an option six months , and might have rented the pro- rty at $15 a month had she not n assured it would have been rchased.

His Worship explained that Miss fferman had misunderstood the uation. She had been promised t Sir Adam Beck would be ap- oached to purchase her property Hydro-electric purposes. This d been done, but Sir Adam would t consider the proposition unless could secure the property ad- ining Miss Heffernan's. The value this lady's premises would not depreciated by the bridge, the yor declared. The communica- n was received.

Mr. F. B. Kerr, principal of uth Central School, wrote asking at the grounds be flooded for a k. The city has adopted the pol- of flooding no rinks other than se prepared by the municipality, d Mr. Kerr will be notified to the ect that the school may flood its rink if so disposed.

Mr. W. Fife, secretary, Canadian ard of Commerce, wrote asking appointment of an official cor- pondent in this city to his Board. e city clerk was appointed.

In regard to the Customs House [illegible] encroaching in Charlotte [illegible], a communication from the De- rtment of Public Works, Ottawa, nted out that as the building had n encroaching on the street some rty-five years, full title of that tion of the street encroached on now vested in the owners of the lding.

On motion of Ald. Crowe and Turner, the resignation of Mr. T. F. Matthews from the Utilities Commission was accepted with regrets, the vacancy to be filled by a vote of the ratepayers at the municipal elections.

On motion of Ald. Edgar and Garside the pay for election officials will be increased as follows: Deputy returning officers, from $4 to $[illegible]; poll clerks, from $3 to $4, and constables, from $2 to $3.

On motion of Ald. Turner, the Board of Trade will be asked to co-operate with Council with a view to securing the carrying of the Canadian Aladdin Company's and the park bylaw.

Would Pay Damages.

Ald. McIntyre thought Joe Ronco should be allowed compensation for damages to his property and cellar contents through the overflow of Downie street creek last spring.

He and Ald. Garside moved that Ronco be awarded $25 damages. This was lost on a division of four to five.

Ald. Edgar contended that were this claim of Ronco's allowed a precedent would be established which would flood [illegible] with damage claims. Mr. Dumble, he said, had done some cleaning out in the creek, but not sufficient to prevent further overflowing.

His Worship reiterated his conviction that damages could be collected from Mr. Dumble, on whose property blockage of the creek had, he alleged, accurred.

Garbage Collection.

Ald. Hamilton submitted the following report, which was adopted:

"Your Property Committee beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

"That the contract for the collection and removal of garbage for 1920 be awarded to P. Anglesey and C. W. Johnston for the sum of $9,900.00 for the year, to be paid in equal monthly instalments, but that 20 per cent. be held back from each of the first three monthly payments and 10 per cent. from each monthly payment during the remainder of the year, as a guarantee that they will carry out their contract, and to be paid to them at the end of the year when they have fully carried out their contract, provided that if they furnish a bond from an approved guarantee company for $2,000.00 they be paid in full each month, and further that the contractors be allowed interest at the rate of three per cent. per annum on any moneys so held back as aforesaid."

NOTHER INDUSTRY SEEKING LOCATION IN PETERBOROUGH

-Law to Aid the Canadian Aladdin Co. Will Be Submitted at January Elections

The City Council proposes to aid establishment here of the Cana- n Aladdin Company by granting m a free site on the Monaghan d, a fixed assessment of $5000, d exemption of all taxes except for ools and local improvements for period of ten years from July 1st xt.

A bylaw to this effect will be sub- tted to the ratepayers on Janu- y 1st, 1920.

The site consists of 334 feet facing e Monaghan road, just south of the [illegible] Hope Co., opposite St. Peter's [illegible]ery. It is just half of the pro- rty being held by the city for fac- ry purposes, and at the end of five ars the company is to have the op- n of purchasing the remaining lf of the land for $10,000. The law provides, however, that they may purchase but a portion of the city's remaining land in this district at the end of five years, so long as 200 feet frontage is left for other factory purpose.

The company are to erect a factory 200x100 feet and install plant and equipment to the extent of $70,000. The usual operation restrictions and protection of the city's interests also are provided for.

The Canadian Aladdin Company will manufacture frame houses on the standardized plan for shipment and speedy erection in all parts of Canada. The American mother plant is enjoying a phenomenal business, and prospects are bright for a big Canadian business.

COUNTY COURT OPENED TODAY

LIST OF CIVIL JURY AND TWO CRIMINAL CASES TO BE HEARD

ONE CASE ALREADY DISPOSED OF

The December sittings of the County Court opened this afternoon about 1.30 o'clock.

The jury was empannelled and the judge delivered his address, in which he impressed upon the jury the duty of every citizen to do what they can in the building up of the country now that peace has taken the place of war and turmoil.

McKay vs. Burleigh Ranch.

At the opening of the civil list, Mr. O. A. Langley, for the plaintiff, Elijah McKay, moved for judgement on the statement of claim, the defendants having filed no defence. The claim was brought by Elijah McKay against the Burleigh Ranching Company for arrears of wages and for damages for wrongful dismissal. An appearance had been entered by Messrs. Gordon & O'Brien. Mr. Langley stated that the plaintiff had us desire to press for damages if the claim for wages and costs paid. After some discussion judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff as claimed, except as to the damages, which plaintiff waived, and full costs of action to be paid by the defendants.

Slander Case in Progress.

The second case, which was proceeding at the time of going to press, was Welsh vs. Perrin, in which the plaintiff claims $500 damages for alleged malicious language of the defendant toward him which did injury to his standing in the community and injured his business.

The plaintiff was the first witness and told of the occasion when the alleged slanderous language was used. There were present at the occasion several persons named among whom was Mayor Duncan and a man whose name the plaintiff did not know but whom he knew by sight.

Under cross-examination by Mr. F. D. Kerr, counsel for the defendant, witness denied knowing any reason why the vocal attack should have been launched. He stated that he had not had a conversation with Mrs. Perrin's son that day in which he had called him a liar. He did not know up to that time that there was any bad feeling between him and the defendant.

"Did you know that there had been complaints against the noise of your dogs and that Mrs. Perrin blamed them for killing her baby?"

"I heard nothing of it."

"Did Mayor Duncan ever interview you regarding your dogs?"

"Not exactly."

"Did he mention your dogs to you at any time?"

"Yes, in a conversation an hour after the funeral of her child."

"Did he mention that it was supposed that the noise of your dogs had killed the child?"

"No, he did not."

Mr. G. N. Gordon, counsel for the plaintiff, here objected that the evidence was not relevant with the case and should not be heard.

The judge did not see how it was relevant, but allowed Mr. Kerr to continue his cross-examination along these lines.

The case is still in progress.

WORKINGMEN ARE TO BE GIVEN REPRESENTATION

FINISH ON BRIDGE VEXED PROBLEM

RESOLVED LAST NIGHT TO REVERT TO CHIPPED GRANITE SURFACE

Alderman Phelan, for the Council's board of works, recommended last night that the finish on the new bridge be of rubbed smooth quality instead of chipped granite, to save, as he believed, at least $5000.

Aldermen Turner and Edgar moved against this amendment, and the motion carried.

Alderman Turner contended that chipped granite finish can be used at less cost than estimated on a basis of that already done. But one-fifth of the bridge's surface has been done in chipped granite, and its given cost includes the whole expense of setting up screens and all preliminary expenditure for the entire bridge. This cost should naturally be distributed over the whole work. Then the contract calls for one and one-half inches of chipped granite finish, whereas been laid. Again, the mixture has been run too stiff for speed and economy; it could be advantageously handled in a moister condition. With these facts before him, Ald. Turner concluded that chiped granite could be [illegible] reduction from the cost arrived at by Ald. Phelan.

Engineer Barber had reported by 'phone that chipped granite finish could be laid at from $2 to $2.20 per yard.

Ald. Phelan expressed himself as tired of these everlasting changes.

Ald. Crowe thought that as work was practically stopped for the winter, the question might be left for next year's council. "Anyway," he said, "it's nothing new for this council to change its plans, and there's plenty of time between now and the spring."

The motion to continue with chipped granite finish carried on the following division:

WON'T BUY STREET RAILWAY

London Couldn't Operate It Profitably Hydro Commission Says.

London, Dec. 9.—Municipal acquisition of the London street railway received a setback when the City Council was informed by the Hydro Commission that the city would be unable to pay what the system is worth and operate it as cheaply as the company could. In consequence, Council decided that the by-law for purchase of the line will not be submitted in January.

NO QUARTER TO HUN MURDERERS

ALLIES INSIST ON THE SURRENDER OF VIOLATORS OF RULES OF WARFARE

PROTOCOL IS NOT YET SIGNED

FRENCH PREMIER GOES TO LONDON FOR CONFERENCE WITH LLOYD GEORGE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Dec. 9.—Germany's delegation at Versailles is considering what is looked upon as the last word of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference relative to the signing of the protocol of the peace treaty. The elimination of the clause providing for coercion by the Allies in case of Germany's failure to execute the treaty's provisions, and the alteration of the claim for indemnity for German warships sunk at Scapa Flow are the most important concessions made by the Council. The economic effects of the turning over to the Allies of German dock and harbor machinery by way of indemnity will be the subject of enquiry to be conducted by the [illegible].

At the same time, however, the Council places on Germany responsibility for the sinking of Admiral von Reuter's interned fleet. German demands for a modification of the treaty clausse calling for the surrender of Germans charged with violations of the laws of warfare, as well as those dealing with the repatriation of prisoners of war, are rejected.

Conference at London.

Paris, Dec. 9.—Premier Clemenceau will go to London tomorrow to confer with Lloyd George on the serious questions of the present hour, according to several newspapers this morning.

Roumania To Sign.

Paris, Dec. 9.—Roumania is expected to become a party to the peace treaties with Austria and Bulgaria today. Her plenipotentiaries it is estimated, will sign the treaty in connection with the Austrian pact providing for the protection of racial minorities, and will attach their signatures to the Bulgarian treaty.

To Be or Not To Be.

The Supreme Council at today's session held before the departure of its American members, did not succeed in settling the question of the continuation of the Supreme War Council. The consent of the United States has not been given to the original plan. The question will now be referred direct to the various governments.

PATRIOTIC FUND WILL HANDLE MONEY

Government Agrees on Plan For Disbursing Forty Million Dollars For Benefit of Veterans

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 9.—After a series of conferences the Government decided today on a policy in regard to the distribution of the forty million dollars voted by parliament for re-establishment of returned men. The main problem, that of unemployment will be handled by an organization based on that of the Canadian Patriotic Fund

Owing to the urgency of the situation in regard to unemployment, it was felt by the Government that it was absolutely necessary to entrust moneys voted by Parliament for this purpose to some national organization which had necessary administrative machinery largely in being. Brig.-Gen. A. E. Ross, Kingston, has been appointed administrator of the fund.

As the Patriotic Fund is the only organization of this kind in Canada, it was felt that if they would undertake the work, delays would be avoided. The agreement entered into between Government and Patriotic Fund, provides as follows:

1. Government will be represented on the organization of the Patriotic Fund at Ottawa, as well as on each provincial organization.

2. Representatives of returned men will be attached to local committees dealing with the problem.

3. Assistance is to be given only because employment is not available. Before making any payment, the organization will secure the necessary certificate in each case showing that the applicant is unable to find work.

Thee expenditure of nine million dollars for gratuity to returned men who served in the Imperial forces will be made through the Militia Department. Approximately one million dollars will also be required to repay the transportation fares of soldiers' dependents, who returned to Canada prior to the armistice. The Department of Immigration and Colonization has this branch of work in hand.

WILL ASK RATEPAYERS TO VOTE $33,000 FOR PARK IN EAST CITY

Proposition is to Purchase Riverside Park, the Rapid Tool, Bettes and Ellis Properties Instead of Paying Damages Created by Building New Bridge.

At a special session of the City Council last night Ald. Edgar fathered a bylaw to authorize the borrowing of $33,000, with which to acquire the Riverside Park, the Ellis, Bettes and Rapid Tool properties for park purposes. The bylaw passed its three readings. The measure will be submitted to the ratepayers at the January elections.

The Ellis, Bettes and Rapid Tool properties are just east of Hunter street bridge, south side, adjoining the Riverside Park, and the idea is to convert the whole into a public park with an open river frontage, including two picturesque islands. The old raceway at this point is owned by the Quaker Oats Co., and this would have to be secured to complete the park plan in view. But Ald. Edgar assured Council that the Quaker Oats Co. are anxious that [illegible] public park project should go through, and he has every reason to expect that the old raceway can be obtained free of cost to the city.

Ald. Phelan objected to the ratepayers being asked to race $33,000 for park purposes.

For the Rapid Tool Company's premises Mr. Lundy had first asked $7,500, but committee finally secured an option at $6 250. Mr. Bettes' first figure of $10,000 for his house had been reduced to $7,500. Mr. Ellis had come down from $10,000 to $8,000 for his property, including a mattress factory. The option secured on the Riverside Park is $11,000, povided the property is maintained as an athletic grounds for 15 years; (this includes a 60-foot right-of-way not inside the park fence).

Ald. Edgar contended that these properties, with a natural waterway frontage, including two islands, would make for one of the prettiest city parks in Ontario, and he thought the price the lowest obtainable. He also pointed out that it would be better to acquire these properties at $32,750 for park purposes than to pay damages and receive nothing in return. (The damages referred to constitute depreciation in value by reason of the construction of the new Hunter street bridge). The bylaw providing for the borrowing of $33,000, leaves a margin of $225 for expenses incidental to securing the properties in question either by expropriation or purchase.

Ald. McIntyre was glad Ald. Edgar had introduced this proposition, one which he heartily endorsed. He (Ald. McIntyre) had always advocated such a procedure, and he approved of committee's action in securing the options in question. However, he would suggest that valuations of the properties be obtained to indicate whether these options are reasonable or not.

Ald. Edgar replied that the ratepayers would vote the bylaw down if they thought the prices too high.

Worthy of Council.

Ald. Crowe thought this parks project worthy of the Council. In times past similar opportunities, to this had offered, but were not taken advantage of. For instance, the city on more than one occasion, could have purchased Burnham's point—an ideal spot for a park, and now that property cannot be secured at [illegible] price. What parks Peterborough has are due to the [illegible] of generous citizens. Ald. Crowe did not think the properties under discussion could be purchased cheaper than the options secured.

Ald. Taylor commended the committee on having proceeded in a business-like way, and considered the options fair.

Put Himself Clear.

Ald. Phelan here explained that he had no objection to the Park scheme on general lines. But he was not satisfied with some of the prices quoted, and would like to see a proposition put to the ratepayers which would carry.

Ald. Hamilton considered the price quoted for Riverside Park a fair one, but was not so sure of the other options.

Ald. Gainey: "Why not put a bylaw to the people this way: Are you in favor of acquiring these properties for park purposes? If the answer is yes, then expropriate: we might then get the properties cheaper than the option quotations.

Mr. Harry Stabler on being invited to give his opinion, said that ten years ago when the late Mr. Faint willed the Bettes and Ellis properties to his son they were valued at $15,000; and the latter gentlemen have quite recently been assured by business men that they are worth a great deal more than the price under consideration. Apart from the Riverside Park, the properties in question consist of two dwellings, a machine shop and an established business, and he could see no chance for a reduction from the prices furnished by Ald. Edgar tonight.

MAYOR DUNCAN IS HONORED BY HIS COLLEAGUES ON THE COUNCIL BOARD

Presented With Tangible Evidence of Esteem and Respect in Which He is Held by Peterboro Aldermen.

Mayor Duncan was taken by surprise last night, or rather at 12:10 this mornig, when, at the conclusion of Council's lengthy last session his colleagues presented him with a handsome pair of briar pipes in case, accompanied by a can of tobacco and leather pouch.

Ald. Edgar introduced the coming presentation in a brief speech, appreciative of the Mayor's two years in office, to the duties of which he had, he said, devoted considerable time at a loss of considerable personal business. In Mayor Duncan, he continued, the city had been well represented during a period of large questions, which he had handled to the satisfaction of the ratepayers in general. While retiring from office, Ald. Edgar felt that the city would not lose Mayor Duncan's continued interest in municipal affairs.

Ald. Turner here made the presentation, accompanied by warm eulogy of the retiring mayor as one with whom it had been a real pleasure to work and to discuss vexed municipal problems.

Ald. Phelan congratulated Mayor Duncan on the capable manner in which he had exercised his important trust, and in this he felt he was voicing public sentiment.

Ald. Gainey appreciated many kindnesses shown him by his Worship, and more especially had he been struck by Mayor Duncan's admission to him that "he (the mayor) had become a biger man in regard to his view of different creeds since he had filled the velvet chair." Ald. Gainey credited the retiring Mayor with having at all times governed himself on lines he honestly believed to be in the city's best interests; "and when a chief executive does that, no fault can be found with him."

Ald. Crowe spoke in a similar strain to his predecessors, and concluded with the opinion that Mayor

THE GREATEST THING THERE IS.

THE BEST SERVICE rendered humanity at any stage of the world's history has been that of volunteer workers. All great reformers have been as a rule unrequited, their only reward being the consciousness of duty well performed.

The Local Council of Women in Peterborough has done more for the moral advancement and intellectual improvement of this city than has any other organization that has undertaken efforts along similar lines. When they set their hands to any task they invariably see it through. The greatest achievement to their credit is the establishment of a baby's clinic in the city, a work started some time ago and just now brought to a successful issue.

Some one has truly said that the care of children is the greatest thing there is. It is nothing short of a marvel that this important duty should have in effect been neglected so long. Mortality records show that ten thousand children under the age of twelve months die in Ontario every year. From a merely material standpoint the loss which this means to the Province is incalculable. If the lives of those unfortunate little ones could be preserved, the national increase of the population of Ontario [illegible] augmentation by assisted immigration from Europe, people who never become really naturalized, but whose descendants even possess the characteristics of their ancestors to at least the second generation.

A young girl who spends her early years in store, office or factory, learns little of the duties of housekeeping and infinitely less of the cares of motherhood. It is probable that in the latter regard her own mother is scarcely an expert authority. The young woman marries, and the children she bears are obliged to take their chances. What wonder, then, is it if a large percentage of such offspring die in infancy? Natural affection is not lacking. Ignorance of the care of children is the real explanation. The State that establishes schools of instruction for the care of the lower animals neglects the most vital branch of the education of the human race.

The baby's clinic that will soon be in operation in this city will supply this glaring deficiency in the training of the young, and any mother who is really anxious to learn the secret of the proper care of childhood will be given an opportunity. Medical officers say that a large percentage of the children of the present day are improperly nourished and inadequately clad. Not in all cases is this apparent neglect due to the poverty of the parents. Ignorance of ordinary living conditions again gets in its deadly work. Children pine, suffer and waste their little lives away, and every white coffin called into requisiton marks another evidence of the indifference that has proved so detrimental to the growth of Canada's population.

LIBERALS GET FREE HAND.

NORTH OXFORD, a rural constituency, is represented in the Legislature by J. A. Calder, a straight Liberal. At a party convention in that riding recently Mr. Calder was given a free hand to support the Drury Government whenever he deemed such a course was justified.

This looks like sane political action. Nothing could be obtained for Mr. Calder's constituents if he pursued the old-time tactics of opposing everything, regardless of the merits of the issue, that might be brought up by the Government. Mr. Dewart, however, is likely to oppose this stand, but it is apparent that the decision has been made without consulting the leader. It is probable that other members of both old political parties will be allowed by their constituents the same freedom of action accorded Mr. Calder.

THAT SHATTERED HOPE.

FAITH, as defined by the highest authority, is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. And now the faith of the people is jolted and their hopes rudely shattered. For how long are the classes to be fed up on nothing more substantial than phantoms?

During the war, the world, bleeding and mourning as it was, was encouraged not only to hope but to actually believe that victory by the Allies would mean the end of international strife for all time to come. Victory was finally achieved and the armistice was signed. The rainbow chasers charged with the duty of arranging the final terms of peace, had brighter visions than ever and painted rosier pictures of the future. The League of Nations was to control the world. There was to be no more trouble between the powers on earth. No longer were the people to be taxed to death for the maintenance of army or navy. The nation that sought war was to be disciplined by the other powers, banded together in a league of peace. An international police force on land and sea was to carry out the decrees of the League of Nations.

And now what is the situation? The British Admiralty asks for one hundred and fifty million dollars to increase the naval strength of the Empire. Canada has to increase its already enormous war debt by undertaking the construction of or contributing to the cost of building warships. Armies are to be maintained on a greater scale than ever. Preparedness, it is still argued is the best guarantee of future peace. Even the United States has become infected with the military germ, and the naval department of htat government urges the building of a fleet that can hold its own against the powers of the world. Admiral Jellicoe in Toronto urges an increase of the naval armament of the Empire. Following the war, the world seems to be inspired by blood lust and has gone military mad.

But sanity will yet possess the leaders of men and it will yet be shown that four years of war, with its unconscionable sacrifice in men and treasure, did not fail to teach mankind a lesson in wisdom.

THE STAGE AS A TEACHER.

THE STAGE HAS BEEN justly regarded as one of the greatest educators in the world ever since the days of Shakespeare, who modeled his plays after the general plan of the Bible. If he occasionally paraded the sins of the people, it was only that he might emphasize virtue by contrast.

The drama has not always been a moral agency, but, like literature, there have been unfortunate influences that made for the reverse of good. But as a whole, the stage has taught the people history, patriotism and social culture by giving the masses an insight into the higher life. The modern drama always ends with the triumph of right and the overthrow of evil. The stage villain invariably comes to grief, to the huge delight of the most captious critics in the audience, those who sit in the higher regions of the theatre. The lovers are wedded in the last act and the impression given that their married life will be one of harmony for ever after. Perhaps these happy endings are not always true to the actual experience of human existence, but they are pleasing and edifying in their influence. Some of these days, however, a courageous producer will stage a play in which the last curtain will go down on the righteous forsaken and their seed begging bread.

Of all the moral plays written and staged in modern times, none can equal "Experience," shown recently at the Grand Opera House in this city, and which is now attaining so much favorable comment in all parts of the theatrical circuit. The plot is admirably conceived and worked out with consummate skill and with the sublime effect that is always given a picture by a touch of allegory.

"Youth," fired by the promptings of Ambition, left home to seek his fortune. His is not the story of every young man who leaves the parental roof, but it is the story of every one who chooses the same course when left to himself. "Youth's" home was one with the rain barrel to catch the water from the roof and with roses climbing up the walls. It was surrounded with green fields, with a modest little church across the valley, the whole a nursery for unsophistication. When he came to the parting of the ways, Opportunity beckoned him, but the primrose path of pleasure lured him. He chose the latter and was undone.

Vice in the guise of [illegible] beauty wooed him to his destruction. Every form of temptation [illegible] conquered. Then snobbery snubbed him and his former boon companions turned their backs upon him.

The story of "Youth" hardly parallels that of the immortal recital of the career of the Prodigal Son. It is true he came to himself only when he was reduced to a diet of husks. But the motive which induced him to return to his old home was higher than the thought of the bread in his father's house. He was awakened by the memory of the teachings of his dead mother, an influence that never fails. The little church of his boyhood also figured in his regeneration. He heard again the words of that old hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," and like a beacon, that light led him back. He was saved.

The story is the vivid picture of a human life, a sermon in the form of a play. Its moral influence is above question. The stage of today is justified and ennobled by such a presentation.

The proposal that Canada should adopt nickel for coinage of small denomination, which was proposed at the Ontario Board of Trade meeting by the Sudbury representatives and carried unanimously, is one which has frequently been suggested to successive governments but never acted upon. Quick temper is highly undesirable, but fortune sometimes is no moralist. Though he has an income of half a million dollars, Adam Mortimer Singer, son of the American inventor of the Singer sewing machine, gets only a fifth of it.

Mr. Singer, who is a naturalized Englishman, is hit hard by the income taxes of Britain and the U. S.

His half-a-million-dollar income is derived from the U.S. By the time the United States gets through assessing it there is only about $200,000 left for Singer. The U. S. collects a tax of 62 per cent. When he gets the $200,000 Britain takes a cut out of it which reduces it another hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Singer points out that if he lived in France, paid the U. S. tax because the income is derived from that country, paid the British tax because he is a Britisher, and then paid a French income tax, he would have about $50,000 left.

THE "SPANKLESS CHILD"

(Kingston Standard.)

According to H. W. Gibson, Y.M. C. A. Secretary for boy's work for Massachusetts and Rhode Island, "we are suffering from the spankless child. If ever there is a time in the life of a boy when he needs his father, it's when he puts on his first pair of long pants."

Perfectly true, Mr. Gibson. In these days of the hight cost of living a boy who hasn't a father has a hard time of it, when it comes to the day when he needs his first pair of long pants. It is then that the boy especially [illegible] ly begins to appreciate that his father counts for anything worth while, for without the father the lad would probably go pantless—which would be rather embarrassing for the boy, if for nobody else. Just at the most critical moment, the clever mother resurrects a pair of the "old man's pants" and with the grace and skill of a genuine artist proceeds to "cut them down"—taking a seam in here, a stitch there and a few inches off the legs—until, presto, the deed is done and little Tommy or Johnny or Algernon emerges, chrysalis-like, from his juvenile shell, and appears resplendent in a pair of papa's cast-offs that mother had saved for Heaven knows how many years against the proverbial rainy day. Remember how it was yourself.

So far, therefore, Mr. Gibson is absolutely right. But when he tells us the world is suffering from "the spankless child," we aren't so certain he is right. Spanking no more makes a good boy than did the German doctrine of Might over Right made that nation renowned for the truest form of Culture. The best boys of today are not they who had but rather are they who at their mother's knee learned the real beauty and the real glory of gentleness and goodness and moral suasion, and who were taught that they must be good for God's sake and not because if they weren't good they would "catch it." To be sure this doesn't exactly fit in with the old theory "spare the rod and spoil the child," but it is a fact, nevertheless, that more boys are made "worth while" through kindliness and gentleness [illegible] or fear or bullying.

Let us have done, then, with this nonsense about the "spankless child." There is no tragedy in that. The real tragedy is with the "pantless child"—the poor little soul, who growing from boyhood toward Manhood, must needs be content with the "left overs" from his father or his brother or his remote male relatives; the real tragedy, also, with the devoted mother of such a boy who scrimps and saves and denies herself that her boy may take his place with other lads upon whose parents Dame Fortune has smiled more benignly and who know not the sorrows and the heartburnings and the soul tribulations of their less fortunate neighbors.

Nor, thank God, are sacrifices of these brave mothers in vain. The best men of the world today are the youth of yesterday who went about unashamed, in their "made-overs," and not the milk-fed pampered boys to whom everything came easy and who never knew the joy or the privilege of Self-sacrifice.

IDEALS OF AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

Taking an extract from a recent editorial by Ex-President Taft urging self-restraint on the part of the service men as his text, Franklin D'Olier, national commander of the American Legion, sent an open letter to Mr. Taft pledging the aid of the members of the organization in the support of civilian authority in the maintenance of law and order.

"You have accurately interpreted the sentiment of the members of the legion as expressed in the fundamental principles adopted at Minneapolis," Mr. D'Olier wrote, "when you say:—

"The legion must know its influence for great good depends on its maintenance of the ideals shown by its members in military defence of the country and the world. * * * It was their self-restraint that made them effective. * * Liberty regulated by law is their only safe guide. * * * It is lawlessness awakening the sympathy of the people that is most dangerous to the state and to our liberties.'

"In view of your letter and the importance of having the public through you understand the spirit of the legion I am venturing in open public letter to add the following, as embodying what I am sure is the threefold purpose of the great body of former service men now enrolled in the American Legion:—

"First—Mutual helpfulness, whereby all our comrades who have been handicapped in mind, body or position through service to their country may receive that liberal consideration which they have reason to expect from a grateful and patriotic nation.

"Second—Protection of our common country from foes without. Having lately defended our country from such foes, it will be our endeavor to assist in the adoption of a military policy which will make it safe from future aggression and yet a policy which wil be truly democratic truly American, just and equittable to the entire country.

"Third—Protection of our country from foes within. Our stand for one hundred per cent Americanism will be virile. As good soldiers who did not hesitate to hit hard under competent orders, so now, as civilians again, with an even keener sense of responsibilty of citizenship, we shall not hesitate. We realize, however, that our orders originate in the constitution of the United States, as expressed through the duly constituted agencies of national State and local government. It was our duty as soldiers to obey and support military authority; it is no less our duty today staunchly to support civilian authority in the maintenance of law and order and in the protection of th rights of every citizen."

MY LADY'S FASHIONABLE WINTER COAT

"The north wind doth blow, and we shall have snow"—the old couplet reverts to one's mind as the days gradually shorten and the air grows crisper, and it behooves one to think seriously of the important question of that very necessary garment, the winter coat.

The all-enveloping great coat, that shows not even a peep of the frock beneath, is much in demand, and it certainly has many advantages. Nevertheless, coats cut considerably shorter are also much worn. Either length is correct, and it is merely a matter of individual preference.

The utility coat for winter wear should be roomy and practical. The deep armhole is featured a good deal this season, and gives a soft, draped effect, and is extremely comfortable. The convertible collar, which may be seen either open or closed, is very popular, [illegible] and various styles. The long, adjusted shawl collar is always becoming to women, and is much used, and the high collar is also very stylish. Pockets display remarkable originality in shape and size, the slashed pocket being much in vogue.

Distinguishing features of the smartest winter coats are the beautiful materials in which they are made, and the excellence of the lines on which they are cut. Rich velours and silvertones, soft duvetyns, broadcloth, camel's hair coating, wool heather mixtures, plush and velvet are among the most popular materials of the season. One of the newest materials, chameleon cord, may also be mentioned, this having the rich texture of velvet, yet with a cord that gives it the wearing qualities of the sturdiest materials.

With regard to colors, brown is immensely popular in all shades—toberro brown, copper brown, reindeer, faisan are much in evidence, and navy, maine blue, taupe and burgandy also being much worn.

Fur Much Used.

While many of the newest coats are collared in self-materials, fur is used a great deal for both collar and cuffs, and it must be admitted that a big fur collar certainly adds a great deal to the luxurious effect of the smart coat as well as its comfort. Racoon opossum, seal, beaver, nutria and sable are all much in evidence this season.

Coats made in fur fabrics look very well, so many really wonderful fur imitations are being shown this year. A wrap-coat, in sports length, made of fur cloth, with a dolman sleeve worn with a smartly-tailored skirt of plaid, would make an ideal costume for winter. For afternoon wear, a draped wrap of velvet or plush, in dolman style, with a large adjustable fur collar, makes a most elegant garment, and would be suitable for many occasions, when a "dressy" coat is required. The fur coat, in the sports length, with a ripple back, worn with a velvet skirt, would also make a very stylish costume for winter street wear, a coat in this length being specially suitable for walking.

Another type of coat shows a panel front and back, and has a kimono sleeve and narrow belt. Many coats this season are fashioned with raglan sleeves, which are very becoming. A very smart model shows the sleeves and back in one piece thus achieving the sloping shoulder line so much admired, and a graceful cape-back.

Contrasting Fur.

Fur coats, trimmed with a contrasting fur, will be seen again this season. A very efective combination consists of a seal coat with collar and cuffs of chinchilla, or of gray squirrel. Beaver also combines beautifully with seal. Many of these fur cuffs are cut with a decided flare and a deep band around the bottom of the fur coat, in the contrasting fur, makes a handsome finish to the garment. Upon many of the smartest fur coats, collars attain great depth. One beautiful model—a long dolman of gray squirrel—shows a quaintly gathered collar that is deep enough almost to be a cape. Many long coats display a [illegible] fullness in the back, such coats hang loose, and either dispense with the belt entirely or are confined across the front only.

Another handsome model comes in the sports length, made of black plush, and exhibits raglan-set shoulders and a full, flaring cape back, which may also be made snugly fitted by the long belt. This coat has a huge collar of opossum, softly draped into shawl revers, and may be worn open or closed.

Fur collars, in the large crush or cross-over styles, are much featured, as is also the new swinging back collar, which is extremely smart. Cape-like wraps, with voluminous sleeves, are very modish, and also very practical and comfortable for chilly days.

With regard to cloth capes, almost all of these touch the hem of the frock worn beneath. A few cape models are circular in cut. Most capes show a very shallow yoke, to which the cape itself is very fully gathered and are finished with a scarf-like collar, either of the material or of fur. Buttons, many of these being quite huge, form quite a decorative feature, as well as a useful one, to the winter coat.

As to the very lovely pussy-willow silks and satins with which the winter coats are lined this season, fancy has certainly run riot, in originality of design and beauty of color. A handsome lining, undoubtedly greatly enhances the effect of the smart coat, especially when the garment is flung back, or as the wearer throws it off her shoulders.

Fair Play Imperative.

"Business is business" is a motto all workers should keep before them. They should demand their rights, but should remember that those in authority have rights also, and are entitled to fair, honest treatment from the people they employ. Therefore, one must learn to be punctual, non-talkative and kindly to their associates. The employee who swerves from this code is not playing fair with employer and certainly should keep silent on the question of equal rights.—Exchange.

MONOCLES IS LATEST FASHION FOR GIRLS

EYE STYLES IN LONDON ARE BEING ADOPTED IN CANADA

The Toronto women are longing to transfix the salesperson and the applicant maid and their dearest enemies with a monocled gaze for monocles are now all the rage among their sisters in England.

It's the new fad, don't you know—for the women to wear monocles. At least, a London dispatch says so, and a London oculist defends the innovation by saying that in each case where a woman came to him for a monocle there was "genuine trouble with one eye."

Perhaps so. But right off the bat the would-be monocle wearers here run up against an obstacle from a Toronto occulist who has this to say on the subject:

"It is true persons often have trouble with only one eye, but wearing a monocle does not serve to correct that trouble. Instead, it interferes with binocular vision. Wearing a monocle also cramps the eyelid. We oculists do not approve of monocle wearing."

Inquiries Coming In.

Nevertheless, inquiries for monocles are coming in. If the fad makes much progress, however, it is likely to witness opposition from quarters that count—the bulwarks of society circles.

"Henrys" and "Harrys."

While I know one Harry who was so christened with disregard for the more dignified Henry and there may be other instances of the kind, there seems to be little doubt that the latter is the parent of the former name. England has always called its King Henrys "Harry." During the reign of Henry VI, who succeeded to the throne in 1422, there was a piece of money coined called the Harry noble, and in the time of Henry VIII there was a tiny coin named the Harry groat. "In Jerusalem shall Harry die," said Henry IV.—Chicago Daily News.

"Reds" Like Canada.

All that remains of the Finnish Foreign Legion, which, under British leadership, fought the Germans on the Russian frontier, but would not fight the Bolsheviki because they were revolutionaries themselves want to come to Canada. Away up in the Baltic are these would-be Canadian citizens, who helped the allies against the Teutons, but have been a problem ever since. These are strange allies since the legion was recruited from none other than former members of the Finnish Red Guard who were expelled from their country after the last change of Government there. Men without a country, they were formed into a foreign legion, 14,000 strong, and under British and Canadian officers did good work against the Germans, who tried to cross the Russian frontier to reach Murmansk. After the armistice, however, they refused to fight the Bolsheviki. They were all but Bolshevists themselves. Through the efforts of Britain most of the legion was finally repatriated, but there was a certain element too steeped in revolutionary ideas for the Finnish Government to allow re-entry. They were blacklisted men. They were formed into details and placed under Lieut. T. S. Wetton, of Winnipeg, a Canadian who went out with the Siberian force as an officer in the Devonshires. Wetton protests they are not Bolshevists, although a little radical in tendency. He says they are anxious to come to Canada, and he has made representations to the Dominion immigration authorities in that respect. However, it is scarcely likely that Canada will see the matter in the same light. Wetton's following are the very cream of Finnish revolutionism, Oskari Tokoi, former Red Prime Minister for Finland, being an N.C.O. and a number of other prominent wavers of the red flag ranking as mere privates.

Not All War Phrases Likely to Be Forgotten.

Some of Them Are Welcome Additions to the Language, and Those That Are Not Will Not Long Retain Favor.

The Buffalo Express appeals for a new war vocabulary. It cites six phrases in common use and declares that they have been used so much that they mean nothing. It demands that writers cudgel their brains to find new phrases to take their places.

Here are the six phrases that have occasioned this attack:

"Hun," "drive," "over the top," "doing your bit," "carrying on" and "strafe."

Though possibly all of these words—and to them should have been added "Boche" and "camouflage" at least—are being overworked, there is much [illegible] them doubtless will stick ... the natural and unpremeditated course of word manufacture, new ones develop to take their place, the Duluth Herald observes.

And the main thing to be said for them is that they are very useful, because every one of them expresses poignantly an important thought. The purpose of language is to convey thought. Language that conveys a thought most effectively to the most people, especially at a time when clearness and definiteness of thought are so important as now, is the best language to use.

"Hun" isn't likely to go out of use so long as Americans remember Belgium and northern France and the bombing of cities and the destruction of churches by long-distance guns and the work of the submarine. Not to speak of the rare availability of the word for the uses of head writers, who have helped to make it common, the connotations of the word fit so accurately the common opinion of the character of the Germans as developed in this war that there is small chance of its retirement.

"Over the top" has been worked hard in the same connection, used after a quota has been filled; and in that sense weariness of it has led to its gradual disuse. Moreover, there is likely to be less trench warfare and more war in the open henceforth, and as "over the top" means a leap of the attacking force out of its trench this is the phrase most likely to be dropped. Yet its significance in stouthearted valor and daring among those who have gone "over the top" is so deep that it will never be forgotten by them or by us.

"Doing your bit" it is well enough to retire, not because it has been overworked, but because it has been misunderstood. In Britain, where it started, it means "doing your share." It doesn't mean doing "a little bit." It means doing all you can. But our sense of the word having that large difference, it isn't a good phrase for us to use, and we should retire it on a pension and substitute "do your utmost."

"Carry on," another British phrase, is splendidly and nobly Anglo-Saxon and should not be sacrificed for any consideration. When the British at Mons and after were overpowered and overwhelmed and outnumbered and all but crushed by the enemy's superiority in strength and equipment they simply "carried on" and so made the reversal at the Marne possible. Whatever betides, however black the hour may grow, however hopeless the outlook may seem, it is the Anglo-Saxon habit to "carry on" and the courage and persistence it stands for have plucked victory out of many a defeat. "Carry on" will have won this war; so let us, who share the same spirit with our British cousins, never forget the word and the spirit it stands for.

"Strafe," being German, we could spare readily enough, as well as the spirit of venom and hate that it signifies.

Words don't win or lose wars. Let us launch our "drive" "over the top," each man "doing his bit," and let us "carry on" until we "strafe" the "Hun" forevermore.

ESTIMATES OF YIELDS

Following is the detailed statement of Canadian crop yields, as issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, from reports of correspondents at the end of September:

The total yield of wheat in Canada is now placed at 193,688,800 bushels, including 174,687,000 bushels of spring wheat and 19,001,800 bushels of fall wheat. Upon the acreage sown the average yield per acre is 10¼ bushels for spring wheat, 23¾ bushels for fall wheat and 11¼ bushels for all wheat. In 1918 the total yield of wheat was 189,075,350 bushels, or 11 bushels per acre. For oats the average yield per acre for Canada is 27 bushels, representing a total of 399,368,000 bushels as compared with last year's average of 28¾ bushels and a total of 426,312,500 bushels. Barley, with an average of 22 bushels, yields 66,443,500 bushels, as against last year's average of 24½ bushels and total of 77,287,240 bushels. Rye with an average yield per acre of 14½ bushels yields the total of 8,234,100 bushels as against 15¾ bushels and 8,504,400 bushels in 1918. The yields in 1919 for the three prairie provinces are estimated at 161,419,000 bushels of wheat, 246,856,000 bushels of oats, 46,412,000 bushels of barley, and 5,954,000 bushels of rye.

The quality at harvest time of the principal grain crops for Canada expressed in percentages of the previous ten years was as follows: Fall wheat, 96 (89); spring wheat, 91 (99); fall wheat, 92 (98); oats, 93 (94); barley, 89 (97); rye, 92 (92); peas, 91 (95); beans, 95 (82); buckwheat, 96 (86); mixed grains, 94 (98); flax, 93 (92), and corn for husking, 94 (89). The figures within parenthesis represent the quality of the crops in 1918.

The average condition of root and fodder crops in Canada at the end of September, expressed in percentages of the decennial average, was as follows, with last year's figures for comparison placed within parenthesis: Potatoes, 95 (93); turnips, mangolds, etc., 91 (96); sugar beets, 85 (97); fodder corn, 95 (92); alfalfa, 91 (89). By provinces potatoes appear to be best in Quebec, 103, the other provinces ranging as follows: Saskatchewan, 97; New Brunswick and Alberta, 96; Nova Scotia, 94; Prince Edward Island, 93; British Columbia, 90; Manitoba, 89, and Ontario 81.

Not so Dull for Prince.

In Western Canada they are telling this story about the Prince of Wales. Some one was complimenting him upon the fact that he had set up his own bachelor establishment in London.

"Yes," said the prince, "it's been quite dull at home in the evening. Father and mother always read, and sister Mary knits."

The Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Peterborough purpose to pass a By-law to aid the Canadian Aladdin Company, Limited.

The purpose of this By-law is, by way of bonus, to convey to the company the following lands, namely: Park Lot Number Three and the North one half of Park Lot Number Two in Township Lot Number Thirteen in the Twelfth Concession of the Township of North Monaghan, now within the limits of the City of Peterborough, said land extending Easterly only to the Western limits of the roadway of the Grand Trunk Railway, and also if at any time for a period of Five Years, commencing the 2nd day of December, 1919, the City intends to sell the remaining half of said Lot Number Two and Lot Number One in said Twelfth Concession, the Company will have thirty [illegible] of Ten Thousand (10,000.00) Dollars or part of the said lastly mentioned Lots on a proportionate basis of the said sum, but if the Company exercises this last mentioned option the City is to have the right to retain at least Two Hundred (200) feet frontage on Monaghan Road.

The By-law also purposes to fix the assessment of the said Company (including business taxes, but excluding school taxes and local improvement rates) for a period of ten years from July first, 1920 at Five Thousand (5,000.00) Dollars; said fixed assessment to include the lands to be conveyed and the buildings, machinery, railway sidings and manufacturing plant thereon.

The Agreement provides that the Company will erect a building on the lands conveyed, with dimensions of One Hundred by Two Hundred Feet for manufacturing purposes, and that manufacturing operations will be carried on for a period of ten years, commencing the first day of September, 1920, and if the Company ceases to carry on said operations the Company shall pay to the City Five Hundred (500.00) Dollars for every year in which the Agreement is not complied with.

The Company also agrees to expend on the erection of said building, and the equipment, machinery, etc., the sum of Seventy Thousand (70,000.00) Dollars. A copy of the proposed By-law and the Agreement may be seen at the office of the City Clerk.

TAKE NOTICE that the foregoing is a true synopsis of a proposed By-law of the Corporation of the City of Peterborough to be submitted to the votes of the electors on the same day and at the same hours and places as the annual election for the Municipal Council.

BYE-ELECTION IN NORTH ONTARIO FOR FEDERAL HOUSE TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Beaverton, Dec. 9. — With both candidates confident of success, the bye-election in North Ontario Federal constituency is proceeding today to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. WAS UNABLE TO RAISE HER HEAD

Mrs. Harding McKay Was So Run Down She Had to Remain in Bed—Tanlac Restores Her.

"I am completely convinced now that Tanlac deserves everything good said about it," said Mrs. Freada Harding McKay, living at Burnaby, B.C., to a Tanlac representative a few days ago.

"Some time ago I began suffering from indigestion," continued Mrs. McKay, "and my troubles kept multiplying until it seemed like everything was wrong with me. I had no appetite at all and I could hardly eat a thing and what little I did manage to force down would just lie in my stomach like a lump of lead and I would bloat up so from gas that I could hardly breathe and my heart would palpitate something dreadful. I also suffered with constipation and had to be taking some kind of laxative all the time. My head would ache so that at times I was nearly crazy and I had such awful pains in the small of my back I could not bend over. Finally I became so weak and nervous I could not do my housework and had to take to my bed, and was not even able to raise my head up. Children playing around me or any other noise would nearly drive me wild.

"I had heard a lot of good things said about Tanlac, so I decided to get a bottle and try it. Well, to my surprise, it was all that others had said about it and more, for I had not taken more than half of my first bottle when I noticed a big change for the better in my condition. I only took four bottles and that was plenty, for my case as bad as it was. My appetite is good and I can eat anything I want without the least sign of indigestion. I am never troubled with gas or heart palpitation any more and the headaches and pains in my back have all stopped. I am not bothered with constipation and my nerves are in fine condition. I have regained my strength and can do my housework with the greatest ease, and my general health is fine, and Tanlac is due all the credit for my renewed health."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in West-[illegible]

HOUSING BY-LAW PASSES COUNCIL

JAMES FINNIE AND EX-ALD FRANK DOBBIN APPOINTED COMMISSIONERS

The city fathers at their regular December session shelved the housing proposition. Last night, however, Ald. Edgar bobbed up with a bylaw to bring Peterborough under the Ontario Government housing scheme and to appoint a commission of three. Ald. Edgar found a strong supporter in Ald. Turner, and the measure carried. Strong opposition to the bylaw was offered by Ald. Morrison, Gainey, Garside, Phelan and McIntyre, who contended that the proposition should not be forced on next year's Council by this body.

Ald. Gainey approved of a housing scheme, but contended that the system of a local building association is far better than the Government's plan, and a city housing commission might work in co-operation with that society to advantage.

Ald. Phelan did not approve of committing next year's Council to any such proposition, adopted at the last Council meeting for 1919.

Ald. Edgar replied that Council of next year could either rescind or change the bylaw.

Council at this moment were in Commitee of the Whole with Ald. Crowe in the chair, and Ald. Gainey and Morrison moved that the committee rise. Had this motion carried the bylaw would have been shelved but it was lost on the following division:

The vote was a tie and Chairman Crowe voted with the nays.

On motion of Ald. Edgar, James Finnie was appointed housing commissioner for Peterborough for two years, and ex-Ald. Frank Dobbin for one year.

Ald. Morrison and Gainey moved that these appointments be left for next year's Council and that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit agin.

The division proved a tie as before, and the decision was again left with Ald. Crowe, in the chair.

Ald. Crowe—"I report against progress this time." The motion was consequently lost.

Other men nominated as commissioners were: Harry Stabler, by Ald. Morrison; T. B. McGrath and Wm. Stevens, by Ald. Gainey.

The Mayor constitutes the third member of this housing commission.

Mrs. W. Bossinger, of Port Dover, was drowned while skating at Erieau Friday evening.

FARMERS' STORE WILL OPEN BY CHRISTMAS

WORK OF PREPARING BUILDING NOW GOING ON—SOON BE STOCKED

It was announced at the U. F. O. meeting last night by C. B. Chantler of the Farmers' Co-operative Company that the local store would be open a few days before Christmas. Considerable progress was reported, but it will be impossible to have the store fully stocked and open much before the Christmas season. The stores on Simcoe street were rented on Dec. 1st and already the shelving has been completed with two coats of paint.

Mr. Chantler explained that the co-operative stores were established by consumers in order to get goods at factory prices plus the necessary cost of handling.

The co-operative stores that are purely local have a hard fight. They have to compete with the strongly established retail merchants and do not receive encouragement from wholesalers who cater to the old retailer. Nor do the mail order co-operative business appear to be a great success.

Through these examples the Farmers' Company has come to realize that the centralization of buying is the best method. The aim of the company is to supply every farmer in Ontario with a store in which he has an interest.

No Books Kept.

By the system adopted by this company the expense of bookkeeping is avoided. A customer's order is totalled on an adding machine and cash only will be accepted. The Farmers' Club member on presentation of his membership certificate will receive a receipt which he must retain and present when called for to receive his dividend. There will not necessarily be any cut in prices but the advantage will be gained through the dividends [illegible] year. The company paid 7 per cent. dividends which the speaker considered a good showing for a new company.

"What will you sell in the store?" asked one member.

"Groceries, hardware, dry-goods, boots and shoes," was the reply. "The store will probably be fully stocked in all these lines some time early in the New Year."

The store management will also handle the distribution of grain, feed, seed, etc., required by the club members. They will receive the butter and eggs of the consumer.

END OF COAL STRIKE BELIEVED IN SIGHT

LABOR LEADERS IN CONFERENCE WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF GOVT.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Dec. 9.—Secretary of Labor Wilson in a telegram today to John Lewis, urged the miners to accept a settlemnt of the coal strike. "The asettlemnt of the coal strike. "The President," the secretary said, "has pointed a way out with honor to the government and to yourselves."

End Is In Sight.

Indianapolis, Dec. 9.—A settlement within twenty-four hours of the strike of the local miners, commenced more than five weeks ago, was confidently predicted today. The terms of the proposal submitted to the miners' leaders on Saturday is still a carefully guarded secret today.

Fire totally destroyed the barn of A. Burrill, Deep Brook, near Digby, N.S., which was one of the finest in Annapolis county.

WHAT IS A CURE?

IS IT A TEMPORARY OR PERMANENT CONDITION?

Let us get down to brass tacks. Is there any such thing as a cure? You may eradicate every trace of disease from your system and be restored to your former state of health—but you haven't attained a cure. Why? Because as long as disease germs are prevalent in the universe you may be afflicted again.

Take for example: a man has a terrible headache for days. It has driven him almost insane, sapping his energies and making him incapable of working. He tries doctors, takes prescriptions, and finally finds a preparation that makes him fit again. Immediately he says "I'm cured."

Six months later his head begins to ache. What does he say, "Here's my old headache back again, that medicine was a fake"—or does he say, "Another attack! we'll soon knock that out!" and commences the use of the remedy that relieved him before.

This happens in many cases of Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis, Neuralgia. That is why we say "Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules" remedy these ills. They are 99% effective by actual record.

OBITUARY

MRS. ANDREW KNOX

One of the last and oldest of the pioneer settlers of North Verulam, in the person of Sarah Anne McClelland, relict of the late Andrew Knox, has gone to her well-earned rest. Mrs. A. Knox passed away at the home of her son, John, at the old homestead, Town of Verulam. Her husband, Andrew Knox, predeceased her sixteen years ago.

Mrs. Knox was born in the County of Derry, Ireland, in 1829. She came to Canada in 1842, arriving in Peterborough, which was a very small village at that date, and staying [illegible] son, until her marriage to Mr. A. Knox, in 1848. The couple lived on a small farm in Smith Town Hill, remaining there until 1856 when they moved to a larger farm in North Verulam Township, which is the site of the present homstead.

There were eleven in the family, eight of whom are still living: Mrs. Wm. Wray and Mrs. Wm. Ellis, of the Township of North Verulam, are daughters; Samuel and John Knox, of Verulam, are sons; James, of New Liskeard; Joseph, of Peterborough; George, of Fenelon Falls, are also sons; Mrs. James Ellis, of Port Moody, B.C., is another daughter.

Mrs. Knox was a life-long Methodist and in the early days all church meetings were held in her home where all received a cordial welcome. The first Methodist Church in that vicinity was built on a corner of her farm. Of this church she was a devoted and active member. A loyal friend and a true one, her works of charity will long be remembered.

The funeral took place from the homstead to Fenelon Falls Cemetery, when many mourners bade farewell to a true and kind friend.

The statement says the Greeks lost an adjutant and six soldiers killed a sub-lieutenant and seventeen soldiers wounded, while the losses of the Turks have not been determined.

DR. CHAFER'S SPECIAL WORK AT ST. PAUL'S

IS HOLDING TWO SERVICES DAILY, AFTERNOON AND EVENING

"The Finished Work of Christ," was the subject of Dr. Chafer's address last night, in St. Paul's. The attendance was large for a Monday evening, and the interest was intense and deep. His address was devoted to an exposition of three great words of the New Testament, Redemption, Reconciliation and Propitiation, as these three words explain and relate themselves to Christ's finished work. Of Redemption he said it was paying the price. The ransom of the sinner was effected by the death penalty of the innocent substitute. As Redeemer, Christ paid the price. He took out, set free, and released all who were in the slave pen of sin, so that they might never again be the slaves of sin. The sinner who accepts what Christ has done, who accepts His freedom, can never again be the bond slave of sin.

Reconciliation is to remove the cause of the offence which was sin. Christ as the Lamb of God has done this. He took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross. He bore it away as the scapegoat bore Israel's sin away in the day of atonement. The issue now between God and the unsaved sinner is not an issue of sin at all, but the issue of acepting or rejecting what Christ has done. God is holding the sinner acountable, for refusing to accept the reconciling work of the Redeemer.

The last great word is Propitiation and this means a divinely provided place of meeting, the place where God alone can meet the sinner. God is so infinitely Holy, He cannot meet a sinful man without judgment on his sin, and a sinful man cannot come into the presence of the all Holy God without being afraid of God's reghteous wrath upon sin. But He has provided a meeting place in the cross of Calvary. What the mercy [illegible] Jesus Christ is to the returning sinner. Christ is his propitiation. The very blood-sprinkled body of the Son of God on the cross has become the divinely provided place of meeting where now a guilty sinner can come to God without fear, and the righteous God can receive that soul apart from all judgments and condemnation.

Dr. Chafer spoke in the afternoon on the subject "Grace," dwelling specially on grace teaching the child of God how to live. He will speak every afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, and in the evening at eight o'clock. A most effective duet was sung by Dr. and Mrs. Chafer at the evening service. Mrs. Chafer sang a solo in the afternoon.

$175,000 FOR DEMPSEY TO MEET CARPENTIER

Chicago, Dec. 9.—Two flattering offers for a match between Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion of the world, and Georges Carpentier, premier boxer in Europe, have been received by Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager. Kearns sent the following telegram to the Associated Press today:

"Just received cable from Edward Cochrane, the English promoter, offering $175,000 to meet Carpentier there. Also have offer from Tortorich, the New Orleans promoter, of $150,000 for Dempsey's end to box Carpentier. Dempsey is making motion pictures here, but is doing light training every day and will be willing and ready to defend his title as quick as Carpentier or any other suitable opponent the public demands to meet Dempsey can be selected. Would much prefer fighting in America than to Europe, but will accept the best offer. With best wishes."

Mr. Gordon expects the case to be dealt with before Christmas, and hopes to have a report from the Minister of Justice by the end of December.

HEALTH BOARD GIVES TORONTO WARNING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Dec. 9.—It is stated today that the Provincial Department of Health will take drastic action against the city of Toronto unless Mayor Church and the City Council comply with the Board's demand to issue a proclamation making general vaccination against smallpox epidemic compulsory on all citizens. The general feeling is that the Board of Health will take action to practically isolate Toronto from the rest of the Province, by preventing transportation to and from the city unless the demand of the Board is complied with.

INSIST THAT MINES BE NATIONALIZED

TRADES UNION CONGRESS POSTPONES FINAL ACTION UNTIL FEBRUARY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 9.—The postponment of action with reference to the nationalization of the mines of Great Britain was decided upon by special Trades Union Congress, which met here today. A resolution was adopted deferring the decision of this issue until February.

Speaking on the subject, J. H. Thomas, general secretary of the Railwaymen's Union, declared the management of mines during the war had discussed mine owners, irritated the miners and bewildered the public. Robert Smillie, miners' leader, warned the Government that the miners, even if left alone in their position by other Labor interests, would insist upon nationalization after February. Should Government not agree to this constitutional action would be taken.

LEAVES HALF OF FORTUNE OF $145,000,000 TO PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS

Henry Clay Frick, ironmaster and art collector, left an estate valued approximately at $145,000,000. His will gives to his widow, his two children and to friends and servants the sum of $25,000,000. The remainder, placed at about $120,000,000, goes to the public in the form of bequests and endowments for numerous institutions.

Terms of the remarkable document were made public yesterday in New York and Pittsburg. The will disposes of one of the largest personal fortunes accumulated in this country. With lavish hand Mr. Frick gives more freely to the public than any other of the nation's capitalists whose fortunes tell the story of the nation's material rise. The one possible exception is Andrew Carnegie. Their industrial rivalry, which lasted half a century, came to a climax with their death in giving back their millions to the people.

The Frick mansion, with its art treasures, at Fifth avenue and Seventieth street, is valued at $50,000,000—millions more than was anticipated. In addition, Mr. Frick creates a trust fund of $15,000,000 for the Frick collection. The beautiful mansion will be Mrs. Frick's home as long as she wishes to reside there. With her death, or when she determines to leave it as a permanent home, the entire property goes to a board of nine trustees, which is charged with maintaining the place as a home for the art collection given by Mr. Frick to the public. Mr. Frick specifies that the rooms are to be maintained as they were when he lived there amid the priceless paintings and objects he loved. The rooms are to be kept as he arranged and left them. The Frick collection is not to be gathered into a museum, but may be added to within the discretion of the trustees, who are to receive $50,000 each for acting.

WILLIAM JACKSON DIED NATURAL DEATH

Natural death was the verdict of the coroner's jury empowered to enquire into the death of Wm. Jackson, which occurred in the lane joining Brock and Hunter streets between George and Water streets about a week ago.

Drs. McPherson and Wood had made a post mortem examination of the body and could not determine definitely the exact cause of the death. Whatever caused it it came very suddenly was their opinion. No marks of any kind were found on any part of the body and consequently the jury felt that a verdict of natural cause was correct. It was a most unusual death the doctors agreed.

WILL CLOSE PORTION OF CRESCENT STREET

SOLD TO McDONALD LUMBER CO. FOR $500 FOR EXPANSION PURPOSES

A by-law authorizing the closing of a portion of Crescent street (Water street, according to governmental survey) just south of Rink street, passed its several readings in City Council last night. The Alfred McDonald Lumber Company own property each side this portion of the street to be closed, for which they are paying the city $5000. They need this property for factory expansion purposes.

Mr. G. N. Gordon was present and objected to the closing of the street on the ground that such action would prejudicially affect Mr. H. P. LaPlante's adjacent property on Perry street. These lands will in future, he said, be used commercially, and access to the wharf and Rink street via Water street, would be essential.

Ald. Edgar said this street had been impassable the past 25 or 30 years now, and he expressed surprise at its value advanced just at a time when the city has decided to encourage the development of an old established industry.

Mr. LaPlante's objection was noted but the by-law carried.

USEFUL FACTS FOR FARMERS PROVEN AT THE U. F. O. MEETING LAST NIGHT

Mr. Minnick, Dominion Agriculturist in an Illustrated Address Explains the Most Beneficial and Economical Methods of Modern Farming.

Mr. Minnick, Dominion agriculturist, gave an exceptionally valuable illustrated address to the members of the local club of the U. F. O. last night.

Mr. Minnick's work is chiefly to supervise the Government's illustration farms. There are sixteen of these in the County of Dundas. Here all kinds of grain and farm produce are grown under various conditions and by comparing the different results they ascertain which method is most advantageous in the production of certain crops. The assertions Mr. Minnick made were not merely statements but were proven by pictures on the screen that illustrated his point absolutely.

Plough Deep.

Mr. Minnick emphasized the necessity of ploughing as deep as the nature of the soil will permit. Even the most shallow rooted crops go down two and three feet into the ground. If the ground is not ploughed more than about 10 inches deep the compact saturated soil, through which the roots of plants will not grow, comes up to within 10 ins. of the surface and cuts off a considerable extent of the plants' feeding ground.

Heavy rolling after seeding is injurious. It packs down the surface earth and cracks it, allowing the moisture, from which the plant gets its food, to evaporate. The perfect method is to roll the land, then harrow it. A picture was shown where a man, by using four horses and attaching the harrow to the roller, could do both operations at the one time.

Use Good Seed.

The speaker emphasized the advantage of using a kind of seed grain that was known to be good for that locality. He was in a county where there were 28 different kinds of oats growing. No county is adapted to the successful growth of 28 kinds of oats.

Don'ts For The Farmer.

Don't pile manure under eaves, was a warning. The water soaks through the pile and dissolves most of the beneficial substances and spoils the value of the fertiliser.

Don't waist the liquid manure. A picture was shown where a good farmer had placed a tile drain from the floor of his pig pen to the outside in order to keep the pen dry. The speaker considered this the same as throwing away money, as that part of the manure is most valuable for fertilising purposes. That was also clearly illustrated by a chart on the screen.

"Does it do any harm to spread it on the snow in winter?" asked a member.

"It does in wet places or on the slope of a hill," was the answer. In such circumstances the water carries away the valuable substances from the fertilizer.

Don't pile the manure too high. It will beat and lose nitrogen.

Spread the manure thinly over the ground because ten loads on one acre will do more good than ten loads on one-half an acre.

Feed the Earth.

The great injury caused to the earth in the West by taking from the ground and giving nothing back was illustrated by a picture showing the loose sterile earth blown about in piles. The Western farmers, in most parts, are already adopting the rotation of crops and will eventually come to mixed farming. In many places now they are ploughing down clover crops to strengthen the ground.

Sow clover ten pounds to the acre. This leaves over two inches for each seed and will yield the best crop. It is good fo the ground to plough down any kind of clover. Illustrations were shown where the crops after clover was ploughed down was a great deal better than crop after crop.

Pasture the pigs on alfalfa. They will not ruin it like horses and cattle.

It has been proved by experiment that home-grown clover seed is much hardier than the imported stock.

Sweet clover should be grown where red clover and alfalfa will not flourish.

The second crop of clover does not yield as much seed as the first crop.

The common smut of oats can be totally prevented by the formulate treatment. The loose smut of barley can not be destroyed, and is a very serious menace.

Utilize Labor.

Illustrations were shown of many labor-saving devices. One man with four horses can do more work than two men with one ox, it was illustrated.

A neat workshop with everything in order saves much time. Keep all the implements in a shed and packed carefully away in the winter time. Illustrations showed that this was not always done.

Every farmer can have a good water system in his house and save his wife walking 100 miles a year with a pail of water.

These and many other improvements were advocated by Mr. Minnick.

2630 POUNDS OF HAY ON AN AUTO TRUCK

ENNISMORE FARMER DRIVES OVER SLIPPERY ROADS TO CITY WITH TRUCK

A wet, slippery road is one of the obstacles that does not prevent the progressive farmer from carrying on his work in an up-to-date way. This morning, Jack Flood, a farmer from Ennismore, drove to the city in an automobile and with him brought a load of 2,630 pounds of hay.

The farmers of the district can take a lesson in progressiveness from this tiller of the soil, who drives to town with a large load of hay at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour and leaves his horses at home working, or resting up for the work for which they are essential on the following day.

The appearance of an auto truck carrying a load of hay is a direct proof of the progress made by the farmer of Peterborough County.

THEATRICAL

AT THE GRAND

Theda Bara is seen at the Grand this week in a picture version of Victor Hugo's great novel, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and as in the case in the majority of her pictures she is a decided success. The story will be familiar to most readers but in the film version greater interest is centered around Esmeralda, the dancer, than around the Hunchback. Theda Bara makes the most of all her strong situations and in this picture she is given every opportunity to display her histrionic ability.

She is supported by a strong cast the part of the hunchback being particularly well taken. The minor characters are ably handled, too, and altogether this picture is well worth seeing.

An amusing comedy picture, entitled, "The Son of a Gun" convulsed the audience with laughter. The Ved-aVil movies show some good acrobatic acts and an out-of-the-ordinary dog turn. Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff cartoon also drew the usual laugh.

The Grand orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Howarth, is rapidly becoming one of the city's best musical organizations. The addition of a set of tympanies has added volume to an already nearly perfect instrumentation.

This excellent program will be repeated tonight and should be seen to be appreciated.

GAVE SONG RECITAL IN FIVE LANGUAGES

JAPANESE PRIMA-DONNA WILL BE HERE WITH GALLO OPERA COMPANY

A great deal of interest is being manifested over the coming to this city with the Gallo English Opera Co. of Hana Shimosumi, the Japanese prima donan, and already several receptions have been suggested for her during the company's stay here. Miss Shimozumi speaks the most fluent English, as well as French and Spanish, in addition to her native tongue, and is a conversationalist of no mean ability. During her recent appearances in Washington she was the guest of the Japanese embassy on several occasions, at one of which, to show her versatility, she gave a song recital in five different languages.

HUGH DUFFY WILL MANAGE THE LEAFS

FORMER LEADER OF WHITE SOX CHOSEN BY J. J. McCAFERY AS BENCH MANAGER

President J. J. McCaffery, of the Toronto Ball Club, wired from New York that he had signed Hugh Duffy, veteran player and former American League leader, as manager of the Leafs for the season of 1920 Mr. Duffy is a bench manager and a high-class man in his business.

The new manager of the Leafs is a jovial, good-natured Irishman, a keen baseball student, and a fine judge of a ball player. He has a wide acquaintance among the big leaguers and is universally liked. He should have no difficulty in getting players for the Toronto club. As a player Duffy was one of the best in the business and has always been successful as a manager. He used to manage the Providence team when the Grays were in their prime and for several years managed the Chicago White Sox in the American League.

PERSIA AND THE WAR.

That exceedingly ill wind, the world war, blew much good to one nation, Persia, for the higher price of silver has doubled her capital, made her raw materials sought after by the world, and removed her from comparative isolation to a place among commercial nations of high importance.

Persia is one of the oldest empires in existence. It has been a kingdom for twenty-five centuries—ever since Cyrus the Great, about 550 B.C., conquered Media and united that country to his under the name of Persia. It has had many glorious episodes in its long history; has produced the great teacher Zoroaster, such world-famous poets as Firdausi, Omar Khayyam, Saadi and Hafiz, and such great soldiers and rulers as Darius I, and Shah Abbas.

Again and again the empire has been a prey to anarchy; again and again conquering hosts have swept through the country. Alexander the Great having many a successor, the most destructive conqueror being Genghis Khan with his hordes of savage Mongols—a leader who boasted that he had slain 13,000,000 of his fellow-creatures!

The centre of the country is a great plateau, rising from 2,000 to 6,000 feet, and crossed by frequent chains of mountains, while a lofty mountain barrier bounds it on the north and south.

In the whole Persian Empire there were in 1910 only six miles of railway, and of roads only four, their total length amounting to fewer than 800 miles. There is only one navigable river, the Karun, that flows into the head of the Persian Gulf, and on this sea the so-called ports are merely open roadsteads, at which cargo cannot be landed in stormy weather.

The merchandise of Persia is practically carried on the backs of camels, mules and donkeys, a slow and expensive mode of transport, and the traveler usually rides through the country following the tracks made by the passage of caravans during the centuries.

The Persian is of Aryan stock, and has the words as ourself for father mother, brother and daughter (pidar, madar, bradar and dukhtar), and the construction of his language is like that of English.

He is a handsome, well-built man, with regular features and fine black eyes, his complexion being no darker than that of an Italian. In manner he is most courteous; he is quick, alert, fond of conversation and discussion and has rightly been called the Frenchman of the East.

Persia has been a Mohammedan country from the time of its conquest by the Arabs, in 641; but some thousands of Zoroastrians, the old fire-worshippers, still remain in the land, and have been much persecuted.

Many Persians have no home life in the usual sense of the word. A Persian house is divided into the biroonl, or men's apartments, and the anderoom, or part consecrated to the women. A strong door, set in a high blank wall, gives entrance to a narrow passage that leads into a square courtyard on which open several rooms. Here the men live, and here they usually entertain their friends while their women dwell in rooms set round an inner courtyard, the only entrance to which is through the baroonl.

As a Persian is instructed from earliest youth that a woman's advice is of no account—in fact the priests tell him that he had better do the exact opposite of what a woman counsels—it can be understood that as a rule he has no exalted opinion of his wife or wives, and seldom turns to them for companionship.

When death approaches, if he has performed his daily prayers, kept the Fast of Ramazan, visited the mosque on Friday, and given alms to the poor, a Persian has no doubts as to his reception in the next world and dies in a happy confidence of attaining to the paradise promised by the prophet to all his faithful followers.

Too Good for Daily Use.

We must have a weak spot or two in a character before we can love it much. People that do not laugh or cry, or take more of anything than is good for them, or use anything but dictionary words, are admirable subjects for biographies. But we don't care most for those flat-pattern flowers that press best in the herbarium.—O. W. Holmes.

FEARED INVASION.

Notwithstanding the bloodless character of the Fenian Raid, as compared with the terrible struggle that has just closed in Europe, there was really more excitement in Goderich and surrounding country in 1866 than there was in 1914 There was the chance that Goderich itself might be an objective of the invaders and warlike preparations were made accordingly, says Wm. Swaffield in the Toronto Star Weekly.

For about six weeks after the commencement of hostilities in 1866 business of all kinds in Goderich and its surroundings was at a standstill. I well remember when I donned the badge of Home Guard and night [illegible] harbor, where trouble might first have been expected if the invader reached our shores. The garrison consisted of an artillery company, a rifle company and an infantry company, and these were reinforced by the "fighting Irishmen" from Goderich Township and the adjoining country.

The Hand bakery, opposite the present Park House, was taken over as the guard-room, and rifle pits were constructed along the lake bank, opposite the residence now occupied by G. M. Elliott. The pits had men stationed in them at all times, night and day. Down below on the docks barrels of salt were utilized to make a "battery," and every precaution of defence was taken.

They were all ready to shoot, when the look-outs announced that a steamer had been sighted on the lake. Excitement prevailed, and the men of the garrison at the harbor and the riflemen on the bank prepared for action. The vessel loomed larger and headed for the harbor. On she came, until directly under the guns of the garrison. Not a sign from her masthead or her decks to indicate whether she was friend or foe, and with the utmost bravado she reached the inner basin.

Then, when another moment might have meant her destruction, she unfurled the American flag. It turned out to be the United States Government ship Michigan with Gen. Sherman aboard.

The posting of sentries along the lake bank was continued after this incident. I was with a company which had a post farther around the lake bank than the present Hotel Sunset. One morning about daybreak a groundhog or some such animal startled a sentry as it moved along the bank, and the sentry shot it, alarming the rest of the guard

At one time word that the enemy had left Chicago, en route to Goderich. At another time it was given out that a number of vessels had left Port Huron for Goderich. The news spread like wildfire. As I was acquainted with places along the lake shore where an attempt might be made to land, I started out in the night with John Campbell to warn the settlers along the lake shore. They in turn warned other residents along the Bayfield road. About this time horsemen were put on duty between Goderich and Bayfield, and infantrymen with rifles tramped along the Bayfield road to meet the enemy. Not all of them had rifles. It was reported that one of the recruits had joined the company as it marched along, his only weapon being a pitchfork.

Some of the people went through experiences like those of the refugees in Europe, and the few survivors of those times know how to feel for war sufferers. One man took his cow and his bed, hoisted his bed on his back, and led the cow to the highlands of Colborne Township. Another man between Goderich and Bayfield made a supply of pancakes by way of an "iron ration" and took these with him to the safe shelter of a hollow log. One farmer buried his new stove, his most treasured possession, lest it be broken by the invaders. Many others buried their valuables.

Vet. Could Tell Him.

A member of Parliament called another an ass in the sacred precincts of the House. Unparliamentary language being forbidden, the offending M.P. had to apologize and withdraw his statement. He didn't like doing it. "I withdraw," he said very stiffly; "but I maintain that the honorable member is out of order." "How am I out of order?" asked the other man heatedly. "Probably a veterinary surgeon could tell you," was the retort.

President of Germany

As He Looks to His Wife.

Who Is a Practical "Frau"

"MOST men are a little stupid, and some are a trifle mad, but Fritz is a good man," says the wife of President Freidrich Ebert of Germany, generalising on men in general and her husband in particular. It seems that Mrs. Ebert has found it necessary to keep a supervisory eye on her husband ever since they were married, and she continues to do so even now after he has become the head of the German Republic. It is said that she is a good business woman and the financial head of the family. Mr. Ebert is reported to have failed financially both as a tailor and as a harness-maker. When he became editor of a Socialist newspaper and got it financially tangled up in a month or so, his wife stepped in and took charge of the business of the concern. She has stayed on the job ever since. Economy seems to be the main principle in her system of financial philosophy, and she practices it now just as she did in the old days, even to the extent, we are told in "The Dearborn Independent," of making her husband's shirts. We read further:—

"There are some splendid stories of Frau Ebert being waited on by the court dressmakers and other official nobodies, all eager to fawn on the new leader's wife. Frau Ebert promptly snubbed them and, it is hoped, flaunted one of her husband's shirts in their faces. In the same way she scorned all official receptions. The most she was willing to do was to have in a few friends and open a bottle of wine.

This forty-seven-year-old housewife is a real democrat and always apologizes for having servants. She gives interviews to newspapermen, but they are always sound and smack of a homily. She refers to the time when Ebert was making only $4 a week and admits it was and is a sad world, although now the income of the pair is really huge. She sits sewing and knitting while she talks just as if 'Fritz' Ebert were depending on a new shirt in order to appear at a Cabinet meeting.

PRESIDENT EBERT.

"'We are all servants,' she tells the reporters, 'some of us selfish ones, some unselfish. The unselfish ones will save Germany if the selfish ones will let them. We should be a frugal people, and will need to be; but it will help us more than hurt us.'

"'I believe that every woman should cook and sew, while every man should grow something good to eat.'"

In addition to being canny in the matter of finance and economy, it appears further that "the first lady of Germany" is a first-class cook. In fact, we are led to believe that it was this quality that moved the future President to propose to her. As it appears:—

"She first met Freiderich Ebert at Bremen. He was a flaming young radical in those days, with a gift for soap-box oratory and extravagant middle-class eloquence. He used to spout along the quays, haranguing the dock workers, and Louise used to linger on the outskirts of the crowd and laugh at him.

"She laughed at him so much that he was forced to laugh at himself, and that did him a lot of good.'

"And just at that critical moment he discovered one day that Louise could make such an omelette, with peas.

"So they were married."

There were six children, and what with financial failures and other vicissitudes, the family found life more or less of a struggle. Mrs. Ebert discovered that she saved money if she made her own and the family's clothes, and it is said she hunted all the shops in Berlin for the food bargains. The sudden change in fortune did not turn her head. "Fritz is a clever man," was all she said when informed by a neighbor that her husband had become head of the new Government. And to a newspaper man who interviewed her recently she said:

"Fritz is a good man, and a clever man. The great trouble with the fatherland is that Fritz and all like him were prevented from serving earlier. We never grovelled before Prussianism, and we never shouted with the proletariat. We were the solid, hard-working German people, and we had nothing to say at all. It was a great pity.

"Yes, I prune his speeches sometimes. Every man needs a woman to guide him a bit. I know they say I stage-managed his career; supposing I did—if I did—is it an unworthy ambition, and should not the fatherland be glad of it? Of course there are many critics; most men are a little stupid, and some are a trifle mad. But Fritz is a good man."

Hamilton trustees say the finances will not allow of giving the women teachers the increase in salary which they demand.

How Oranges Are Bathed.

Oranges are not just plucked off the tree and packed into crates, and then shipped off to foreign countries. If that were the case, most oranges before they arrived would be rotten and not worth eating.

When an orange is plucked the skin begins to draw closer to the pulp, and this causes the orange to give off moisture, which would make it "sweat" and spoil if packed at once.

Instead, the oranges are bathed. They are dumped into a long, narrow tank of water, at one end of which is a big wheel with a tire of soft bristles. This wheel turns round so that its lower edge works with another set of brushes below, and the oranges, after bobbing about in the tank, pass between these wet brushes and come out, bright and clear.

In some of the small packing houses women clean oranges by hand. Each with a tub of water and brush scrub busily away at huge piles of oranges, which never seem to grow less.

After their wash the oranges are spread out in the sun to dry on long slanting racks, after which they are packed in the well-known orange boxes. But before that they are brushed again to give them a smooth, shiny look ready for the market.

The Imperative.

Heck—I understand that your wife is subject to moods.

Peck—Wrong! She has but one and I am subject to that.

CINCINNATI'S VICTORY IN WORLD'S SERIES WAS A SURPRISE TO UMPIRE

Failure of Cicotte and Williams to do Their Best and Wonderful Work of Little Dick Kerr Were Largely Responsible.

(By Billy Evans.)

"What about the world's series, Bill?"

In my advance stories on the series I said I believed no club in the last ten years entered a world series with a better chance to win than the Reds. I figured them a bit like the Braves of 1914, a club that had come from nowhere and had reached the conclusion it was able to get about anywhere. However, I had seen the White Sox perform so brilliantly so many times I felt the finish would favor the Sox after a hard struggle.

I do not believe the strongest club won the series. That statement in no way detracts from the performance of the Cincinnati club. The Reds played the better ball, deserved to win, and since the championship was to be decided in nine games, there is no way to dispute the superiority of the Reds as far as the recent series is concerned. The Cincinnati club played steady, consistent ball, punctuated here and there with some brilliant effort, such as the catch by Eddie Rousch in the ninth inning of the final game, which staved off a Chicago rally. I have been asked many times if the Reds did not play above their game. I have always said I did not think so. It seemed to me Cincinnati was simply playing the high-grade of baseball that won the pennant in the National league and eventually the world championship.

On the other hand, I know the Chicago club did not play anywhere near up to its standard. With the exception of the seventh game, when the Sox came through with a brilliant performance that was typical of its efforts through the 1919 season, I would say the club was off its game at least 30 per cent. This is no alibi for the defeat of the Sox. The Chicago club was outplayed through the greater part of the series, and the victory of the Reds was only the result of more timely hitting, and a bit more consistency on the part of the pitchers, particularly in the first five games when it meant so much.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Reds put over the big thing in the series when they drove Cicotte off the rubber in the first game, scoring five runs in one inning and practically cinched the game. The psychology of that drubbing handed Cicotte had an injurious effect on the Chicago club. Not once during the American league season had Cicotte been treated as rudely. Every hit made off him in that inning was a ringing drive that had the earmarks of a base hit all over it. True, had not Risberg stumbled in trying to complete a double play he would have thrown Kopf out 10 feet and retired the side, but that was a break of the game, and perhaps would have only saved Cicotte temporarily. The Reds were able to take advantage of that break by making base hit after base hit. I know just about how every Chicago player felt as Cicotte walked to the bench after being bombarded for five runs. The pitching ace of their staff, a pitcher they regarded as almost unbeatable, had been hit to all corners of the lot. It must have had a most depressing effect on the club, and I think it was the beginning of the end of the hopes of the White Sox.

The failure of Williams in the second game was also a body blow. Right off the reel the Reds had beaten the two pitchers who, to a great extent, had made possible the winning of the pennant by Chicago. A mere glance at the score of that game would make it seem that Williams had greatly outpitched Sallee, yet such was not the case. Sallee was touched for 10 hits, while at least half a dozen hard-hit balls were caught. Williams was found for only four hits, but he gave six bases on balls, four of which figured in the run-making, while one of the four hits allowed was a triple with two men on as a result of bases on balls. Sallee, on the other hand, was often in trouble, but pitched his best in the pinches.

Because of the remarkable work of the Reds' pitching staff, and Eller striking out six men in a row, I have been asked many questions about it. I want to say no pitcher impressed me more than Jimmy Ring. He looked like a whale of a pitcher. He showed terrific speed, a fine curve, and a beautiful fadeaway. Likewise, he showed me all kinds of nerve and a fine disposition. Nothing seemed to fuss him. Eller has good speed, but much of his effectiveness must be credited to trick pitching, as he has the "shine" developed to the nth degree.

Little Dick Kerr saved the Sox from disgrace. His two pitching efforts were classics. In his first game he stood the Reds on their heads and won 3 to 0. In the second attempt he was hit rather freely and forced to go 10 innings to win, 5 to 4. I may seem strange, but to me his work in the second game was more impressive than in the first. In the second contest he was constantly in trouble, and during the early innings his teammates were floundering. It took nerve to stand the acid test of that game, and Kerr came through with flying colors. He was the most impressive figure of the series, the sure enough dark horse of the classic.

However, no matter how one sums up the series, it simmers down to the making of the old base hit at the proper time. In every game Chicago had more chances offered to get away in front than the Reds, yet seldom was able to avail itself of the opportunity. On the other hand, when the breaks of the game came, the Reds were always able to come through with the timely hit. Cincinnati won the series because it played better ball, got more consistent pitching, but, best of all, packed the punch when it was more needed. The Reds are a real ball club, liable to make trouble for several years in the National League, and are deserving of the title world's champions. So be it.

RECEIVES 5 WOUNDS STILL WANTS TO FIGHT

Boston, Dec. 9.—Being wounded five times in the world war didn't stop Tommy O'Brien's desire to fight. Not at all, at all.

The scrappy young Irishman has completely recovered from his injuries, and is now ready to do battle with all lightweight fighters in this neck of the woods, including Charley Parker, Harry Charlson and Johnny Downes in particular.

O'Brien hails originally from Los Angeles, and he did considerable fighting on the Pacific coast before joining the American army.

He went overseas with the Sixth Infantry of the Fifth Division, regular army. During the 14 months he was in France he participated in some of the heaviest fighting. O'Brien was stabbed in the left side and left foot in a bayonet fight with a German at Argonne Forest. Upon recovering from these wounds O'Brien got into the St. Mihiel offensive and was shot in both legs with machine gun bullets. These wounds put O'Brien out of the fighting for several months, the armistice being signed before he was ready for the battle front again.

The soldier-fighter defeated Monk, Fowler, Muff Bronson, Tom Richards and a number of other coast scrappers in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland since returning from France.

O'Brien says he can make 133 pounds at ringside, if necessary. He has gone under the management of Alex. McLean and will be seen in in action soon.

COL. HUSTON LAUGHS AT CONNIE MACK

ONE HAS NO PARK THE OTHER HAS NO CLUB SO THEY ARE QUITS

Connie Mack, frequent tenant of the cellar in recent baseball years, but at one time something of a figure in the National game, rushed into the American League fight long enough to say that it would be a good thing if the Yankees got out.

Recently the New York American League Club, through Colonel Huston, thus reminded that there was such a person as Connie Mack, made gentle retort. After he had finished laughing at the Mack statement Colonel Huston said:

"Out of pity for poor old Connie Mack we would rather not notice his humorous remarks to the effect that it would be a good thing for baseball if the New York Yankees would get out. But the idea of Connie reading anybody out of anything is so humorous that we can't resist the temptation to say that the Yankees have been travelling to Philadelphia during the five years we have owned the club and on few trips have we ever received enough as the visiting club's share of receipts to pay hotel bills and car-fare.

"One day the total receipts were doubtless the lowest amount ever taken in by a major league club. We were paid for twenty-one persons, grand total of $4.11. Connie has run last, consistently—almost dropped out of the league without any other club to read him out.

"It is only a question of time when our league will raise the question of the propriety of a change of ownership in the Athletics. That club for a long term of years has not contributed to the prosperity of the league in proportion to the population of Philadelphia. Philadelphia has shown itself in the past to be one of the best baseball cities in America and the poor management in the last few years has made it the worst.

"Too much praise must have made Connie think himself a genius. So great grew his opinion of his own ability that he broke up the greatest ball club in history, thinking, of course, he could build another at odd moments. But somehow it didn't work. Like the small boy with the watch apart, he couldn't get it together again. And now Connie is trying to read us out. He says we have a ball club but no ball park. All right. He has a ball park and no ball club, making it fifty-fifty. We can stand for criticism from a man whose ball club lost 504 games in five years.

"Connie Mack is a nice old man whom the procession has passed. In this regard there is a strong bond of sympathy between himself and Ban Johnson. Both are in the same boat Has-Been, floating down the river of Time to oblivion.

"Fans well remember this same old Connie was the first man in baseball to bolt a ruling of the National Commission and drag the sport into the courts. For fifteen years this commission had regulated baseball and everything was running smoothly. Suddenly the supreme court of the game made a ruling against Connie Mack in the Scott Perry case. He refused to abide by the ruling and rushed for a court injunction. That was the precedent for succeeding injunctions."

Many a young man has got into a peck of trouble by trying to hide his light under a bushel.

BASEBALL WEEK IN NEW YORK CITY

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE WILL BE FIRST TO MEET WITH ONE FRANCHISE TO DISPOSE OF

New York, Dec. 8.—Baseball business and basebal politics come to the fore in this city during the present week with the gathering of major and minor league magnates in annual meeting. While on the surface the conferences appear to promise little more than routine developments, there is the lurking possibility that before the meetings end some radical changes may be made in the management and regulars of the professional game.

Taken in the order of their assembly, the new International League club owners will be first to gather, going into session (day) at 10 o'clock, with President D. L. Fultz in the chair. One of the most important actions of the International magnates will be the transfer of the Newark club franchise to some other city for the season of 1920. Several localities are being considered, with Syracuse, N.Y., apparently the leader.

Other business to come before the meeting is the election of a president. Fultz is likely to be re-elected.

Award Orioles Pennant.

The pennant will be officially awarded to the Baltimore club, and the financial affairs of the former Syracuse club, together with the reserve rights of certain of the players adjusted.

On Tuesday the National League will hold its annual meeting. The directors will formally award the 1919 pennant to the Cincinnati club, and report on such financial matters as may come before that body. Among the business to be considered by the league as a whole is the schedule for 1920, which, it is understood, will probably consist of 154 games. The question of a new agreement with the minor leagues may also come up for attention. A new board o directors will be elected, but President John A. Heydler will hold over during the coming year under the contract.

Two Meetings for American.

Next Wednesday there will be two meetings of the American League, one here and the other at Chicago. Presidents Comiskey of the Chicago club, Frazee of Boston and Ruppert of New York, who compose a majority of the league's board of directors, claim that the meeting called by them to take place here on Dec. 10 will be the legal annual meeting of the American League. President Johnson, the league's executive, subsequently issued a call for the annual meeting to be held at Chicago on that day. The majority membership of the board of directors declare that no official business can be transacted legally at any meeting other than called by them. Both factions insist that there will be no backdown.

Bulls in Parliament.

"Begorra! some of the best Irish bulls are English," said an Irish M.P. not long ago, and he was right, says Tit-Bits. When the Gladstone umbrella was all the rage, an opposition candidate was heard to declare: "We, too, have an umbrella, and its voice will soon be heard; and when it speaks, it will speak with no uncertain sound." Quite as good was the assertion of an M. P. who said: "I see a vision before mine eyes. I see the car of progress rolling along in its majesty, gnashing its teeth as it rolls." A better-known M. P. is credited with the statement that "the British lion, whether it is roaming the deserts of India or climbing the forests of Canada, will not draw in its horns nor retire into its shell." It was a politician, too, who some time ago declared that "the Government keep cutting the wool off the sheep that lays the golden eggs." Another speaker once stated that the union of England and Ireland would turn barren hills into fertile valleys. But one M. P., speaking on total prohibition, rather overstepped the mark when he said: "The glorious work will never be accomplished until the good ship Temperance shall sail from one end of the land to the other, and with a cry of 'Victory' at each step she takes, shall plant her banner in every city, town and village of our country."

Trafalgar Men Had Pewter Medals.

The Trafalgar medal was struck in pewter for the lower deck. The seamen were annoyed at its shoddy appearance, and most of the recipients threw their decorations into the sea.

The Soudan medal of 1896-7 has a ribbon in which yellow and black are separated by a narrow stripe of scarlet. These colors were chosen to symbolize the driving out of the black Dervishes from the yellow desert by the "thin red line."

Another ribbon which has an interesting significance is the yellow, blue and yellow suspender of the Khedive's Soudan medal. Here we have typified the Blue Nile running through the sandy plains of Egypt.

The authorities have never been in a hurry over issuing medals; there are two instances on record when those entitled to rewards have been called upon to wait fifty years for their decorations.

The Victoria Cross was designed by Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort. For a long while it was made of the bronze obtained from cannons captured in the Crimea. Now, the makers use cannon taken in the Boxer rising.

For Jellalabad a very ugly medal was struck, and those who received it grumbled in no measured terms. A really artistic piece was then provided, and all who possessed the first were requested to exchange it for the second. Not one per cent. of the recipients applied for the better medal.

Until the year 1914, the Long Service ribbon for the army was similar to that for the Victoria Cross. The only difference was in width, the latter being a fraction of an inch wider. Such was official intelligence.

After Waterloo the Chief Engraver of the Mint was commissioned to prepare a fitting medal for presentation to the leaders of the victorious armies. He did so, but took thirty years to complete the work.

The medal for Culloden was the first to be provided with a ribbon of definite pattern. Before then each wearer suspended his decoration with any sort of ribbon he pleased.—Tit-Bits.

Nobility of Labor.

How, then, can we set the world to work again? It can be done only by the dread of starvation or by the acceptance of a new principle as the basis of industry. Man will work happily if he has an assurance that he is serving himself and his fellows; he will not work happily if he suspects that he is mainly serving a self-seeking master.

He is not a Utopian, who demands the establishment of a new heaven or a new earth to-morrow. He only wishes to be able to feel that his work is a contribution to something better than an employer's balance at the bank. Work is a means of escape from the ills of starvation, ignorance, dirt and general helplessness. It becomes nobler when it is done for the purpose of enabling others to escape from these ills. The commonplaces of morality tell us all this. Preachers have told us for ages that the work of a crossing sweeper done from a generous motive is as noble as the work of a Prime Minister.

Only if we get back the idea of the nobility of work into the general mind can we ever persuade men again to work as hard as they used to do. They will never work such long hours again. All the more important will it be for them—we should say for us—to work still more intensely at such work as our hands find to do.

Insect Reading Lamp.

The lantern-fly of South America sometimes measures more than two inches in length. The shape of the head is very curious. It is furnished with a hollow, transparent snout, nearly the length of the body, whence comes the lamplike light.

A lady, relating her first impressions of these insects, says she had several of them brought to her in the daytime, and put them into a box. In the night the confined insects make such a noise as to awaken her. She opened the box, the inside of which seemed to be all ablaze, and in her astonishment the box fell from her hands. Each of the insects seemed to be on fire.

She soon, however, guessed the cause, and replaced her brilliant guests in their place of confinement. She said that the light of one of these insects was bright enough to read by.—Tit-Bits.

Secrets Brides May Keep.

That the age of bride and bridegroom need no longer be inscribed on the marriage certificate is a new rule in regard to French marriages. It is sufficient if they are declared of age, or over thirty, a statement of specific age being unnecessary, says Tit-Bits.

Hitherto it has been necessary to have the banns posted up on the door of the Town Hall for ten days, including two Sundays. The latter clause in the rule has been abolished, while, if desired at the house of either the bride or bridegroom. Two witnesses instead of four, will also in future be sufficient.

The names of the respective parents will no longer appear in the official publications. The mother of one of the contracting parties will in future have the right to oppose the marriage, a right which before [illegible]

"Watch Dogs" of the Sea.

The British Admiralty's notice to mariners that they have put down a number of hydrophones in the Bressay Sands connected by cables to the mainland of the Shetlands may make the landsmen wonder what the object of such might be.

Inquiries at the Admiralty elicited the fact that this war invention is now being experimented with for commercial purposes, one idea being the greater efficiency of our coast illumination.

Hydrophones are really complex microphones on a big scale which were used during the war to detect the presence of German submarines.

The first ones used were of a very elementary kind, but ever since the Admiralty experts have been perfecting these ocean sound detectors—that being the principle upon which the enemy vessels were discovered—so that to-day they have evolved an instrument of high nautical value, which can be used in foggy weather or darkness to give the first signs of the approach of unknown vessels carrying contraband, or locating in foggy weather ships in distress.

By means of this ocean watchdog the coastguard can sit ashore and tell exactly where any smuggling undersea boat is endeavoring to make a passage.

Big Kangaroo Nearly Extinct.

G. T. Lloyd, who has written a book of his early days in Australia, says that the big forester kangaroo is now nearly extinct. He once measured several successive leaps made by one of these animals in a slight declivity and found them to average thirty feet each, although the kangaroo had to rise five or six feet with each jump to clear dead trees and limbs.

GILMOUR MEMORIAL ANNIVERSARY SUPPER

LARGE CROWD ENJOY BOUNTIFUL SUPPER AND ENJOYABLE ENTERTAINMENT

A very large crowd gathered at the suffer and entertainment in connection with the anniversary services of the Gilmour Memorial Church. The tables, that were bountifully loaded by the ladies, were filled two or three times during the coarse of the supper.

After the meal had been served an entertainment of a very high order was enjoyed by all.

Rev. John Galt and Mr. Webster delivered short addresses, in which they outlined the work that has been accomplished by the Gilmour Memorial Church. They thought the past history of the church should inspire the people greater incentive in the future to increase the already wonderful work of the people.

Then Miss Doris Rathbone treated the audience to one of her beautiful solos and Mr. Jopling recited. After Miss Rathbone had again contributed to the program Rev. W. T. Dribble delivered an interesting and educational address on the "History of the Early Church."

He spoke of how the incidents recorded in the history of the early church could and should be used as direct messages to the church and people of the 20th century. The cross of Christ, taking its proper place in the centre of the church, has a high inspirational value to the people.

The history of the old church with its united front to adversity is a direct lesson for the churches to carry on in the great united National Forward Movement.

The meeting broke up late in the night and everyone agreed heartily that it was one of the best anniversaries in the history of that or any other church.

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY DINNER

The largest anniversary dinner Knox congregation has ever enjoyed was held in the lecture hall of the church last night. The hall was fittingly decorated with flags and streamers, while the long tables, artistically set and laden with good things, gave the event an air of true festivity. The serving began at 5:30 and for over two hours the waitresses did not have an idle moment. In this important work the Ladies' Aid enjoyed the assistance of the members of the Volunteer Bible Class. When the five or six hundred people, young and old, had been amply served, the tables were cleared and removed and the large audience filled all the available space in the hall to listen to the program.

The opening number was a piano duet by Miss Isabel Donnelly and Mr. F. E. Walden, which was very enjoyable. Then followed a solo by Miss Mabel Penrose, who was accorded an enthusiastic encore. Rev. J. A. MacKenzie gave a reading from one of O. Henry's works. Miss Ida Sanderson, organist of Murray Street Church, and Mr. F. E. Walden then played the brilliant duet, Chopin's "Polonaise." Miss Annie Crocker sang a very acceptable solo.

At this stage of the program Mr. J. F. Morrison in a short speech reminded the gathering of the fact that on this occasion Knox was hostess to her returned men. Nearly ninety complimentary invitations had been mailed to the veterans of Knox, and a large number showed their appreciation of this thoughtfulness by being present. After Mr. Morrison's speech the audience sang "They Are Jolly Good Fellows" and gave three rousing cheers and a tiger in honor of the returned men.

Miss Isobel Donnelly then favored the company with a piano solo. The chairman explained that some of the members he had been depending on for the program could not at the last moment materialize. This was one of the reasons for announcing the next number, and the other reason was his assurance that all would enjoy it immensely.

Mr. F. E. Walden, the genial organist of Knox, was then called upon. He expressed surprise at the summons, but was quite equal to the occasion, the approval of the audience being manifested by two insistent encores. Mr. J. John had to respond with an encore for entertaining as well with a reading. Miss Sanderson's piano solo, "The Marche Militaire," also elicited a well-merited encore.

After a financial statement by Mr. Carpenter relative to the anniversary collection, which amounted to $1091, and a vote of thanks to the ladies, proposed by Mr. R. Mulligan and seconded by Mr. Geo. Roy, and carried enthusiastically, and responded to by Mrs. Carpenter, the program was closed by the National Anthem and the benediction.

Inspector's Report.

esident and Members of the Children's Aid Society of Peterborough, city and county:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—I beg to bmit the following report for year ing Nov. 1, 1919:

I will endeavor to give you some of the work done by your ent during the year just past. It been a heavy year, but I believe a successful year. The wards our care have been as a rule ient, with the exception of a few who ran away from their homes, all were returned or placed in homes, with the exception of boy who left his grandmother to with his father, and I was not fied until some six months lat- . Some wards have done splendidly with their schooling, but others have made little or no progress. Most of these cases are more or less defective and cannot study. In one case, that of a girl, it seems useless to send her to school. In some cases the foster parents are to blame in having them late or kept out of school; if this is not stopped the children will certainly be removed. Our financial year has been one of the best we ever had, and we now have three separate funds—the capital fund, $7,000 (interest at 5½ and 6 per cent.); the general fund, $3,662.04 (bearing interest), and trust fund, $2,772.55 (bearing interest). A statement of these funds will be given in detail in the treasurer's report.

The work of your agent is continually broadening and sometimes encroaches on his beauty sleep, or interferes with his attendance at church, still work may be what he needs. All classes of people come to his office, from the man who wants to know how to get his wife back again, to the woman with the wee baby of five months old who wants to get rid of it, and in one case the man and wife who wanted to turn their whole family of five over to the society. Every case has been considererd on its own merits, and fair treatment given to all. For some reason a large number of cases of children stealing still continue to come before the Police Court and it would seem a proper course for Peterborough to have a juvenile court. Still until that is done great credit must be given to Magistrate Dumble and Chief Thompson who have to deal with these cases. Careless parents and late hours may account for most of these cases.

The superintendent of the shelter has assisted me largely in my work, and I have found her advise very valuable. Special mention should be made of the work of Dr. King, assisted by specialists in the different op-

Citizens Protest Changing Name of 57th Regt.

Lieut.-Col. Young, the new officer commanding the 57th Regiment, will go to Kingston tomorrow to confer with Major-General Williams, commander of this military district, with regard to the reorganization of the battalion. The colonel will go well supplied with letters from leading citizens protesting against the proposal to change the name of the regiment to the Second Battalion. Among those who have written a protest are Col. Miller, who belonged to the unit when it was a rural battalion prior to 1867; ex-Ald. Dobbin, the historian of the regiment, Judge Huycke, Magistrate Dumble, Magistrate Langley and others.

The 57th Regiment is one of the many institutions in which the citizens have so much justifiable pride. It dates back to 1867, the year of Confederation, and its record is excellent. In every call made upon it the response has been prompt and satisfactory. It was represented in the Fenian Raid, in the South African war, and especially did privates and officers distinguish themselves and bring honor to their home town during the four years of war with Germany.

If the name of this battalion was changed now it would practically lose its identity and the headquarters would be transferred to Bowmanville. The citizens would never agree to any move of the kind.

WAS WELSH CALLED MURDERER OR NOT?

THAT IS QUESTION JURY HAVE TO DECIDE IN CIVIL CASE

JUDGE DEPLORES INCIDENT

DOES NOT APPROVE OF ANTAGONISTIC ATTITUDE OF LAWYERS

In delivering his address to the jury in the Welsh alleged slander case, Mr. Kerr emphasized the fact that the malicious words were alleg- [illegible] spoken in a group of people among whom was Mayor Duncan. Why was not Mayor Duncan, an independent party, summoned into the witness box? If he would have supported Mr. Welsh's story he would have been summoned and would have greatly assisted the court in arriving at a correct conclusion, declared Mr. Kerr.

Mr. Kerr submitted that there had been no evidence that proved that the words had been spoken in the presence of anyone.

He pointed out that the different parties, on opposite sides of the argument, had told stories that directly contradicted each other. It is the duty of the jury to decide which story seems more reasonable and is most likely to be true.

Mr. Kerr pointed out that Mrs. Jerrin gave a detailed story of all the circumstances surrounding the quarrel while the story of Welsh is disjointed and improbable.

"If you gentlemen heard such a story outside the witness box would you believe it?" asked Mr. Kerr.

"Do you believe Welsh when he swears that the questions of the dogs never occurred to him in connection with the quarrel?" asked the consul.

Mr. Kerr asked the jury to consider the case from the standpoint that Welsh had not endeavored to help the court arrive at a correct conclusion but rather the plaintiff had endeavored to keep back evidence that would have assisted the court.

He pointed out that unless it was proved that Mrs. Perrin used the word "murderer" she is not guilty of slander.

He asked the jury to believe the evidence of Mrs. Perrin and her mother and decide that no words had been uttered that in any way injured the plaintiff.

Mr. Gordon's Address.

Mr. Gordon submitted that Mayor Duncan was not called because it was not necessary to have him or any of the neighbors brought into the publicity of the case. Mayor Duncan's position in relation to the case had been presented Welsh's evidence and had gone uncontradicted. Mr. Kerr could have summoned Mayor Duncan to contradict it.

He submitted that Welsh had every right to live peaceably at home without being "bawled out" by any domineering American lady.

If she did not say the thing with the purpose of injury why did she tell the story to her neighbors? asked Mr. Gordon.

He pleaded to the jury to protect the character of Mr. Welsh, the thing that a man prizes more than anything else in life.

Judge's Charge.

In changing the jury, His Honor Judge Huycke pointed out the absence of independent witnesses on both sides. The question for the jury to decide was whether the story of Welsh and his wife or of Mrs Perrin and her mother was the true version of the quarrel.

He deplored the fact that this back-yard quarrel should have been dragged into the courts. He also deplored the fact that the solicitors of the parties kept up the spirit of animosity and vulgar expressions during the trial.

It all boiled down to whether or not Mrs. Perrin called Welsh a "murderer" or not. If she did the plaintiff should receive judgment but if the jury decide the word "murderer" was not used the defendent should be successful.

The jury retired about 12.30 this afternoon to cider their verdict.

U. F. O. CANDITATE WINS IN N. ONTARIO

CONSIDERABLE ACTIVITY

SMALLNESS OF MAJORITY DUE TO FAILURE OF WOMEN TO VOTE

Cannington, Dec. 10.—R. H. Halbert, U. F. O. candidate in the Federal election in North Ontario, yesterday was elected over Neil D. McKinnon, Unionist candidate, by a majority of 131. One poll remained to [illegible] from, but that [illegible] in no way change the result.

Early and continuous activity on both sides to get out a record vote was the feature of the by-election. Mild weather and sloppy roads produced rather indifferent sleighing, but the automobile was much in evidence.

R. H. Halbert, the successful candidate, is a retired farmer of Uxbridge, and president of the U.F.O., in which organization he has been a prominent leader since the inception of the movement.

N. D. McKinnon lives at Cannington, is a miller, and is personally very popular with the farmers of the riding. While the result of the election was generally expected, the smallness of the majority was in some quarters a matter for surprise.

The vacancy in the riding followed upon the death of Col. Sam Sharpe. At the first Unionist nomination for the seat W. J. Cowan was chosen as standard-bearer, but his sudden death shortly afterwards made another nomination necessary, and Mr. McKinnon was then chosen.

J. J. Morrison, secretary of the U. F. O., when asked to what he attributed the reduced U. F. O. majority in the Halbert as compared with the Widdifield election, answered: "I explain it by a light vote all over the riding. I attribute the light to the smaller attendance of women voters at the polls. In the provincial general elections the women all came to vote on the referendum, and also cast their votes for the candidates of their choice. There was no prohibition issue yesterday to attract them to the polls, and the U. F. O. majority suffered in consequence."

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Geneval, Dec. 10.—The determination to bring former King Ferdinand of Bulgaria to trial was expressed by Stambuliwsky, the Bulgarian Premier, when passing through here on his way to Sofia. The Premier said he would demand the ex-King's extradiation and would press the prosecution of members of the former Bulgarian Cabinet, recently arrested on a charge of betraying the country into a diastrous war. Ferdinand is said to be at Munich and a recent despatch credited him with the intention of proceeding to Switzerland if his extradition was demanded.

In his report to the Board of Health last night Dr. McPherson asked for the co-operation of the citizens in preventing the further spread of smallpox. He advised the Board to recommend that every citizen be vaccinated.

Dr. McPherson stated that it was largely on account of the mildness of the attacks and the consequent more careless treatment that the danger of the spreading of the disease lay. The only known way of preventing smallpox is by vaccination, was another of the statements Delhi, India, on the 23rd. From there he continued east until he reached Rangoon, turning southward at that city, making a number of stops along the Malay Peninsula and in the islands of Oceonica. He arrived at Bima, near Java, Monday night. Port Darwin is near the northern-most tip of Australia.

Under the condition laid down by the Australian Government when it offered the prize for making the flight from England to Australia, the distance of 11,500 had to be covered within thirty days.

Toronto, Dec. 10.—The smallpox situation in this city became more serious today when sixty-two new cases were reported by the doctors as having developed during the past twenty-four hours. There are now in the city a total of 1,160 cases with 1,715 people quarantined as a result of the epidemic.

STRIKING MINERS IN SESSION; SETTLEMENT LOOKED FOR TODAY

Committee of Men Had not Reached Agreement at Noon But Prospects For Peace Are Bright—Methods of Settlement Now Only Question at Issue.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

With President Wilson's proposal for ending the strike under consideration the conference of miners recessed at noon. Acting President John Lewis said he expected the miners to finish today. Otherwise, he would make no comment.

Indianapolis, Dec. 10.—The general committee of the United Mine Workers of America reconvened shortly before ten o'clock this morning for the further consideration of President Wilson's proposal for ending the strike of bituminous coal miners.

It was generally expected the proposal, providing for the immediate return to work of the miners at an increase of fourteen per cent. in wages and the appointment of a commission of three men to adjust wages, would be accepted before the conference adjourned for the day.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR SETTLEMENT.

The settlement of the strike of coal miners today and the speedy resumption of work was strongly forecast this morning by officials of the United Mine Workers of America before the organization's general committee resumed consideration of President Wilson's proposal for ending the tie-up. This prediction was made in the face of strong opposition, which developed yesterday and which probably will prolong the argument for and against the President's plan. One leader high in the counsels of the Miners' Union late last night, however, declared that the conservative element in the conference was in the majority and that the agreement to end the strike was certain when the question came up for a final vote.

COMMITTEE DIVIDED INTO FACTIONS.

At yesterday's meeting it is understood the committee members were divided into two or more factions, one of which strongly favored the adoption of the new proposal and another of which opposed any settlement other than that embodied in the miners' early demand. A third division, it was said took the position that as a general convention of miners had formulated the demands and ordered the strike in the event the operators refused to grant them, a general session would be required to call of the strike.

NO POLITICS FOR LADY BEAVERBROOK

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 10.—Lady Beaverbrook, who before her marriage to Baron Beaverbrook, owner of the Daily Express, was Miss Drury of Halifax, N. S., has declined an invition of the Unionist committee for Ashton-under-Lyne to become a candidate for a seat in the Commons.

DEFENDANT WINS SUIT FOR DAMAGES

WELSH FAILS TO PROVE HE WAS CALLED A MURDERER

In the civil case of Welsh vs. Perrin, which has been occupying the attention of the county court for the past day and a half, the jury brought in a verdict favoring the defendant, each side to pay its own costs.

U.S. Government seized 5,300,000 pounds of sugar held at Yakima and Toppenish, Wash., by the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co.

STORY OF DEFENDANT IN CIVIL CASE CONTRADICTS THAT OF THE PLAINTIFF

Mrs. Perrin Admits Having Called Welsh a Beast But Denies All Other Allegations—Hearing of Evidence in This Case Closed Yesterday.

After the hearing of the evidence of the plaintiff in the Welsh vs. Perrin case at County Court, yesterday, afternoon, the plaintiff's wife, Mrs. Welsh, gave evidence. Her story as told, under oath, agreed in every detail with that of her husband.

This witness closed the case for the plaintiff:

She produced a drawing representing the position of her home in regard to the home of the plaintiff, Mr. Welsh.

Mr. Gordon objected to this plan being used as it was not produced at the preliminary examination. It was allowed in spite of the protests.

Mrs. Perrin told of going out of her house because she heard Welsh talking to her son. She heard from her son that he was merely hanging a small pail over the Welsh side of the fence to tease a little girl.

Then a quarrel ensued in which the defendant admits she called the plaintiff a beast, but emphatically denies having used the other words, the plaintiff alleged to have been spoken by her.

The witness admitted that she occasionally lost her temper, but when she did so she was not accustomed to use the language which the plaintiff alleges she used on this occasion.

"Did you say to anyone that you would rather spend six months in the penitentiary than make an apology?

"No, I never did."

"How old si your child?"

"Six years."

"Could you have coached him as to what to say while giving evidence?"

"I could have done so, but I would not. I try to teach him to tell the truth."

The witness told of receiving a letter from Mr. Gordon, asking for an apology for abusive and scandalous language.

This letter had never been answered, according to the witness.

During the examination of this witness, Mr. Kerr and Mr. Gordon engaged in continued and heated argument, in which Mr. Kerr insinuated that his learned friend was a creature. Mr. Gordon strenuously objected to this and only through the diplomacy of his Honor Judge Huycke was the personal argument interrupted long enough for the proceedure of the trial.

Mrs. Hollingsworth, mother of the defendant was the next witness.

This witness was present at the scene of the quarrel, and her evidence correspondent with that of the defendant. She swore that her daughter had called the plaintiff a "beast" but used none of the other words.

Then Mr. Gordon recalled the plaintiff Mr. Welsh.

He denied having shaken his fist at Mrs. Perrin, or having said certain things that the defendant in her evidence accused him of doing. Mrs. Welsh was again summoned and corroborated her husband's version of the case.

This concluded the evidence and the addresses of the councils was postponed until this morning at 10 o'clock.

THE NORTH ONTARIO ELECTION.

PRESIDENT HALBERT of the U. F. O. was yesterday elected to the Dominion Parliament in North Ontario, winning over Mr. McKinnon, the Unionist candidate by a majority of 130. Mr. McKinnon is a miller in Cannington, a man of long established business connections in the riding. Mr. Halbert has resided on a farm in the constituency for something less than one year. There is something significant in the fact that a comparative stranger was able to distance a man so well known in the community. Evidently the election was something more than a test of mere personal popularity. Probably it will appear that there has been some serious tactical blunder on the part of the promoters of Mr. McKinnon's candidacy.

North Ontario is normally a Conservative riding. It was represented for years by the late Col. Sharpe, whose untimely death made the election of yesterday necessary. The U. F. O. candidate in a bye-election a year ago for the Legislature defeated Major Cameron. Mr. Widdifield was re-elected by the farmers on October 20 last by a majority of 400.

Mr. McKinnon was a lifelong Liberal up to the election of 1917, when he supported the Union Government. He has not yet transferred his allegiance back to his early affiliations. It was as a Unionist that he ran yesterday.

If the old line political leaders ran a camouflaged Liberal as a test of the popularity of the Union Government they have been given an answer in no uncertain terms. In the present temper of the people nothing like sharp political practice will be tolerated. Mr. McKinnon was no doubt actuated by lofty motives when he supported Union Government in 1917. His mistake now is in seeking to convert what was a principle into a mere political expedient. The patriotism of any man whose interests are palpably selfish may well be called in question. Then, again, if Mr. McKinnon, with those in his class, has been repudiated by his former associates, he should be willing to endure the sacrifice that results from giving effect to an ideal purpose.

The principles of the Conservative party are as sound as ever. They will survive when the vapid and ephemeral creeds of fly-by-night factions are discredited and abandoned. The party's duty is to rid itself of all barnacles, of everything in the way of encumbrances. Union Government has served its purpose, and any attempt to perpetuate it is a mistake. The old party must adjust itself to new conditions, and this can be done without a surrender of essential policy. If an element among the voters shows determined opposition to the party in power, then there must be a more substantial reason for this attitude than mere caprice or unrest. To discover that reason and to remedy anything in the nature of a real grievance is the part of true statesmanship. Playing party politics will result in nothing but further disaster.

PREMIER DRURY AND TAXATION.

PREMIER DRURY has announced another reform which his government has in view. Local option is to be allowed the various municipalities in the Province and the taxation of land values, without regard to the improvements, is to be encouraged. This is a move on the part of the new Administration which was to be expected, as the farmers have always been the chief objectors to the present system of setting assessed values.

Two adjoining farms contain exactly the same variety of soil and their natural productive powers are equal. One is equipped with modern dwelling and up-to-date outbuildings. It is well fenced, cultivated and drained. The other farm has ramshackle buildings and generally shows a condition of neglect. Still the soil is really of as much value as that of the adjoining property. The assessor rates one farm fifty per cent. higher than the other. The man who goes to the expense of improving his holding is penalized for his enterprise. There is a premium allowed the other who is satisfied to mark time.

It is not fair to assume that the difference in the assessed values of the two farms is in the ratio of the prices they would bring if put on the market. Nothing of the kind. The very system of taxation now in use militates against the improved farm being sold at anything like its real value. The prospective purchaser knows that the assessor will charge for improvements that bring in no actual monetary return. Regarded as an investment, the farm that is behind the age is altogether likely to be given the preference. There are farms in Ontario so highly improved that it is all but impossible to secure a purchaser for them. Only the man of means who takes up farming as a fad can afford to acquire them. The bona fide farmer who has the place to pay for and a living to make can do neither so long as he is compelled to carry the tax burden imposed under the present assessment system.

The land speculator in the city can hold unimproved lots, covered with weeds it may be, and otherwise so many blots on the landscape, perhaps in the very centre of the city. Houses and business blocks are erected on all sides of the vacant property. Every new building enhances the value of the unimproved holding, which escapes lightly when the assessor does his work. Still the value of the lots, leaving the buildings out of consideration, are really of equal value.

Premier Drury's proposed change in the assessment laws is not the single tax system of Henry George, a plan which, if given effect, would really amount to the confiscation of all land, every owner becoming a tenant with the government as his landlord. It is simply a modification of the present system, a modification which can be adopted or rejected by the various municipalities as the people decide.

NO SALES WITH STRINGS ATTACHED.

WHEN THE SITE for the Government House in Toronto was purchased by the Province from the Hallam estate in 1909 there was a provision in the deed which bound the new owners to use the property only as specified by the seller for a period of twenty years. The land was to be used only as a site for a vice-gubernatorial residence or for private residences costing not less than $7000. This restriction has come to light now that an attempt is being made to abolish this costly branch of the Provincial Administration. Still, this is only one of scores of similar instances that could be cited, and yet governments and municipalities do not appear to learn wisdom by experience.

Why should any man who sells property be permitted to keep a string attached to it? His control should cease with the transfer of title. No one can foresee the contingencies that are likely to arise in twenty years. This is not the first time that natural progress, the development of a municipality has been arrested by just such restrictions as the one in question. Sometimes property so tied up in arbitrary conditions is required as a site for an industry or for some other public improvement. It may be found desirable to open a street through it, but no change from the stipulated purpose is permitted. One single individual, a man who may have no direct interest in what is subsequently done with what he has sold, is in a position to block a step that would make for the general welfare.

But there is always a selfish motive in the insistence upon such a restriction as the one in question. The man who sells property with a string attached is nearly always actuated by a desire to increase the value of his other holdings in the vicinity. When the Government House in Toronto was erected the land in the neighborhood showed a marked increase in value. The most of it was unimproved, so that the increase meant little in the way of addition to the tax roll.

In Government House the Province now has a white elephant on its hands for fair. It is within the power of the Government to sell it for residential purposes, but there is scarcely a man in Toronto financially able to buy the property for a home and carry the tax burden to which he would be subjected. It seems likely that for the next ten years the Province will be obliged to keep up the cost of maintenance and to hold open house for the four hundred of the Capital City.

Various methods have been already suggested for circumventing the restriction and getting rid at once of this heavy drain upon the provincial treasury. The Farmer's Sun recommends the most drastic course of all. It would raze the mansion of power to its foundation sell the material, and let the site remain idle until the restriction expires in 1929. In ten years the value of the site would be materially enhanced.

Why not? Private individuals have been made rich by the unearned increment. The Province could hardly be censured if it profited by the system it maintains.

Coming down to local conditions, Peterborough has a chance to acquire property, the present owners insisting upon a fifteen-year restriction. No one can tell what may occur in that time, what change of policy may be necessary, and the city should hesitate before tying itself up in such a contract.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XI. December 14, 1919.

AT THE TRIAL AND CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS.

The Golden Text—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

The Lesson Text — 18:15-27; 19:25-27.

The Time—The early morning, and the day of the crucifixion, Friday, April 7, A.D. 30.

Lesson Text Illumined.

Ch. 18:15. Simon Peter followed Jesus. But as Matthew informs us, "afar off." Matt. 26:58. And so did another disciple. This was probably John himself; mentioned in order to explain how Peter found access to the high priest's residence. John frequently veils in some such way his own personality. Now that disciple was known unto the high priest. The reference is here probably to Annas primarily, though his son-in-law Caiaphas may have been residing with him at this time. John seems here to be combining and condensing the account.

17. Art thou also one of this man's disciples? The maid knew who John was, and because John was conducting Peter in to the high priest's house, she had reason to suppose Peter, too, was one of his disciples. In the Greek the question is put in a form that suggests a negative reply, "Surely thou are not also one of this man's disciples?" By her stinging taunt, Peter was being tried as well as Jesus that night!

18. The servants and the officers. Namely, of the palace, or more probably of the sanhedrin. A fire of coals. Charcoal fires [illegible] in braziers. The Orientals do not attempt to warm whole rooms or apartments as we do. For it was cold. In Jerusalem at midnight, in April, it is chilly naturally.

19. The high priest therefore asked Jesus. Thus the aged and astute Sadducean, High-Priest emeritus, Annas, began the trial. Of his disciples, and of his teaching. Seeking materials to use as evidence against him later.

20. I have spoken openly to the world. Jesus does not implicate his disciples but he declares with emphasis that his teaching, in contrast with the treachery of his enemies, had been open and public to all. Matt. 10:27, even his parables were not intended to veil the truth from sympathetic hearers. Matt. 13:10-13.

21. Ask them that have heard me. Possible witnesses being probably close at hand.

22. Struck Jesus with his hand. Or, "with a rod," as the margin reads; in violation of the law. The illegalities in Jesus' trial are most obvious and significant.

23. Why smitest thou me? A suggestive illustration of how Jesus would have us apply his teaching of nonresistance, enunciated in Matt. 5:30!

24. Annas therefore sent him bound unto Caiaphas. This verse gives the true sequence of the events in his trial. Arrested, he is brought before the ex-president of the sanhedrin, who after failing to get Jesus to accuse himself sends him to his son-in-law, Caiaphas, who is tha acting high priest.

25. Now Simon Peter. Peter was still standing outside in the court warming himself, waiting "to see the end." Matt. 26:58. This was in the court of the palace of Caiaphas, probably. Cf. Matt. 26:57, 58. They said therefore unto him. The servants and the officers take occasion to taunt Peter again with being one of Jesus' disciples, which accusation he boldly denies a second time.

26. One of the servants of the high priest. Namely, a relative of Malchus. John 18:10. In the garden. Gethsemane.

27. Peter therefore denied again. He had already gone too far to confess. And straightway the cock crew. Literally, "a cock crew." John omits the cursing of Peter, Matt. 26:74; Mark 14:71, and the Master's "look" upon Peter which was so crushing to his spirits, Luke 22:61, even Peter's repentance, which is recorded by all three of the Synoptists. What John does record, however, was intended to illustrate our Lord's foreknowledge of Peter's frailty, John 13:38, and thus to furnish additional proof of his divinity. Cf. John 20:31.

Ch. 19:25. There was standing by the cross. Not content, as were others, to behold the tragedy "from afar" Matt. 27:55. His mother. And three others, namely Salome his aunt (the Virgin's sister) and two other Marys. Cf. Mark 15:40; Matt. 27:56. If Salome was the Virgin's sister then Jesus and John were cousins, for Salome was the mother of John. (The Syriac Version inserts an "and" before the first Mary mentioned). Clopas. Another name for Alphaeus.

26. Woman, behold, thy son! "Woman" instead of "mother," as earthly relationship were now at an end. Indeed, Jesus never called Mary "mother." "Woman" was a title of great respect. This was Jesus' last act of filial solicitude.

27. Behold, thy mother! Lucian quotes Eudamidas as saying, "I leave to Aretaeus the care of nourishing and providing for my mother in her old age." And from that hour. Immediately, before the tragedy was over. This explains why John omits the fourth of Christ's words spoken on the cross. Unto his own home. Mary henceforth was committed to the care of John; not as Roman Catholic writers sometimes maintain, John to Mary's. Mary is mentioned in the New Testament subsequently but once. Acts 1:14. Tradition says she lived in Jerusalem with John eleven years, dying at the age of fifty-nine.—by Prof. Geo. L. Robinson, Ph.D., D.D.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE RIVERSIDE PARK

Editor Review:— I cannot understand why our City Council, at this juncture, desires to saddle the city by spending $33,000.00 for the acquisition of Riverside Park and some adjoining property to be turned for park purposes. This of course is exclusive of any improvements or alterations necessary to put the property in good shape or condition as a park.

It does not take any particular thought to conclude that the rate payers should vote against this by-law at the present time. Some reasons are as follows:

We already have, Victoria, Central Inverlea, Jackson and King Edward parks to say nothing of the school grounds which are used by the children under supervision, so that for a city of this size I consider we are well provided with parks.

If it is estimated that one half the amount of the proposed expenditure may be the damages which the city might be called upon to pay, owing to the new bridge construction then I would say that the remaining $16,500.00 could be much better spent in giving the citizens more mileage of permanent roadway and improving of other roads and streets, the proper method of marking all streets by sign boards instead of the present condition of a stranger having to scrape the snow and ice from the sidewalks to know what street he is on, or many other improvements, our present parks included and which are needed and absolutely required. Or, if we have a good live Industrial Commissioner devoting his entire time to the locating and securing of new industries and the promoting of the city's welfare abroad this $16,500.00 would pay his salary for four or five years and do you not think we require more industries, greater expansion than any more parks at the present time?

The city proposes to purchase vacant land south of the Henry Hope Company, for a new industrial concern. It would be much better to take this sum and purchase other property for other industries which we hope will locate here and have things ready when that time comes.

All we have to do is, to read of the great opportunities in a much larger way than other cities and towns are taking up and these places are simply booming today. I refer to Oshawa, Belleville, Galt, Kitchener and many others, to say nothing of the larger cities such as Hamilton, Brantford and Windsor, and yet only two or three months ago, our city was the only one in the whole Dominion which recorded a decrease in its bank clearings for that month with the corresponding month of 1918, and the next month, only an increase of three per cent for the corresponding month of 1918.

Nearly every city in Canada has been making large increases in its bank clearings, which indicates the general prosperity and business trend, while we have been more or less at a stand still.

During this period of unsettled conditions both socially and industrially is no time to sink money into parks. This is the time for conservative and constructive work and our money should be carefully weighed before it goes into a melting pot where it will lose its power of productiveness. If there is a time when the wealth of the people and nation should be kept working to the limit, it is during the period of reconstruction and this cannot be done if our cities and municipalities sink thousands of dollars in propositions which have no productive value, but are a dead charge against our assets, in fact in this particular case we will loose the amount of taxes now derived from the said properties.

These are some reasons Sir, why I will vote and use my influence against acquiring the properties in question for park purposes.

Hospital for Sick Childr

TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:

The 44th annual report of th Hospital for Sick Children, Toront shows a notable advance in eve department of its service to the suf fering, and crippled youngsters o this province. The ward accommo dation has been taxed to its capacity and the summer annex, the Lakeside Home, was opened for the fir time since the outbreak of war.

The daily average of cot patien has increased during the yea from 193 to 222, including child from practically every county Ontario. Even had the cost of su plies and labor remained stati the substantial increase in the nu ber of patients would alone accou for the addition to the charity's deb which at the close of the fiscal ye was $109,000. This debt has becom an embarrassing burden. Furthe increase must threaten impairme of an enviable efficiency.

The Hospital is in the forefront o all institutions upon this continen devoted to the care of sick childre It cost $335,390 to maintain la year. This great sum not only put at the service of the children o Ontario all the resources of medic science, but, in addition, provides fo a training school for 130 nurses an for unsurpassed clinical faciliti for the University students who ar preparing to engage in their pr fession throughout the province.

The income which must be forth coming to finance this absolute essential work figures out at seve hundred dollars a day; and, as the is no endowment fund, all but fraction of that amount has to b derived from individual benevolenc Therefore the Trustees are makin a Christmas appeal to every lover o children to foot the bills for som period of time, no matter how sho it may be. A minute of mercy cost fifty cents.

For churches, societies, lodge etc., who have more ample fund wherewith to assist the youngster to a fair start in life, the naming o cots is suggested. A number o memorial cots have been thus ded cated in honor of the overseas se vice of fellow-members. This pr vilege is extended in recognition gifts of $2,000 to the Main Ho or $500 to the Lakeside Home, wh can be paid in annual instalments so desired.

Literature, illustrative of a branches of the past year's work, t gether with any other informatio desired, will be gladly furnished o application to the Secretary, th Hospital for Sick Children, Colleg street, Toronto. Contributions shoul also be addressed to the secretary.

CHRISTMAS TOYS IN LOCAL STORES

AN INSPECTION IS MADE OF THE STOCK OF GIFTS FOR THE CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS

"Hurrah for Toyland!" the land of innumerable surprises and delightful contrivances. Good old Santa Claus—he is here with his whole pharaphenelia of notions and novelties to cheer the heart of the kiddies this Christmas time—and how glad all are to welcome him! How happy to know that there is no truth in the report which told us of his being interned and finally starved to death in Germany. Starved to death! Well, of all things no, judging from his ruddy cheeks and general husky appearance.

Toyland at Turnbull's.

Perhaps it would be rather penurious to accuse this old gentleman of partiality, but he certainly was nice to the Turnbull people. Their toyland is a veritable wonderland of unique surprises and various notions that could not help but appeal to the heart of the little boy or girl. Some of the toys are educational, others amusing, others again practical and some scientific. That little boy of yours will be the happiest youngster in town on Christmas morning should he be the proud recipient of a microscope, an airplane, a pedal bycke, an electric motor, a machine gun, or any of the numerous friction toys that will delight his youthful heart. But there is such a selection from which to make a choice that the main difficulty lies in the choosing. Meccano sets there are for the inspiration of the future machinist. Tool chests and mineature tanks, engines, wagons and garden outfits for the little fellow of an agricultural turn of mind. Also horns and wheelbarrows and pony cars, shovels and "Buddys" special car in two sizes. This is a little gem and as soon as Buster sets eyes on it he will want it.

There are wooden horses on rockers and on wheels. Scooters, Kiddie Cars, sleighs, automobiles and black boards, with books and games in the educational line—there and hundreds of others.

Now for milady—the exacting little Miss. Bring her along and watch her bubble over with enthusiasm over the dolls, doll's cradles, doll's houses, rocking chairs, laundry outfits and etc. And if she is a thoughtful little person she will be interested in the book section, educational and amusing black boards and games. If she is of a rather athletic turn, and what little lady is not these days, she will want a sleigh of which there is a wide selection from which to choose. Then there are the mineature bedroom sets—dressers, mirrors, etc.—in oak and white enamel. Also rocking chairs and doll cradles (made in Peterborough) with doll's carriages and mineature pianos.

Another practical idea and one which will delight the little lady of house-wifely tendencies is the needlework set, also the knitting and embroidery set. Then there are trunks brooms, flat-irons, dumb-bells, skipping ropes, doll's sulkys, airplanes, parlor stoves and many others.

At Elliott's Store.

The toyland of Elliott's store, another spot where the Knight of the Reindeer has accumulated some enchanting treasures. Here the budding mechanic may reveal to his heart's delight in tools and mechanical devices of all sorts. Or for the little fellow with a military inclination, there is a drum that will lend an air of swagger to any small soldier. Then there are shovels and sleighs and iron horses, a dancing negro and a chicken feeding out of a dish held in the arms of a little sailor. Sleigh that will induce any little boy to love coasting, mechanical trains with tracks, games and books and educational toys of all manner.

No doubt some children will be deeply interested in the scientific toys of which there is a good assortment. There is a minature elevator to demonstrate the manner in which huge weights of ore are lifted without labor. Also an automatic crane moving material to a convenient distance. The little girls of his city have been well catered to in this store with a fine collection of dolls and dressed dolls, doll's sleighs, doll's carriages, beds and cradles, mineature dishes of all sort, sewing machines that really sew, washing sets, and in fact everything needed to start dolly housekeeping is there.

R. R. Hall's Display Up to Date.

R. R. Hall's store was by no means forgotten in the circuit. They have on display a number of interesting friction toys, such as mail carts parcel wagons, motor parcel post trains, milk wagons and a number of others. Also a lot of skillfully designed sleighs with trunks for the little one who dreams of travelling. There is also a blacked-faced comedian who can entertain splendidly and a levy of educational toys, such as games, books, black-boards and others for those who like them. A dapple-grey rocking horse with flowing maine will be the heart's desire of some little man, and a French side-board with dishes complete will be the apple of some little lady's eyes. A twin propeller Curtiss hydroplane (one that will fly) is on display, also a number of sandyandies, high chairs, banks and etc. Dolls that will go to sleep, dolls that will stand alone, and a doll sleeping in a beautiful French bed, of pale blue satin are among the gifts for girls. Also brooms and dish-pans, carriages, beds, side-boards, carpet-sweepers and such things.

Woolly teddy bears there are for the wee baby girl with swinging chairs, tiny mittens and rattles. In fact there is everything to make that important member of the family one of the happiest on Christmas morning.

CANADIAN FLAG WAS FIRST DESTROYED

NEW VERSION OF TROUBLE BETWEEN NURSES AT VERMONT HOSPITAL

Fredericton, N. B., Dec. 10.—A story from Woodstock, N. B., points out that Miss Annie McLane, the central figure in the now famous flag incident at the Rutland, Vermont, hospital, is not a native of Woodstock, but of Truro, N. S. The correspondent follows that up by saying that there are a number of Woodstock girls at the Rutland hospital as nurses and probationers and gives the following version of the whole affair as gathered from their letters to their families at Woodstock:

"The flag trouble started when Miss McLane and Miss Miles were alone together. The former claims she said: 'It is a good looking building if it did not have that dirty old rag flying over it.' Miss Miles then proceeded to knock Miss McLane down.

"Some time previously a number of American nurses destroyed a Canadian flag belonging to one of the nurses, but no trouble came from this incident, as there always had been good-natured bantering between the nurses as to the merits of the Canadian and United States flags. To the American nurses who waited upon Miss McLane at her room she apologized to this extent: 'I am sorry, girls; I didn't mean to hurt your feelings. It was all in fun. I respect your country and I respect your flag, but I won't get up and salute it. Go out of this room.' This apparently closed the incident and was satisfactory to the hospital authorities. Two weeks later an investigation of the affair was ordered by the Alumnae Association which completely exonerated Miss McLane and admitted her into the membership of the association. Everything seemed to be harmonious, but the city authorities took it up."

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder troubles you

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

NO SERIOUS CRIME TO PAY WAGES OF COOK

New York, Dec. 10. -- Do you want to hear a story of the "overshadowing crime"?

It is one of those Grand Jury secrets that has tickled the friends of Mayor John F. Hylan for a few weeks.

The sole condition of "letting you in" on it is that you don't tell the Extraordinary Grand Jury, which is investigating half a dozen subjects and bids fair to become a permanent body if it takes on any more work.

The members of that august body in seeking to determine the responsibility for the "overshadowing crime," had a happy thought. They decided that the mayor's private letter files would help. So they dispatched a few process servers to the city hall and had them haul out a cabinet containing the mayor's private letters and documents, including his cancelled cheques.

A committee of the Grand Jury was appointed to inspect the files. This committee, headed by Raymond P. Almirall, foreman of the Grand Jury, spent the better part of a day—and a holiday at that—looking over the mayor's private papers.

When the mayor was summoned to testify before the Grand Jury that body was "loaded for bear." The Grand Jury wanted to know a lot of things, a mysterious hint of which had been gleaned from the filing cabinet.

Aside from some bills which indicated that the mayor had paid for some dresses bought by his wife and some furs purchased by his daughter, then Miss Virginia Hylan, there was one dark mystery which the jurors sought to solve. This is how they solved it.

Mayor Hylan was on the witness stand and had been questioned and cross-questioned for some time. It is admitted by all concerned that finally the District Attorney warned the mayor that his constitutional rights were being invaded and advised him that he need not answer any questions that infringed on those rights.

Then a member of the jury sprang the big surprise. He produced the mayor's cancelled cheques, drew out a sheaf of them and showed them to the mayor. They showed that for many months the mayor had been drawing a cheque regularly each month for a stated sum —perhaps $75 —to a woman!

"Who is that women?" demanded the questioner dramatically.

The silence in the Grand Jury room was tense. The jurors held their breath for fear of missing the reply. The mayor looked over the body for a moment. Then a twinkle came into his eye.

North Dakota Legislature killed a bill to repeal the state "blue" laws forbidding sale of cigarettes.

erations performed, also to Dr. Middleton for free dental service, to James Lewis, barber, for hair cutting needed by the boys, and others who have assisted through the year, including Dr. Lacey, who has offered his services to care for the children's eyes. In addition to increased number of cases to handle, your agent has had to travel 3,450 miles and write 523 letters in his general work. Several cases of over-crowding of houses were found, one where 10 adults and 5 children slept in an attic without a partition and one small room down stairs. Some cases of very dirty houses still are found, and some cases of cruelty to babies were reported. Some of these people were brought before the magistrate and punished. The savings of the childrens are kept in separate accounts in the Union Bank and can only be paid out by the check of the president and agent. The sum now amounts to $2,272.45.

Through the faithful work of Mrs. J. Knox and her splendid staff of tag day workers the results of tag day was one of the best in our history, $1,522.90 being secured.

In conclusion, I would like to thank all the members of the Board, but especially the president and secretary, for their patience and kindness in giving me advice, so much needed as new problems present themselves from day to day.

GEO. W. POWELL, Agent.

The Ellis Children.

Mr. Strickland then asked the Board if any action had been taken in regard the children of Mr. Simms. It appears that these children were put in the care of the eldest sister, a girl of 18 years of age. When the mother was released, she immediately went to the children and has been living with them since. Legally the eldest sister has care of the children, but practically the mother still has charge over them. The father is trying to make a home for them if he can get custody of the children. It appears that this is the fifth or sixth monthly meeting of the Board, in which this question has been raised and always it has been relegated to the next monthly meeting with no action taken. Mrs. Knox supported the claims of Mr. Strickland. It was finally arranged that the committee who had the matter in charge be instructed to report to the president and that his decision be final. It was then moved that Mr. Powell, as agent make a written report to the Board on all such cases as the last, and that a decision be made from his report to be considered final. This carried.

Purchase Victory Bonds.

It was then moved and seconded that $2,100.00 be invested in Victory Bonds. The motion was carried. A vote of thanks was then passed to Dr. King, Dr. Middleton, Dr. Buchannan, Dr. Lacey and Mr. D. Loomes for services rendered to the Children's Aid Society. A motion was made that a new system of keeping the accounts of the wards of the society be introduced. The motion was left in abeyance.

Gratified to Manager Dahn.

The Board also wish to take this opportunity of thanking Mr. Harry Dahn for his kindness in entertaining the children to a matinee of "Daddy Long Legs" recently, to assure Mr. Dahn that his action was very greatly appreciated.

Father Phelan President.

All honorary members were re-elected by acclamation. Mr. Peck, from the chair, then requested that he be allowed to retire from the presidency of the society, of which capably he had served the society for three years. Although urged to allow himself to be re-elected, Mr. Peck was determined. The name of Father Phelan was then mentioned and seconded. The motion was carried. The other officers appear:

1st Vice-president—Mrs.

Secretary and treasurer—Mr. J. Wearing

Assistant secretary and treasurer—Mr J. Edgar.

Dr. King then moved that a representative from each of the church's Ladies' Aids be asked to join the Board. The motion was not carried.

Mr. Peck, on giving up office to Father Phelan then made, wished the new president every success. Father Phelan replied by expressing his regret that Mr. Peck's services as president were to be lost to the society, but he was glad that Mr. Peck was still on the board.

The meeting was then adjourned.

WILSON HAS KILLED DEMOCRATIC PARTY

HENRY WATTERSON SAYS OLD POLITICAL ORDER HAS PASSED AWAY.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 10.—The Democratic party is dead, the Republican party has breathed its last. So stated Colonel Henry Watterson.

Answering a question in the lobby of the Hotel Seminole regarding the growing strength of the Republican party in the South, Colonel Watterson considered a minute and declared: "Politics is in a fluid state. Strictly speaking, there is neither a Republican party nor a Democratic party. There are nothing but two worn out labels, which mean nothing but offices for the rascally politicians. The South, rich again and prosperous, sticks to the Democratic label through force of circumstances and habit.

"The negro has been hitherto a kind of cohesive plaster. But with the elimination of the negro question the solid South must be considered a thing of the past."

Colonel Watterson stopped and his eyes looked into a past when the Democratic party and the South had been synonymous, and when he helped general the Democratic forces to victory. Then in answer to the question, "What about the Democratic party?" he spoke tersely.

"There is no Democratic party. The President has abolished the Democratic party. There is in its place a Wilson party. Mr. Wilson will not be able personally to lead this because of his ill health. But his son-in-law, McAdoo, in line succeeding, will probably lead it to overwhelming defeat next year. Nothing seems surer than that the Republicans will sweep the country in 1920."

"What do you think of the President's attitude to the League of Nations?" he was asked. His eyes flashed. "The League of Nations is a fad, a phantom, a figment of the President's idealism. It will never [illegible]

"This country is not going to hitch itself on to a world of unknown complications nor underwrite the combustions of Europe. We shall be strongest and best as an independent power, exercising a friendly and benign interest over the affairs of humankind."

"Don't you believe the Republicans are gaining strength in the South?" he was asked.

"The Republicans probably will carry several of what are called the Southern States," he predicted.

Dyspeptic Soup Eaters Can Change Their Spoon for a Knife and Fork and With Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets the World Smiles Again.

Ask a former dyspeptic who tried the Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets plan what wonderful relief they afford. Instead of the grouchy bowl of soup at home and the abject terror at the sight of good things to eat at a party supper the soup spoon has been replaced by the knife and fork. This comes from giving the digestive process required assistance. These tablets digest food. They stimulate natural digestive secretions. Thus the food keeps on digesting, doesn't lie in the stomach to sour and create all sorts of distresses. And they act as soon as they enter the stomach, hence relief even in dyspepsia may be looked for almost at once.

If you have been troubled with gassiness, sour stomach, water brash, heaviness after eating and such troubles, try these tablets. You will find Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets on sale in any drug store in the United States and Canada.

DR. McPHERSON RECOMMENDS INCREASED HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Favors a Full Time M. H. O. With Sufficient Assistance to Carry on the Sanitary Work Thoroughly and Rigidly Recommends Pasteurized Milk.

The Board of Health met last night for its final session and received the reports of the Medical Officer of Health and the sanitary inspector.

Dr. McPherson, in his report, drew attention to the fact that the most serious of the contageous disease in the past year was diphtheria, from which four deaths resulted. Twenty-one cases had been treated and in his opinion not one of the four victims would have lost his life if the disease had been discovered and treated in the early stages of development.

The smallpox, of which there are eight cases in the city at the present time, is of a very light nature. Some of the doctors had called it chicken-pox and because of this it had got out of control. Vaccination is the only known preventation of this disease and the M.H.O. calls on all the citizens of the city to take this precaution and co-operate with the Board of Health to get the disease under control.

Dr. McPherson recommended that a full time health officer be appointed with assistants so that the work might be carried out thoroughly and properly. He pointed out that there is a tremendous amount of work to be done by this department.

A systematic house-to-house examination should be carried on, every hotel and public building should be inspected regularly, all places where food of any discription is handled should be examined and cleanliness enforced, offices, factories and stores should be forced to provide hygiene conditions for their employes. All these tasks require a great deal of time and it almost keeps one sanitary inspector busy attending to complaints from various parts of the city.

Believes in Pasturized Milk.

The public health laws, both provincial and municipal, should be more vigorously enforced. So that absolutely pure milk be provided for the children and babies of the city, he would recommend that all milk distributed in the city should be pasturized and bottled.

The doctor emphasized the importance of the work under the control of the Board of Health. He recommended that that body do all in its power to encourage all sorts of outdoor sports, playgrounds, skating rinks, bathing beaches, etc. He recommended that the Board give its support to the Utilities Commission in endeavoring to provide a filtration plant and the City Council in establishing its sewage disposal plant.

Central Distributing Place.

Ex-Mayor Buller, chairman of the Board, stated that he was not in favor of pasturizing the milk. He termed it a fad.

"How about a private corporation doing it?"

"I would not stand for that for one minute," answered the chairman.

He is still in favor of the move he attempted while a member of the Council—to have a central distributing plant so that eight or ten milkmen will not pass by the one house.

Sanitary Inspector's Report.

The sanitary inspector reported that there are still a number of earth closets too near the kitchen of the home or too near the kitchen of a neighbor. In nearly all these cases the tenants were willing to pay a little more rent for better conditions.

He reported that in some instances people were in the habit of mixing the ashes with the garbage which caused a great deal of inconvenience.

His report of the year was as follows:

Garbage complaints	175
Diphtheria cases	13
Scarlet fever cases	21
Measles	3
Smallpox	10
Inspection of houses and cellars	95
Inspection of lanes and yards	230

PUBLIC ASKED TO EXERCISE CARE IN THEIR CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS

John A. Robertson, secretary of the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association, has issued the following usual holiday circular to the public:

"Dear Sir,—

"Following our usual custom at this season of the year, I beg to call your attention to the dangers of life and property from Christmas decorations, displays, etc., which are frequently made at this time of year. The use of Christmas greens, harvest specimens and other inflammable materials such as draperies, scenery, cotton to represent snow, and the like, (especially in connection with electric and other lighting systems), is decidedly an increase of hazard, it being impossible to make displays of that nature perfectly safe.

"The statutory conditions of your insurance policy read in part as follows:

"'Any change material to the risk, but within the control or knowledge of the assured, shall avoid the policy, as to the part affected thereby, unless the change is promptly notified in writing to the company or its local agent.'

"In addition to the danger to property from the displays referred to, the danger of life in crowded stores or places of meeting, by reason of a panic occasioned by fire, even though it be small and easily controlled, is so great that the underwriters, who have made a study of such hazards, would fail in their duty should they not give this warning."

HASTINGS

Following is the address which was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Beavis and family, prior to their departure from Asphodel.

Dear friends:—We have gathered here this evening to bid you a sad and reluctant farewell. We cannot permit you to depart from our midst without giving expression to feelings of regret at this severance of ties, that have bound us so intimately together. Since the announcement of your decision to seek another home, expressions of sorrow have been heard on every side, but none have reason to feel your departure more keenly than your neighbors, whose privilege it has been to associate with you, your wife and children. Tonight sad echoes around our hearts are stealing, but we cherish the thought that you are not going so far away that we cannot see you at least occasionally, and we hope you will grasp every opportunity of seeing us as often as possible. We ask you to accept these gifts, as a token of love and esteem and we hope that they will sometimes serve to recall pleasant memories of the happy days spent together in Asphodel. In saying good-bye, you leave us with the earnest prayer that your future will be one of health, happiness and prosperity, and that you may all be spared for many years to come.

Signed on behalf of your many friends.

REBELLION IN STOMACH

"Pape's Diapepsin" at once ends Indigestion and Sour, Acid Stomach

Lumps of undigested food cause pain. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sick, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented and turned sour; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food—just take a tablet or two of Pape's Diapepsin to help neutralize acidity and in five minutes you wonder what became of the pain, acidity, indigestion and distress.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless stomach antacid is Pape's Diapepsin, which costs so little at drug stores.

Little, adjoining the John Finlay & Sons Co. storehouse. The fire had gained considerable headway before it was discovered, and nothing could be done to save the structure from the flames. The building was totally destroyed, as was also a small building on the lot adjoining and owned by Mr. Frank Kelly and used as a store room. Three teams of horses and several rigs and harness were saved, but Mr. Little lost about two tons of hay. The loss will be about $800.

On Friday evening a large number of young people gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fry. A miscellaneous shower was given for Mrs. Clarence Varcoe (nee Miss Hazel Morrison).

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify, and freshen the entire alimentary tract before eating more food.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

"A SPORTING CHANCE" AT EMPIRE THEATRE

WILLIAM RUSSELL IN FEATURE PLAY THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY

Patrons of the Empire are assured of banner entertainment next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, for William Russell, "Flying A" star, will be there in a bully new production called "A Sporting Chance."

While Russell, as the hero, and some of the other folks who figure in this absorbing story, took sporting chances, no one who goes to see the picture will be running any risk of not getting his money's worth twenty times over. "A Sporting Chance" is a bona fide thriller, from first reel to fifth.

"Big Bill" has the role of a young millionaire who registers at a metropolitan hotel for the purpose of killing himself—for reasons he deems good and sufficient, but which are not disclosed until later. Just as he is about to pull the trigger, a shot in a room across the court arrests his hand. Through the open window he sees a beautiful young woman bending over a prostrate figure and taking from the man's hand a magnificent jewel—the Signet of Sheba.

Her story winning Russell's sympathy, he astonishes her with an offer to shoulder the blame, so that she may go free. Thus he is drawn into a series of amazing adventures, absorbing in their interest, full of thrills and hair-raising exploits, mysterious and mystifying, with touches of delightful romance. The incidents are strung together in a way that succeeds in keeping the spectator guessing until the very end. It's pretty clever direction that can keep the astute picture going public from spotting the clue to a mystery at least two reels from the climax, but "A Sporting Chance" manages to achieve this very thing.

Stephen Fox wrote the story, and William Russell Productions did the filming. There is an exceptionally fine cast supporting the star, with charming Fritzi Brunette playing opposite, while the others include George Periolat, J. Farrell MacDonald, Lee Hill, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks.

"A FIGHT FOR LOVE" IS AN EXCITING PICTURE

HARRY CARREY FREES HIMSELF IN PHOTOPLAY AT THE EMPIRE

Inch by inch toward the edge of a cliff on a deserted island, two men, a white man and an Indian, advance. They are fighting for love and for life The girl, who crouches at one side, is hoping, hoping, praying that one of them will win.

This is one of the dramatic scenes in "A Fight for Love," which comes to the Empire theatre on Thursday. And Harry Carey's fight is a good one. He clears himself of a acharge of murder and of unlicensed whiskey trading and earns the big reward that his enemy covets.

E. B. Lewis and Jack Ford, scenario writer and producer, respectively, should both pat themselves on the back for this achievement. The scenes are wonderfully beautiful as well as thrilling, and the cast of Harry Carey, Neva Gerber, Neola May and Joe Harris is superb.

A., has received the forms which must be filled in by Canadians who served in Imperial regiments in order to qualify for war service gratuity. Forms have also been received which are to be filed in by all those claiming passage money on behalf of soldiers' dependents. Mr. Whatley will be pleased to take up all these cases just as soon as the claimant fills in the forms which he will supply.

"Mother Shipton" Hoax.

Mother Shipton was reputed an English prophetess of the time of Henry VIII. She was first heard from in 1641, when "The Prophecie of Mother Shipton" was published anonymously in London. In 1862 Charles Hindley reprinted a life of Mother Shipton, originally published by Richard Heady (London, 1684). He added some doggerel of his own and wound up with the prophecy that the world would come to an end in 1881. In 1873 Mr. Hindley acknowledged that the verses were a hoax.

Gem Has Tragic History.

The "Regent" diamond, which is treasured in Paris, and is the queen of all the French national gems, was picked up in 1701 at the Parteal mines on the Kistna, by a slave, who, concealing it in a hole cut for its reception in his thigh, escaped with it to the coast. Here he sold it to an English skipper, who, instead of paying the small sum demanded, treacherously killed the slave.

Flamingo Nearing Extinction.

The flamingo's happy hunting ground used to be throughout Florida and many lovely members of its family could be met with in the other hot countries. Very few of them are left now, however, anywhere in this country and many bird lovers predict that in a few years more they will have been killed off until they will be extinct.

MOVIES AS PART OF CHURCH PROGRAM

"Pay admision to the church movie? Most certainly.

"You charge for an oyster supper, you buy tickets for an entertainment and if you don't pay to get into the church fair your pocket-book has suffered a nervous collapse before you can manage a graceful exit."

Those are the sentiments expressed by the Rev. Leslie Willis Sprague when asked to give his opinion on whether admission should be charged for a motion picture entertainment programme given in a church.

Mr. Sprague was formerly one of the pastors of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, for many years he has been connected with social work and is now devoting his attention to the Community Motion Picture Bureau which directed the moving picture entertainment of the War Camp Community Service and is now continuing its work as the recognized Government agency in providing programmes for American soldiers, says Max H. Spencer, Religions Editor of the Syracuse Journal.

When discussing the question of admission fees Mr. Sprague was emphatic in his belief that the church movie should pay for itself although it ought not to be a money-making enterprise or enter into competition with theatrical movie houses, that, he believes would be quite as unfair as for a church to attempt to introduce a free street car service.

A Help to Worship.

"I am satisfied," continued Mr. Sprague, "that the moving picture is a real help to worship and should not be a recreational or commercial thing put on just to get an audience—that is not a fair deal. It is beneath the dignity of the church. It should be a part of the service and include biblical stories or missionary experiences, educational films and dramas, explained during the projection and with a five or ten minute talk at the end to hammer some eternal truth home. Returning to the question of charging admission. I believe that from five to twenty cents might be collected and in some places the regular local price of movies could be charged.

Cost of Equipment.

"By no means charge admission to a church movie," said Ray Smith, brother of the Rev. Paul Smith, of the International Church Film Corporation. "No church can take our service if it does not contract to exhibit the films without charge. We take this position because we do not believe in the commercialization of the church.

"A free will offering may be received, but the plan we suggest is to have the cost of the service underwritten by subscriptions. Forty people at twenty-five cents a week can easily pay for a combination programme for week days and Sundays. Over a thousand churches have already filled their applications for our service. Five hundred dollars will provide an equipment of machine, booth and screen equal to any theatre equipment. The amount of two hundred dollars paid down, with the year in which to complete the full payment."

The Rev. A. Edwin Keigwin, D.D., pastor of the West End Presbyterian Church, New York, states that his church has found no difficulty in paying for the Monday evening entertainment programme by receiving an offering. The children's exhibition in the afternoon, however, is absolutely free.

Another system adopted by Rev. Christian F. Reisner, D.D., a pioneer in this church entertainment, is to present all members of the children of the Sunday School with a ticket; the bearers paying one or two cents at the door, children not holding tickets paying a larger fee.

The Rev. Karl Palmer Miller, who has been chaplain in a Southern camp and is now pastor of the Mariners' Church of the New York Port Society, is opposed to admission fees but approves taking up a collection. He says: "I can see no sense in opening up a charge movie in the church. The motion picture is doing in a very large way what novels and magazines have done for the young people of other generations. It feeds their appetite for adventure."

Movie Has Come to Stay.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion that the movie has come to stay as a part of the church programme. Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Baptists are all ready to take advantage of the screen for religious propaganda. Two Lutherans are strongly opposed as a body to this form of entertainment.

The National Catholic War Council as a part of its civic education campaign is preparing to distribute motion inexcessible parts of the country. A lecturer will accompany each motor truck and a survey is being made of the Pennsylvania coal miners and other [illegible] tled districts as to the equipment necessary for these free entertainments, which will consist mostly of motion pictures produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with a lecture lasting fifteen minutes on one of the subjects shown on the screen.

In a letter written to an officer of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, General Pershing states what the motion picture was to the American Expeditionary Forces. What it did to divert and entertain over there may be duplicated by the churches, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., and all other organizations desiring to give religious inspiration through this agency.

General Pershing wrote as follows: "From the standpoint of view of the entertainment and contentment of men and officers, probably no one feature was more important or had greater effect than the moving picture shows which were made available at all times and often under most adverse conditions which active operations entail."

Silly Old Superstitions.

In the highlands of Scotland it is taken as a terribly unlucky sign if a dog should run between the bridal pair on their wedding day, and brides still tell the bees of their wedding and decorate the hives for the occasion, says the Philadelphia North American. In parts of England and Scotland there exists an ancient custom for which no one seems to know the reason, by which part of the wedding cake is broken over the head of the bride and the guests all scramble for a piece.

Permanent Colors.

Ancient Egyptians had a marvelous knowledge of colors, and they understood fully what colors would last. In the Egyptian papyri the ground colors are as good as ever they were. The Egyptians worked their outlines in lampblack, used clay for their whites, ferruginous earths for their reds, ochres for their yellows, and for green they used perhaps green jasper or mixed blue carbonate or copper with ochre. All these colors are permanent.

Roughing It.

Robert and his father were stranded one night out in a country district. Their car had broken down and they were obliged to stay all night in a humble little home. Everything was strange to Robert, who was strictly a city child. When he returned home I heard him tell his little neighbor friend: "Say, it was great! We slept on a feather bed and washed in their dishpan on the back porch."

Cultivate the Memory.

Back of the idea of cultivating a memory is the keener edge it puts on the brain generally, which is the making of the more attractive person. Is there anything duller than a woman who is just too lazy minded to try to remember names and places and has to refer constantly to a third person for aid in telling an incident?—Exchange.

About the Carat.

The "carat," the unit of weight peculiar to jewelry, was introduced from India. Man sought to record the weight of small objects by using tiny seeds. The barley grain was used in Europe. In the East the seeds of a vetch were in use, and it is from the Greek word for vetch (keration) that the now familiar term "carat" is derived.

Best Fruits of Romance.

A speaker was taken aback during a Sunday school session. He had been commenting on the blessings of matrimony, and just to see whether or not the class was really paying attention asked one girl what she considered to be the best fruits of romance. The girl pondered a moment and then answered: "I should say the wedding date and the bridal pair."

The Hour-Glass.

Instead of being obsolete the hourglass in various forms is a present-day necessity. An authority points out that for such purposes as trimming, hardening and tempering heats in twist drill manufacture, where seconds or minutes must be gauged accurately, nothing serves like the hour-glass with the right amount of sand.

On Discarding the Old.

The great discard the old because it has been found insufficient or false, the small because it is old. While the former is influenced by reason, the latter is by disgust. Genius wants to do more than its predecessor; he who apes genius, merely something different.—Lessing.

Strange Animals.

At the foot of Mount Kowang, in North Manchuria, there live strange animals called "faru-nanban-kau." They are larger than ordinary apes and dig spacious caverns on the rocky sides of the hills. During the spring and summer they store up sufficient food for the winter.

THEY LOVED AND LOST.

Some Famous Men Who Had Their Romances.

There is a well-known picture representing a girl earnestly gazing at a framed portrait which she is holding up before her. Entitled "Vain Regrets," it requires no further explanation, as it merely portrays what, in real life, has happened thousands of times over, says Tit-Bits.

A story is told, for instance, of how a pretty but dowerless damsel was once approached by a humble sergeant in the French army with an offer which she contemptuously rejected. As the years went by, the obscure sergeant rose by degrees until he became a brigadier. He was present at Fleurs, Corunna, Austerlitz, and Waterloo. What must the woman, who years before, had scorned the offer of his heart, have thought when she heard men speak of the mighty exploits of the Marshal of Napoleon? At the time when the Emperor was overthrown by Wellington, she was living in pitiable penury in a garret on the Quai Conti.

A poor Fleet Street scribbler once raised his eyes to the fair and comfortably dowered daughter of a city banker. All that the latter did, however, when she heard his piteous tale of love was to inform him that she would not have him if he brought her all the jewels in Asia.

The humble scribe took this rejection very much to heart, but the day came round, and that in the space of only a few years, when his name had become famous throughout the length and breadth of the land, for he was no other than Charles Dickens.

Years afterwards, the girl who had once scorned his affection actually went to him for financial assistance. A strange reversal of fortune! The author of "Pickwick" was not overjoyed at the sight of her, as readers of his biography need not be reminded. "I left her a lily—I found her a peony," was Dickens' caustic observation on this ill-considered visit.

That she lived deeply to rue the day she had rejected the rhapsodical addresses of the great Victorian novelist is a matter of common knowledge.

Everybody knows the sad fate of the famous artist over whose creations Ruskin delighted to wax eloquent.

As a result of the machinations of an unscrupulous stepmother, Turner's sweetheart and he became estranged. The girl eventually married someone else, and Turner registered a vow that he would remain single for life, an oath to which he remained tragically faithful.

Before the girl had been married many months she discovered that she had made the mistake of her life, and as the disappointed Turner mounted higher and higher in his profession, often did she wish that stepmothers had never been invented.

Instead of enjoying the companionship of a brilliant and successful genius—a man who, from small beginnings, soon came to possess vast sums of money, and to count among his friends many of the most outstanding people in the realm—all she could boast were circumstances anything but affluent, and a home darkened by the cloud of misunderstanding.

Often when, in 1889, Dorothy Tennant read of the heroic adventures of Henry Morton Stanley, must she have deplored the fact that she had not been a little kinder to him in the days when he was her humble suitor. This lady was more fortunate than many others, however; for when, in the midst of the lionizing which heralded his return to London, the heroic adventurer once more hastened to her side, this time, instead of saying "no," her answer was just the opposite.

Cultivate Worthy Thoughts.

Such are the habitual thoughts, such also will be the character of thy mind; for the soul is dyed by the thoughts. Dye it, then, with a continuous series of such thoughts as these: for instance, that where a man can live, there he can also live well. But he must live in a palace; well then, he can also live well in a palace.—Exchange.

Ancient Slot Machines.

Automatic machines were first used in Egypt and in the old temples of the East devices were employed for automatically dispensing the purifying water. A small coin had to be dropped into a slot to set the mechanism in motion and secure a small quantity of water.—N. Y. Tribune.

TORONTO LEAFS GET THREE NEW PLAYERS

PRES. McCAFFERY FORCED TO BUY THE PLAYERS HE SIGNED LAST FALL

President Jas. J. McCaffery has always maintained that the Binghamton ball players he signed last fall would play next year for the Toronto club. He gained his point, yesterday, though not exactly in the way he anticipated at the annual meeting of the International League in New York. The league voted to uphold the action taken by President Fultz and the National Board of Arbitration in awarding the players of last years' Binghamton club to Akron Mr. McCaffery protested this action on the ground that he had signed Outfielder J. J. Riley and Shortstop Frank O'Rourke of the Binghamton club after that club had granted all its players their unconditional release. Finally, however, the Toronto club was permitted to purchase the players from the Akron club.

Leafs Get Pitcher Shea.

Toronto also got another player by purchase, viz., Patrick Shea, pitcher with the Newark club last year. There were two other players who had been held in trust by the league for the creditors of the Syracuse club sold and the purchase price was used to pay off some of the claims. Pitcher D. Barnhardt was sold to Reading and Robert Davis, who was a Newark infielder last season, will go to Syracuse

Fultz's Salary Doubled.

David L. Fultz was re-elected president, secretary and treasurer of the league, and it was unofficially said that the executive's salary was almost doubled for the ensuing year. This despite Mr. McCaffery's opposition. The player limit was increased from 16 to 19. including a player-manager, and the salary limit from $3,500 to $5,000.

Season Opens April 21.

The club owners agreed on a playing schedule of 154 games. The season of 1920 will open Wednesday, April 21, and close Monday, Sept. 29. The eight-club circuit will be made up as follows: Toronto, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Baltimore, Jersey City, Reading and Akron.

The Ohio addition to the circuit was aranged through the transfer of the Ginghamton franchise to Akron, where a new ball park is to be built by a local syndicate of business men, who were represented by Frank W. Doyle and Charles C. Skelly.

Ernest Landgraf, who held the Newark, N. J. franchise had it transferred to Syracuse, N.Y., where he and Joseph Dunfee will operate the club. Dunfee, who is a promoter of sports in Syracuse, has secured grounds at Genesse turnpike and the boulevard in that city for a new ball park. where spacious stands will be erected in time for the opening of the 1920 season.

MAJOR LEAGUES NOW IN SESSION

MUCH INTEREST BEING SHOWN TOWARD THE MEETING OF AMERICAN LEAGUE

New York, Dec. 10.—The annual meeting of the National Baseball League opened yesterday. The American Leaguers will hold their annual meeting here today, and the minor leagues will dispose of their grist of business later in the week. The new International League, which held its annual convention Monday, wound up routine affairs yesterday, and the magnates and players remained in town to watch the activities of the big leagues.

The club owners of the National League had a busy session yesterday commencing with the meeting of the Board of Directors. The principal business was the settlement of various financial matters and the election of a new board.

There will be no election of a president, as President Heydler is serving a three-year term.

Another question that aroused interest was the proposal to eliminate the 25-cent bleacher seats at National league parks. It was reported that a majority of the directors favored the abolition of the cheap seats. The air was full of rumors of trades of players.

The meeting of the American League today was the all-absorbing topic of conversation among the baseball notables. The announcement that President Ban Johnson and the five "loyal" club owners were on their way here for the meeting was accepted in some quarters as meaning that an end of the internal wrangle in the organization was in sight.

ALEXANDRIA FACTORY FAVORS THE AMALGAMATION OF CHEESE COMPANIES

Directors Vote Unanimously in Favor of Uuiting Factories of Peterborough, Hastings and Prince Edward Counties Into One Large Concern.

An indication that the proposed amalgamation of cheese factories in Peterborough, Hastings and Prince Edward Counties is progressing was furnished on Monday of this week when at a largely attended meeting of the shareholders and patrons of the Alexandra cheese factory in Hastings County, near Madoc, a resolution was passed unanimously expressing the belief that the proposed large central co-operative dairy company should be in the best interests of the dairy farmers and dairy industry. The shareholders of the factory also expressed their approval of the appointment, when the time comes for further action to be taken, of arbitrators with the object of ascertaining the value of the factory and its equipment with a view to the amalgamation of the factory with the proposed company. The resolution was moved by Mr. J. A. Caskey and seconded by Mr. A. Forstel, both of Madoc.

The objects of the proposed company were explained to the meeting by Mr. H. B. Cowan, editor-in-chief of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, who after outlinging the proposal at length, answered a considerable number of questions that were asked by the shareholders. Emphasis was laid on the fact that what is proposed is an amalgamation of the small cheese factories into a large central company, in which the present shareholders of the small companies will continue as shareholders of the large company, and, therefore, will continue to direct not only the operations of their own local factories, but of the large company as well. It was pointed out that it is not proposed to buy the factories from the present shareholders but to ask the present shareholders to unite with shareholders in other small companies in conducting their present business on a larger and more profitable basis.

Mr. Cowan pointed out that shareholders of factories will not be asked to commit themselves definitely to the proposal until after arbitrators, if they approve of their appointment, have placed a valuation on their factories. This valuation will then have to be approved of by the shareholders of the local factories as well as by the officers of the proposed central company. If the valuation is acceptable to both then the shareholders of the local factories will be asked if they are prepared to take the necessary steps to have their factories united with the other co-operative factories in the amalgamation. Mr. John McCaffrey, the president of the Alexandra cheese factory, has been elected as a provisional director of the central company.

CITY COUNCIL MUST PROTECT HEALTH

UPON REPORT OF ONE SMALLPOX CASE COMPULSORY VACCINATION SHALL BE ORDERED

If this epidemic is a real menace to the health of this community Dr. McPherson has the authority of the statutes to do anything in his power to control it. The law plainly states that if a case of smallpox is reported in a city the City Council shall thereupon order every citizen to be vaccinated. This is a compulsory measure leaving no choice in the matter to the municipal government.

The question now confronting the M.H.O. is whether or not the epidemic is serious enough to enforce the law in regard to vaccination. By his tone last night it is surmised that should any more cases of smallpox be reported in the city he will take immediate action to enforce the law for compulsory vaccination. If he decides upon this course he does not have to convince any board or council of the advisability of it but simply request the city fathers to carry out their duties as defined by statute.

ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY WEARING

I beg to submit the following report for the year 1919:

This has been one of the best years in connection with the work of this society since I have become connected with it. We have had continued complaints of neglect and much work has been done to remedy conditions, but we have not had many of the really sad cases that have been frequent in years before. There is no doubt that the vigilance of the society in at once taking measures where neglect is shown does a good deal towards discouraging such neglect on the part of parents and others.

The report of the secretary will show in detail the work that has been done, and I may say that he has been indefatigable in his efforts toward promoting the welfare of children in this respect during the year and has been particularly successful in being able to remedy matters in many cases without taking the children away from their parents.

Splendid work has also been done by the matron to children who have come to the Shelter, and it has always been beneficial for the children to remain at the Shelter for a time before transferring them to foster homes on account of the very fine training received while under the matron's care.

I wish to lay stress on the fact that a number of the ladies of the city have been most faithful in their attendance at the Shelter and the work towards providing the children at the Shelter with clothing, etc. Year after year some of the ladies of our city make very great sacrifices in this respect.

The thanks of the society are also due to Dr. D. C. King, who throughout the year gave unstinted medical service to the children of the Shelter free of charge, and also to Dr. Buchanan, who has assisted Dr. King in minor operations.

Thanks are also due to Dr. J. E. Middleton for free dental service throughout the year to the children residing at the Shelter.

The Society appreciates to the very fullest extent the way in which the general public continued to support them financially. We have never failed to get their support. The citizens were particularly generous on Tag Day.

Christmas is once more approaching, and I have no doubt whatever that the children at the Shelter will be remembered as they have always been in the past. One lady in the city who has a very beautiful home has already invited to the children to a dinner at her home during the Christmas season.

In closing, I wish to thank the president, Mr. E. A. Peck, and Chief Thompson for the ready co-operation they have given to me in matters which have come before me in connection with the Society through the year.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH WEARING,
Secretary.

Helped Care For The Unfortunate

The report of the Auxiliary of the Children's Aid Society for the past year is as follows:

We have held forty-four sewing and several special meetings during the past year with an average attendance of four ladies, to make, mend and care for the clothing of the incoming and outgoing children. At times we were very much rushed with the work, yet with patience and perseverance we were able to overcome that difficulty largely owing to the fact that the ladies of St. Andrew's and Knox churches responded in goodly numbers, and now we are pleased to state that the work is in splendid shape, as well as a nice supply of clothing made over and mended in cases of emergency, thus enabling the Auxiliary to take the Christmas holidays, to re-open again in February, 1920. We trust that the other churches will respond when called upon by the Auxiliary.

The inventory taken of the Shelter on December 4th found it very well equipped with bed linen and quilts, bath towels, table linen, etc.

We have had to replenish the kitchen with porcelain cups for the children to save breakages; cooking utensils, etc., also refurnishing some of the windows with curtains, rods, etc.

Under the management of our esteemed matron, Mrs. Read, the house throughout is scrupulous. The children are clean and carefully tended. She is loved and respected by every child that comes to the Shelter.

Also thanks is extended to Mrs. Read for her kindness to the Auxiliary during the past year.

With the permission of the board, we wish to extend our hearty appreciation and thanks to the following:

Dr. King for medical attendance.

Dr. Buchanan and Dr. McCullough for assistance.

Mr. Lewis, cutting hair.

Dr. Stacey, attending the eyes.

This work has been done for the children free of charge.

Wishing you all the compliments of the season.

Respectfully submitted,
A. GIBBS,
Pres., C. A. S. Auxiliary.

RETIRING PRESIDENT SUBMITS HIS REPORT

E. A. PECK SUGGESTS CHANGES AT MEETINGS OF CHILDREN'S AID

The reports of the secretary, treasurer and the agent will deal substantially with the operations of the past year, and a few words from me only may be expected.

One event worthy of record was the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of a branch of this Society in Peterborough. The Society was favored with a visit from Mr. Kelso, the provincial superintendent, who has been connection with the work since the adoption of the legislation under which the work is carried on, and gave a very interesting address on the subject. Peterborough was not only amongst the first to establish a branch under the present provincial authority, but had for some time previous been maintaining an organization for a similar purpose, which had been established mainly through the efforts of our present Federal member.

During the year certain improvements in connection with the Shelter have been discussed, but these have not yet been made, and no doubt they will receive the early attention of the new board. I refer to the proposed additional plumbing, the construction of a detention room, and the matter of increased fire protection.

I note that the limited time available at our monthly meetings is often considerably encroached upon by the discussion of comparatively trifling matters. Possibly the new board might consider the advisability of disposing of such minor matters by committee, so as to permit the time of the monthly meetings to be devoted to the more important questions.

I cannot too highly commend the services rendered by not only the agent and matron, but also by the secretary, physician and ladies' committee, and by Mrs. Knox, who again so kindly undertook the management of the children's tag day.

I regret that the reports of the various societies throughout the province have not in recent years been printed by the Government. It is very desirable that the publishing of these reports and other matters relating to the work in the province be resumed. It would tend to encourage and assist the societies in their work.

E. A. PECK.
President.

Every year, dress fabrics are becoming sheerer and sheerer—the colors more dainty. The ordeal of trusting the delicate garments to "soap and water", however, is done away with by the use of Lux.

Lux will not harm any garment, however delicate or dainty, that pure water itself will not injure.

You can wash any garment with Lux without fear of having it spoiled. The whole secret lies in the matchless purity of the little satiny Lux flakes.

SIX YEAR OLD ELSIE GATES SAVES LIFE OF HER BROTHER

Knelt at Edge of Hole Until Brother Appeared the Second Time When Clutching Him She Cried "Hold on Jimmie, Mamma's Coming."

Stories of heroic deeds of valor are recorded in the annals of history but there are none greater than that performed yesterday afternoon by little Elsie Gates and her mother when they saved the life of their brother and son, respectively, from drowning.

Several children were playing on the ice a short distance above Inverlea Park and on the east side of the river. The water is open to the north, south and west and the ice on which the children were playing is really a projection out into the river.

Suddenly the ice gave way and Jimmie Gates, grandson of Peterborough's former dog catcher, fell through into the water. The place was about 40 yards from the shore and more than double that distance from the nearest house. The children were all alone and one of their number was being drowned.

They ran towards home very frightened and screaming for help. The neighbors appeared on the scene armed with pike poles, etc., to aid in the rescue.

But all would have been in vain but for the wonderful bravery and presence of mind of the boy's little sister, six-year-old Elsie Gates. She knelt at the edge of the hole where her brother had disappeared and on his appearance clutched at his hand. His mit came off and down he went again. Not dismayed the little girl remained in her perilous position until her brother appeared again. This time she was more successful; she caught the drowning boy by the hand and placed it on the edge of the ice where they could both hold on. Then looking over her shoulder she cried out in her childish voice. "Hold on Jimmy, mamma's coming."

And mamma was coming. On hearing the cries of the children Mrs. Gates looked out over the river and seeing the hole in the ice surmised what had happened. Not waiting to put on her slippers she glided over the thin ice in her stockinged feet to the edge of the hole where her little daughter was heroically and determinedly holding on to her almost exhausted brother. Mrs. Gates lifted her son out of the water and safely returned home.

It was stated that little Jimmie was almost black with the cold and it took considerable effort to "bring him round." Today he is resting quietly and a sturdy constitution will probably shake off the effects of the cold water and he will be around playing with the other children in a few days, it is hoped.

The Humane Society issues medals for life saving, but not in the case of rescue of a person by a member of his or her family. Otherwise little Elsie Gates's bravery would receive official recognition.

ALEXANDER IRVINE ACQUITTED OF CHARGE OF STEALING SUM OF MONEY

Proved to the Satisfaction of the Jury That the Money of the Peterborough Bread Company Was Lost and Not Stolen—Searched and Advertised For the Bills

In the first criminal case to be heard at the county court, yesterday afternoon, Alexander Irvine was acquitted of stealing the sum of $39.94 from the Peterborough Bread Company.

The first witness of the case was Mr. J. Corbett, manager of the local branch of the company. He explained to the court the method by which the accounts of the company were kept and how an account was kept of all the money handled by the drivers.

He swore that on a Saturday night Irvine, a driver, on one of the routes, had returned and reported that all his bills were lost. He (Irvine) had gone out to the stable and there found a $1 bill but no trace of the other $39.

On that same Saturday morning, Irvine had informed Corbett of his intention to quit his job. This was regarded as the one suspicious circumstance surrounding the case.

There was coming to Irvine at that time, according to Mr. Corbett's evidence, $36 in wages. This the manager refused to give, but he swore that he lent him $8 of his own personal money.

The bookkeeper of the company was summoned and her story corresponded with that of the manager.

The Defence

The first witness for the defence was the accused. He told of a quarrel he had had on the night proceeding the loss of the money, over a heated horse he had returned to the stable.

"What did the manager say to you?"

"He said, Look at that horse."

"I said, I am looking."

"He said, It is hot."

"I said, so would you be hot if you drew a wagon as far as that horse has."

"Do you think that was a fair question to ask him?" inquired Crowned to hitch managers to a cart and drive them about the street?"

"No," replied the witness.

The accused declared emphatically that he had lost the money and not stolen it.

On the discovery that the bills were missing, he rushed to the horse stable and found at the horse's heels a one dollar bill. He went to the stores where he had been that afternoon to find the money. He advertised for the money. On the following morning he rode on his bicycle over the entire route to endeavor to find the money.

"Did Corbett lend you any of his own money?"

"No, he did not, I signed the pay roll for one week's wages."

"But Mr. Corbett says you did not sign the pay roll. What do you say to that?"

"I signed the pay roll and if the book is brought here I will show you my name."

Name Rubbed Out.

The judge ordered the book to be sent for and there was considerable delay while waiting for it. The truth of the accused's story was to go through a severe test and considerable speculation was expressed by the people in the court room as to whether the name would be found or not.

The book was produced and mind to the surprise of everyone the announcement was made that the name had been rubbed out. The judge examined the book and intimated that he could see where the eraser had been applied.

Manager Corbett was again summoned into the box and swore the name had never been written there. He could see no sign of an eraser.

After being addressed by Mr. Gordon for the defendant, and Mr. Hatton, the prosecutor, the jury retired for about twenty minutes when they returned with the verdict "not guil-

There was no disturbance and the incident was almost without excitement, only a small crowd having gathered.

DR. J. V. GALLIVAN SECURES VERDICT FOR $150 AGAINST LOUIS YEOTES

Jury Orders the Doctor's Bill to be Paid by the Defendant Patient Was a Greek Boy Who Had Been in the Service of Mr. Yeotes.

In the case of Gallivan vs. Yeotes, a suit for $150 for medical attendance upon a boy in Mrs. Yeotes employ in June, 1915. Dr. Gallivan was the first witness. He told of going into Yeotes' shop for a shoe shine and while there Mr. Yeotes asked him to give medical attention to the boy.

"Mr. Yeotes promised to pay me for the attendance," stated the doctor.

The witness then told of different operations of giving treatment, of two of these surgical operations were necessary. Before any of these attentions were given Mr. Yeotes consent was obtained and the doctor understood that Mr. Yeotes was to pay the bill.

Dr. Gallivan told of the patient improving for some time and being removed from the hospital to the Yeotes' home. While staying there the condition of the boy grew worse and he was taken to a sanitarium.

"Did Yeotes ever promise you he would pay the account other than at the first?"

"Practically every time I met him he promised to pay me."

Dr. Gallivan told of a very serious operation he performed, assisted by Drs. Neal and McClelland.

Under cross-examination by Mr. Gordon, counsel for the defendant, he swore that every visit he made to the boy was necessary for the attention he required.

"Did Yeotes ever tell you he would write the boy's parents in Greece about the bill?"

"After four years of promising to pay the bill he did."

"Eight days after the major operation the boy died," told the doctor.

Mr. Gordon went into a rigid examination of all the accounts against Mr. Yeotes and of their fairness as a physician's charge.

Then the doctor's bookkeeper was summoned as a witness. She swore that she had sent accounts to Mr. Yeotes for services rendered to this boy at least six or eight times. Mr. Yeotes had not paid any of these accounts, but he had paid accounts for services rendered to his own family.

Doctors in Accord.

Drs. Neal and McClelland were summoned as witnesses and swore that they considered the bill of Dr. Gallvin an exceedingly moderate one. Dr. McClelland had considered the advisability of bringing Dr. Gallivan before the Medical Association for under charging.

Claims Fair Charge.

Mr. V. J. McElderry, addressing the jury on behalf of the plaintiff, Dr. Gallivan, claimed that the case was as clear as any that could be submitted for the consideration of any jury. The fairness of the charge, he submitted, was proved by the evidence of others doctors who are alone capable of fairly judging the value of surgical services rendered in this case.

He pointed out that Dr. Gallivan had given evidence that Mr. Yeotes had promised to pay for the medical and surgical attentions to be administered to the boy. This evidence was not contradicted by any evidence produced by the defence.

Claims Over Charge.

Mr. Gordon, in his address on behalf of the defendant, Mr. Yeotes, claimed that $75 or [illegible] would be a fair amount to charge for the services to the boy. He pointed out that the laws sets a certain fee that a lawyer can charge. It does not do this in the case of doctors and they are at liberty to charge whatever they themselves consider a fair amount.

Mr. Gordon drew attention to the fact that $100 was charged for an operation lasting for about one hour. At this rate his annual earning would amount to $310,000. This he considered an unfair profit.

He emphasized the fact that although the boy had no claims upon Mr. Yeotes, he had generously consented to care for him. He should not be punished for this generous treatment, argued Mr. Gordon.

Judge's Charge.

The judge, in his charge, reviewed carefully the accounts of Dr. Gallivan for services rendered to this boy. He called atention to the fact that although the original charges show an amount of $240 the bill calls for only $150.

The jury were out only a short time, when they brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff ordering Mr. Yeotes to pay the $150 account. Out of this Dr. Gallivan is to pay his two doctors who assisted him in the operation.

OPEN SWITCH CAUSES RAILWAY TRAGEDY

TWO MEN KILLED IN COLLISION ON C.P.R. AT SHERBROOKE NEAR MONTREAL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sherbrooke, Que., Dec. 11.—Two men were killed and four others badly injured at two o'clock this morning when a C.P.R. special passenger train going towards Montreal, bearing Chinese coolies from overseas, collided with a freight train at Milan, near Farnsham, Que. The freight had been placed on siding and the switch, in some way, was left open. The passenger engine collided with the rear of the freight sending two cars off the track. The victims are M. H. Booth and J. B. Buchanan, conductor and passenger on the freight.

C.P.R. Explains Accident.

Montreal, Dec. 11.—The official statement issued by the C. P. R. regarding the wreck stated that the passenger special in some unaccountable manner took the track leading to the siding on which the freight was standing, although the switch showed clear. It is suggested in the statement that this was probably due to the excessive cold affecting the working of the switch.

LINERS CRASH IN COLLISION

"CARMANIA" AND "MARYLAND" COME TOGETHER 500 MILES FROM HALIFAX

TRAGEDY IS NARROWLY AVERTED

BOTH VESSELS, WIRELESS MESSAGE SAYS, CONTINUE TO THEIR DESTINATION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Dec. 11.—A tragedy at sea was averted by the merest hair's breadth last night when the Cunarder Carmania and the British steamer Maryland crashed together in the storm-tossed waters off Cape Race early last evening. The coast stations picked up an S.O.S. signal flashed by the Carmania, and later messages supplied the information that the vessels had collided five hundred miles from Halifax.

Details of the accident are lacking, but from the wireless message it is learned that the Maryland struck the Carmania on the starboard side and the damage was all above the water line. Another wireless stated that she was not seriously damaged and was proceeding to Halifax, while the Maryland is continuing her voyage to London. The Carmania carried a [illegible]

COAL MINERS' STRIKE IS ENDED MEN ACCEPT TEMPORARY TERMS

Work Will Be Resumed by Men Tomorrow and Shipments of Coal From the Mines Will Begin Monday Both Sides Satisfied.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 11. — The coal miners' strick is ended. With but one dissenting vote the general committee of the United Mine Workers of America voted to accept President Wilson's proposals for immediate return to work pending a final settlement of their wage controversy with the operators by a commission to be appointed by him.

Telegrams were sent out last night to the four thousand locals of the union by international officers of the mine workers, instructing the men to return to work immediately. Full instructions with regard to the agreement were sent out today.

Operators predicted full resumption of work on Friday and shipment of coal from the mines beginning on Monday morning.

Miners, operators and government officials alike were highly gratified over the settlement and all sides appeared confident of a final settlement of the fight by the commission.

The action ends a tie-up of the coal industry of more than five weeks duration and one which was more far reaching in its effects than any other in the history of the country. As a result of the strike the country was fast approaching a complete shut down of industry and widespread suffering among its 100,000,000 inhabitants.

Reds Opposed Settlement.

The decision of the miners came after many hours of debate in which the radical element in the general committee made incendiary speeches against the operators and others interested in a settlement of the strike and for a third time threatened to defeat efforts to settle the strike at this time. The conservative element, led by Acting President J. L. Lewis and Secretary Treasurer W. Green, gained control of the situation yesterday morning and succeeded in putting down practically all opposition by the time the question came to a vote.

One concession was made to the radicals. The convention agreed to the calling of a general convention of the miners at a future date at which time the action of and reason for the general committee will be fully explained. The opponents of the acceptance of the President's plan made their fight principally on the theory that only a general convention of the mine workers had the power to call off the strike.

Members of the general committee steadfastly refused to make public the name of the delegate who cast the one dissenting vote.

Official Statements.

Two statements were given out following adjournment of the conference by Attorney-General A. Mitchell Palmer, who first submitted the President's proposal to Acting President Lewis and Secretary-Treasurer Green at a conference in Washington last Saturday and came to Indianapolis on Monday to await the outcome of consideration of the plan by the miners' general committee.

Mr. Palmer's first statement expressed his gratification at the decision of the United Mine Workers and commended Mr. Lewis and Mr. Green for "their wise and patriotic action."

Supplemental Statement.

A supplemental statement follows:

"The miners at their meeting accepted the president's proposal exactly as written, and I understand the operators' committee have announced their acceptance of it. It provides for the immediate general resumption of operations in all districts upon the basis which obtained on October 31, 1919, except as to wages which are to be 14 per cent. higher than at that date. This means that the men shall be taken back to work in all mines in the positions and on the terms of their contracts of employment then existing, and it is confidently expected that the mine owners will accede to the government's earnest request that the status quo of October 31 be re-established in order that peaceful relations between employer and employe in all parts of the mining fields may be immediately resumed. I am asking the governors of all coal mining states to co-operate in the effort to bring this about."

Responsible To the Nation.

Mr. Lewis's statement declared that the action of the general committee was taken with consciousness of the responsibilites of the miners to the nation during "this acute industrial crisis and firm in the conviction that the word of the President of the United States will secure for the miners just consideration of their merited claims."

He stated that the international convention of the miners would be held in Indianapolis and a supplemental explanation given the delegates from all of the four thousand locals.

Mr. Lewis declared that the action taken should "demonstrate to the people of our country that the United Mine Workers of America are loyal to our country and believe in the perpetuity of our democratic institutions. No greater demonstration of such facts could be given than our action in accepting the proposal of the President of the United States."

FORMER MINISTER TALKS TO FARMERS

HON. T. A. CRERAR DISCUSSES NEW NATIONAL POLICY OF AGRICULTURISTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Woodstock, N. B., Dec. 11.—Speaking before the United Farmers of this province last night, Hon. T. A. Crerar, former Minister of Agriculture, said that the new national policy adopted as the Farmers' platform was not class policy, as claimed by many. As a study of the platform would show, one of the most important planks was a tariff on which their policy was aimed at a reduction in the necessities of life. Canada's wealth, he said, was derived from producing and trading, and had her fiscal policy for the last forty years been different there was not the least doubt but that the wealth and population of the country would have been greater than it was today.

FIREMEN AND POLICE.

THE REVIEW has been charged with inconsistency in its present attitude in advocating an elected commission for the management of the local police department a charge which is by no means warranted. It is true however, that two or three years ago The Review did oppose a proposition for a change of management. But there is a vast difference between the change as then advocated and the plan which has been endorsed recently by the City Council.

At the time referred to the idea was to have the police department controlled by a committee of Council just as the fire brigade is at present. It would be nothing short of a misfortune to have the police affairs of the city mixed up in civic politics and made an issue at every municipal election. That was the proposition to which The Review was opposed, and it has not changed its opinion on this subject. There is a wide distinction between an elected commission and a Council committee. The three business men who have all these years managed the waterworks system and more recently other public utilities in this city can always be referred to by way of a convincing argument in favor of the elected commission.

There is no denying the fact that the efficiency of the fire department has at times been impaired by aldermanic interference. Not only the heads but the different members of the brigade have been hampered by the machinations of local politicians. The mills of the City Council as a rule move slowly. There is a delay in the operations of an aldermanic committee that is unknown in the procedure of the elected commission, a body that is directly responsible to the people even as the aldermen themselves are.

The waterworks system of this city has been evolved from small beginnings to its present high state of efficiency, easily on a par with any and superior to that of the majority of cities in Ontario. The plant is modern in every particular and the service approaches perfection with a minimum of cost. The water pressure is equal to every call that has ever been made upon it. Even the danger of a water famine, disastrous at any time, but especially so in the event of fire, has been provided against by the installation four years ago of an auxiliary steam pumping plant which has been called into requisition at different times every winter since it first went into commission. A filtration plant is all that is necessary to bring the system up to date in every detail, and this has already been arranged for, the co-operation of the City Council being all that is required to give it effect.

The same efficiency has been displayed by this board in the management of other utilities. The commission too, has been able to secure the services of experts whose work has been appreciated, showing as it does results in every line. During the war the Utilities Commission did not find it necessary to raise the rates to the consumers of water or electric light, even though the cost of operation was increased. Peterborough is one of the few municipalities in Ontario that has maintained such a record during the war. Could a committee of the City Council have set and maintained such a pace?

The higher provincial authorities have no quarrel with the local Utilities Commission. As much cannot be said with regard to the fire department management. There have been frequent official complaints that the brigade is not up to date, and the underwriters have recently raised the local rates of insurance for this very reason. No fire chief whose hands are tied can possibly make a record, no matter how enthusiastic or efficient he may be in the discharge of his duty. It is of no avail to go to the expense of hiring experts unless such employes are allowed to a degree a free hand, furnished with the necessary equipment and assistance, and spared the interference of those who have no working knowledge of their duties.

It is no secret that the Fire Chiefs' Association of Ontario have at their annual conventions for years been agitating for a change of the system under which they at present operate. They would prefer to work under an elected commission rather than be subject to a committee of aldermen. The change suggested, too, is one of the possibilities of the near future.

CAN THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY COME BACK?

THERE IS ALWAYS hope for the regeneration of any political party that meets with disaster not because of any scandal in its administrative record, but by reason of an issue which involves a sound principle that survives the overthrow of its sponsors. It is only a question of time until the people perceive and hasten to remedy their mistakes. Governments make errors, and the electors, too, are not above the perpetration of serious blunders.

Perhaps it is true that under the old regime Ontario ran to excess in the matter of one-sided representation and that certain important classes in the community were not allowed a voice in the management of public affairs. If this were actually the case the fault lay with the people themselves, and no party system was responsible for the condition. The electors at any time had the remedy in their own hands.

There are four parties in the Ontario Legislature today, and a coalition of two of these hold power by a precarious margin. No practical man believes for a moment that present conditions can continue indefinitely. A multiplicity of parties in any representative body is illogical. The bi-party system is the only one that can possibly survive. That is the natural alignment of men in any deliberative body. There may be a variety of personal opinions, but there are not more than two essential sides to any question, and every problem is eventually disposed of along these lines.

The history of politics in any civilized country in the world bears out these contentions. Parties—so-called independents—have arisen, had their day, and ceased to be. Only a few years ago there were four or five recognized parties in the United States Congress, the old factions, the prohibitionists, the socialists, the populists and the like. The latter at one time held the balance of power, and their ultimate control of the Administration was predicted. Now only the Republicans and the Democrats survive. The prohibitionists were an outstanding example of the folly of so-called independent political action. As a separate unit they were unable to accomplish anything. It was only when they returned to their former political associations that they attained their ideals. Federal prohibition goes into effect on January 16th, and the party of that name has been dead for years. What is true of the prohibition element applies to the populists, the party that was made up of the farmers of the nation.

Seven years ago the Republican party was all but annihilated. By some it was regarded as down and out for all time. Still, it is coming back, chastened, perhaps, but gaining strength in every section of the country. Even a break has been made in the strongholds of the solid South. The principles of that party remain practically unchanged, even though the policy may have been modified. All through the days of seemingly hopeless minority in opposition the Republicans stood to their guns and have regained their old-time fighting trim.

History repeats itself. The present situation in Ontario is a parallel to that in the United States a few years ago, and the result will be the same. The Conservative party will survive. Its principles will prove its salvation. There is nothing in the record during fourteen years of its administration that can be cast up to it as a reproach. If it came to temporary grief, it was simply because the people illogically endorsed the main features of their progressive policy and rejected the very men who initiated it.

There will be coalitions in the future that will mean something. Parties with the same aims cannot permanently remain apart. Factions will yet align themselves with the parent organization. The old order of bi-parties will eventually be restored.

SOMETHING THE MATTER.

But there must be something the matter with Mr. Wilson nevertheless. There is something wrong with any executive who lays claim to autocratic power and who asserts that he alone has a say in shaping the foreign relations of the nation. This is a new reading of the Constitution, and President Wilson's interpretation of that venerable document accounts for his arbitrary administration ever since the signing of the armistice.

The Constitution says that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall make treaties declare war and appoint ambassadors. Mr. Wilson now says that he alone has the right to deal with the Mexican question, to make peace or war as he deems advisable and warns the Senate to keep off. No absolute monarch in Europe could go further than that, and the question is whether or not the American people will stand for such executive arrogance.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

WHY, INDEED?

(Hamilton Herald.)

In northern Alberta and the Peace River country are hundreds of thousands of acres rich in oil, and emissaries of oil companies are preparing expeditions into the norehtrn wilds to prospect for oil and stake claims. Why should not this great store of natural wealth be reserved by the national government for the nation?

WHO ARE THE MIDDLE CLASS?

(Toronto World.)

It is a little risky to ask who are the Candaian middle class, even when the Middle Classes' Union in England is growing like Jona's gourd. If there is a middle class, there must be an upper class and a lower class. When our knighthood was still in unblighted flower there may have been a certain pride to the first distinction. But who among us will accept the inferior designation? The manual workers? The Canadian manual workers include the Canadian land-owners. It was from land-owning that aristocracy came.

It is impossible to establish class and class distinctions in Canada as they have existed in Europe, much as a small minority which thinks that flunkeyism is ordained of God would like to do it.

Would Christ Preach Sensational Sermon?

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

That if Jesus Christ were occupying a pulpit in a church today He would probably be accused of preaching sensational sermons, was an opinion expressed from a local pulpit on Sunday. It is quite possible; perhaps even probable. When He was on earth He was not in very high favor with the preachers of the time. They regarded Him as very unorthodox, and the truly good people, or those who thought themselves truly good, looked upon Him as scarcely respectable. Did He not go out among the publicans and sinners, making friends of them and winning them back by gentle sympathy to paths of rectitude and virtue? Did He not offend the Lord's Day Alliance of the time by His attitude towards the Sabbath? Did He not scandalize the prohibition associations by His personal habits, so that they denounced Him as a winebibber? And when they brought to Him a woman caught in her sin, instead of making the incident a text for a thundering sermon, did He not confound her accusers and bid the woman to go and sin no more?

What Jesus Christ would do if He were on earth today is a subject in regard to which one is not justified in generalizing too freely; nobody knows what He would do, but, judging from what He did and said while on earth, one might regard it as probable that He would be accused of sensationalism, and that the chorus of accusation would be led by some of those who today profess to be in an especial manner His followers! His attitude towards religion and morality, the orthodox people, while He was on earth, found it hard to understand. Some of them would probably find it hard to understand today. He would probably not be much of a success in a fashionable church today. He declared that His mission was to save sinners—not to denounce sinners, mind you, but to save them. "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners." And He did not stand aloof and issue His call from afar off. He went down among the sinners, eating and drinking with them. He did not even draw the line at fallen women. He did not regard all women who had sinned as bad women. He knew the human heart and He saw the possibilities that might lie in the heart of even a woman of the streets. He had no sympathy with the theory that a woman who had sinned was lost and should be debarred from the chance of re-establishing herself. It was, indeed, an evidence of His Divine power of discernment that He seemed to look upon the woman who had known what it was to repent in humility, in consequence of her sin, as nearer ot His kingdom than the self-righteous woman who had never fallen, because she had never been called upon to struggle with the temptation. He gave great scandal to very respectable people of His day by His attitude towards sinners of all kinds, and notably women sinners. Some of His utterances in this connection were no doubt regarded as sensational by the ministerial associations of those days, and would probably be regarded as sensation by many church-going people today. Did He not tell the orthodox leaders to their faces that publicans and harlots would go into the Kingdom of God before they would? And was not that sensational enough?

Yes, if Jesus Christ were on earth today he would probably be accused of sensational preaching.

AMERICAN SCIENTISTS BELIEVE IN TRANSMUTATION OF BASER METALS

Reported Discovery by Sir Ernest Rutherford Finds Disciples in United States

New York, Dec. 11.— The report which reached here, from Europe, that Sir Ernest Rutherford, Langworthy professor and director of physical laboratories at the University of Manchester, England, had solved the riddle of the transmutation of matter, the secret sought by the ancient alchemists, has caused widespread comment among local scientists.

According to a consensus of the professors of physics and radio activities at Columbia University, the statement, if made by Sir Ernest, is undoubtedly true. They agree that Sir Ernest is one of the foremost scientists in the world and that such a discovery is entirely within the realm of possibility considering that Sir Ernest has devoted much attention in recent years to the phenomena of radio-activity, and also to the fact that it was he who first put forth the disintegration theory of radio-activity.

Professor George B. Pegram, head of the department of physics at Columbia, when questioned concerning the tranmutation puzzle cautioned against taking too literally the idea of being solely a change from one kind of metal to another, as from the base metals to gold or silver. A twenty-five cent piece is not likely, he said, because of the new process to transform itself into a twenty dollar gold piece.

"The discovery," continued Professor Pegram, "means a world of difference in scientific research. By the aid of radium it means that science has learned to retard or accelerate the disintegration of different elements at will.

Walter I. Slitcher, professor of Electrical Engineering at Columbia, did not seem to be greatly surprised by the report.

"The principles of the transmutation of matter," said Professor Slitcher, "have been known for twenty years or so, and were first propounded by Sir Ernest Rutherford. All scientists have known of the principles under control. If the controlling of the principles has been what Sir Ernest has discovered then it means a great deal to scientific research."

If the reports of the new discovery are true, people will not become wealthy overnight devoting their time to the making of gold, said Harold T. Beans, assistant professor of analytical chemistry at the university.

"The transmutation of matter," said Professor Beans, "is entirely possible and scientists have long looked for the controlling of the principles which we knew naturally governed it. However, the transmutation from one mental to another would entail energy that might better be expended in some other direction. Besides there are only a few of the eighty or more metals which would be affected by this discovery. It does not mean that iron could suddenly be turned into gold."

Professors Smith and Morgan, of the Department of Chemistry, also expressed great interest in the discovery.

Mainly About People

A Cleveland, Ohio, woman spent an hour the other day in testing the honesty of some of her fellow-citizens. She carried four parcels of different sizes, and went out into a busy street. "Did you drop this?" asked of several passersby.

The first to be tested was a rather shabbily dresed woman with several parcels already.

"I certainly did," she replied, and hurled away with the package which contained nothing but cardboard.

A man and awoman walking together took the second package, looked at it doubtfully and returned it.

A prosperous business man and a down-at-the-heels specimen both said the third parcel was not theirs.

The third man fell. Scarcely glancing at it, he stuffed it into his overcoat pocket, lifted his hat, said "Thank you, miss," and passed on.

The fourth package was small, such as might have come from a jewellery store. An elderly woman spoke cordial thanks, but said it was not hers. A man gave a gruff answer without looking at it. Two women said that probably a little girl who had just passed had dropped it. Walking alongside a man, the experimenter, dropped the little box to the sidewalk. From the corner of her eye she saw the man stoop, pick up the package and shove it into his pocket. She crossed the street, still a little ahead of him, and stood on the corner as though waiting for a car. The man passed her and made no effort to return the parcel.

All told the tests had occupied less than an hour. Four people out of ten had taken something that did not belong to them. Why had they done it? Surprise because of the unexpectedness of the question, curiosity to know what the package contained, or deliberate dishonesty? The question remains unanswered.

EDITOR'S MAIL

REPLY TO MR. GREENE

Editor Review.—When Mr. J. M. Greene, whote to you protesting against the high cost of taxes, he must have been in an absent state of mind. He wasn't thinking of our little children or their joy in having a free bit of park land along the river from Hunter street to the C. P. R. tracks.

Mr. Greene writes absent-mindedly just like one of our heavy landed ratepayers, who never give any land for parks, but who sit back and make money out of the town's growth. I can't believe Mr. Greene belongs to that class for he sells music.

Come to think of it, Mr. Greene is a member of that School Board who are fighting a raise in wages to the teachers, but who voted to spend as much money on the site and architecture for a new school, as the aldermen voted for the new bridge. But maybe these things help certain property values. They don't help the people.

Another thing, the "granite" machining of the bridge facing is as much [illegible] than the more beautiful smooth finish that the aldermen voted for it and I have no doubt, this needless cost will sum into—may be as much as the bit of park will cost.

The reasons Mr. Greene gives in opposing this new park are the very reasons why we should now grab it. If we don't get it now we never will for it will surely go to some industry or railroad or brewery that will profit the few, just as our water powers and water powers have gone in the past.

I am, for the many, not the few.

"PLAYFAIR"

AUTUMN IN ONTARIO

(By L. E. Calder.)

O, I love to think of Autumn
On the old Laurentian Hills!
How the heavens smile with gladness
'Till man's heart in rapture thrills,
And his soul exults in beauty
'Till it seems to soar and grow
Nearer to his Maker's image
Set in Eden long ago.

O, I love to think of Autumn
Where Ontario's lakelets lie
Like fair gems from heaven's storehouse
Far beyond the azure sky,
Where a holy rest seems brooding
Over forest, vale and hill
And the purple haze creeps upward
Through the air so clear and still.

O, those dreary days of Autumn
By Ontario's sparkling rills!
How the brush of Nature's Artist
Paints the maples on the hills.
How those hours of fleeting splendor
'Mid the scenes I love so well
Resurrect the days of childhood
With their evanescent spell.

Once again I roam in memory
With the friends beloved of yore,—
Ah, how many now are dwelling
Where the glory fades no more!
Where no winter follows summer,
Where no clouds obscure the sun,
Where the Hopes of Life gain substance
Now their earthly days are done.

Yes, I love to think of Autumn
'Mid Ontario's scenes so blest,—
May the Heavens smile so kindly
When Life's sun sinks in the west.
May the chill of night merge gently
Into Canaan's endless day,
While Ontario's hills of Autumn
Blend with fields of Heaven's May.

A STORE THAT FOUND WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTED

Offering the people the goods they wanted at the prices they thought they ought to pay was the idea back of the "Sale the Public Demanded" conducted at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., by the MacWilliams store.

A ten days, advertising campaign was conducted in the dailies of the Wyoming valley to learn what to put on sale and what people thought they ought to pay for it. Every advertisement urged the public to make known its wants and to state the price at which the articles should sell. A coupon was carried in each advertisement and the people were asked to fill this out and send it into the store. At the same time, personal letters with postal cards were sent to the fall mailing list, as the event was not a cash-customer proposition, but was thrown open to any one who wished to take advantage of the innovation.

Responses came in by the many thousands and almost all the patrons asked for staple goods. Only one fur coat was sugested out of the many cards sent back and coupons filed. This woman thought she ought to get it for $75. What the public did want was staples, mostly in the household equipment or garment line. The principal call was for ready-to-wear garments and was so great and insistent that the store featured this section above all others. Next came the demands for bed linen, pillow cases, blankets and sheets.

According to Manager Logan the oddest feature of the sale was the timidity displayed by the patrons of the store concerning prices. Women were not hesitant about asking for what they wanted, but as a rule they did not state the price they felt like paying, evidently fearing to make themselves ridiculous if they came out pointblank and set the cost of the articles suggested by them in their responses.

The sale lasted only one day, but that was enough to clean out the piles of merchandise and the racks of garments. One hundred extra clerks had been hired for the day, but this auxiliary force was not enough to handle the business attracted by the advertising.

Manager Logan says the sale was a success financially and was interesting also from a psychological standpoint. It brought the store before the public in a novel way and also resulted in the creation of valuable good feeling. The people showed their confidence in the advertising of the firm and this in itself was flattering, as well as indicating the value of publicity carried on with such continuity that the patrons of the MacWilliams establishment believed what they saw about the sale and came to take advantage of the bargains.

DEALERS CAPATILIZE INCOME TAX RULINGS

Several of the New York stores dealing in high-class or luxury goods are featuring in their advertisements the recent ruling of the Treasury Department allowing deduction of luxury taxes from taxable income.

One big Fifth Avenue shop devoted large space in the daily newspapers in featuring this ruling, making its announcement to customers in the following language:

> The silver lining of relief in the cloud of taxation is that your luxury taxes are deductible. You are no longer to be taxed twice. Whether you buy negligees, lingerie, underwear, bath robes, hosiery, millinery, waists or shoes for women, or underwear, hosiery, shoes, bath robes or neckwear for men, or any of a thousand other taxable articles, the tax is deductible.
>
> The government says you may allow for such taxes in your income return, according to the classification under which you are assessed. Thus you need no longer hesitate about buying taxable commodities, for the government has recognized and removed the objectionable features of such taxation.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS SELL HIGH-GRADE GOODS

The Vadney department store, of Chico, Cal., has instituted a monthly payment plan which is proving most popular. Not only does it move more goods, but customers are buying a higher grade of goods than formerly.

The scheme is very simple. Mr. Vadney goes down to San Francisco to a wholesale house, pays cash for 100 electric irons, 5 vacuum cleaners and 50 cut-glass water pitchers. He discounts all bills at 3 per cent and this cash discount enables him to virtually loan money out to customers on a six-month payment plan.

Mrs. Customer comes in to buy a $20 or a $25 set of porcelain dishes, expecting to pay cash. The salesman compares (and contrasts) the cheap porcelain with a delicate pattern in real china at $75 and explains that by paying down 20 per cent. of the purchase price the remainder may be divided into six monthly instalments. He then quietly awaits her decision.

The woman never thinks of the purchase price as $75, but thinks of it in terms of "so much per month" and she is naturally eager to take advantage of the opportunity to own china exactly what her own good taste approves, but which was out of the question under the old cash plan; so he buys the $75 china and goes home happy.

Other things being equal, a customer would much prefer to buy an article which he could see and examine rather than one selected from a picture. If the article should prove defective the home merchant is easier to reach than the city merchant. The monthly payment plan is proving worth while in western towns.

BANK GETS 2,500 ACCOUNTS IN YEAR

Through the use of "human interest" advertisements, backed up by direct mail publicity, the St. Joseph Valley Bank, of Elkhart, Ind., has increased the number of its depositors from 4,500 to 7,000 in less than one year.

A considerable amount of this business came through the use of small savings banks, offered for use in the home and advertised in the local newspapers, and another plan which proved quite successful was the acceptance of Liberty bonds at their face value in exchange for three-year four per cent. certificates of deposit. This, of course, cost the bank the difference between the interest rate on the bonds and the four per cent., but the business which ensued was worth many times this sum.

At the St. Joseph Valley Bank all the heads work toward the one end—the building of more business. Each has a special pad on which he writes "tips" for the other departments, and in this manner the bank is constantly extending the departmental service as well as adding new depositors who wish to use only one branch of the organization.

A PROFITABLE "XMAS PRESENT CLUB"

Dave Schonoover, of Elmira, N.Y., engaged in the jewelry business, took a leaf from the Christmas savings clubs of the banks and is running a Christmas present club.

He has allowed customers to pick their presents this fall, and then he accepts payments every week. By the time Christmas comes the gifts will be paid in full.

He finds that the advertising of the club paid him well, because he could cut out his stock and know it would leave his shelves with no credits at Christmas. The featuring of the choice of gifts open to the early shopper also pulled trade heavily.

SOMETHING ABOUT MILK

Mysteries and Marvels in Its Production and Life.

How Milk Is Secreted—Thunder Does Not Sour Milk, But Bacteria Does the Business—Agalactia, or Absence of Milk, Occurs More Frequently With Cows Than In the Females of Other Live Stock.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

A CONDITION known as "agalactia," or absence of milk in the mammae at the time of parturition, probably occurs more frequently in cows than in females of other classes of stock. It may occur in a female in any condition as regards general health, general care and surroundings. The causes, or conditions to which it is due, are not well understood. It occurs even though pregnancy has been apparently normal and has [illegible] probably more frequently seen in females which have not bred for a long time, or in those which have produced their first young, though themselves aged. While it may occur in an animal under any conditions, there are conditions that appear to predispose an animal to the trouble. In such cases there appears to be a want of development in the lacteal apparatus, which may have been caused by previous or present chronic disease of the udder, a chronic lessening in bulk, called "atrophy" of the udder, exhaustion following disease, severe labor, insufficient food, either during or immediately after pregnancy, natural debility, emaciation, etc.

The mammae is usually small and soft, and attempts to milk produce only a few drops of a yellowish fluid, in some cases followed by a few drops of a whitish, watery fluid. Treatment is frequently unsuccessful. It consists in feeding liberally on easily digested milk-producing food, massaging the udder frequently and stripping the teats three or four times daily. Great attention should be paid to the digestive organs in order to keep them as normal as possible, and the patient should be kept so that she will take considerable exercise. The writer's experience has been that the administration of drugs is non-effective.

In many cases the gland becomes perfectly inactive, and remains so until after the next parturition, when, in most cases, it becomes normal. J. H. R. O. A. College, Guelph.

How Milk is Secreted.

No one knows exactly how the cow secretes milk. Various theories have been put forth explaining the process, but none of these are entirely satisfactory. About all we know is that milk is a true secretion of the mammary glands located in what is known as the udder, more commonly called the "bag" of the cow. It is made from blood.

In order that the cow may have plenty of blood, out of which she may manufacture milk, she must be in a healthy condition, be supplied with plenty of pure air, and water, and have an abundance of the right kind of feed.

Some cows are unable to make milk abundantly even though the owner does all he can be expected to do for his cows. In these cases, it is the fault of the cows—they have not the power within themselves of making milk from their feed. They seem to change their feed into blood which is used as a basis for manufacturing beef, instead of milk. In addition, there are cows which apparently do little or nothing with their feed—they neither give milk in paying quantity, nor do they become fat. These are classed as "boarder" cows, and are very unprofitable for a farmer to keep.

The only way to know for certain whether or not a cow is able to secrete milk in paying quantity, is to weigh the milk from each cow for at least three days in each month. Also test the milk for fat at least twice during each lactation period. In this way, the owner may select the good from the poor cows, and thus build up a profitable herd for dairy purposes. Prof. H. H. Dean, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Famous Caves Change Owners.

The Tillywhim caves and the Great Globe at Swanage were offered by auction at Bournemouth, England, but failed to find a purchaser, although the Great Globe and Durleston Head Castle were knocked down for $10,000. The Durleston Park estate, on which these landmarks are situated, had previously been offered as a whole, but had failed to find a purchaser.

PROBLEMS SOLVED BY ANTS.

The insects have solved many problems that still vex the human race, writes Edward Step, F.L.S., the famous naturalist, in Tit-Bits.

In the ant hill we find an example of pure democracy. It may consist of many thousands of individuals without a monarch or leader of any sort; without a Government. Each ant does exactly what it pleases, without either instructions or permission to do it. But what it does is just what is best for the entire community. There is no self-seeking, no profiteering. Each one does what needs to be done when it needs doing, the welfare of all being the impelling motive.

A score, or a hundred, or a thousand workers are engaged on some big piece of work. A worker ant comes in from a foraging expedition. "Here, Polly," she says, to one of the miners or masons, "let me take a turn at that while you rest awhile." The resting one ask for food, and the newcomer at once shares what she has gathered on her journey. Some others come along and notice that the resting worker has become soiled with labor. They immediately set to work to clean and refresh her by washing and brushing. Nobody tells or asks them to do it; they merely see that it requires doing, and at once set about their self-imposed task.

During some extensive mining operations a stone is dislodged from the roof and falls upon a worker, injuring her so that she can scarcely crawl. Several rush to her aid, and bear her away to a quieter gallery, where her hurts may be properly tended.

Ants are full of resource to meet extraordinary situations, and they have invented so many ways of getting a living that, in the course of time, they have branched off into more than 2,000 different species, each with distinct form and habits.

So important are they in the scheme of nature that they have brought about numerous modifications of plant life: many flowers have had to invent hair fences to prevent the ants from stealing nectar intended as a bribe for the pollen-carrying bees; other plants have produced glands, from which a sweet liquid flows, to induce the ants to patrol their leaves and stems and destroy caterpillars and other nuisances.

They have also set up alliances with various small creatures for mutual benefit. Some, like the green-fly, supply them with sweet food (all ants have a "sweet tooth"); others, like certain beetles, become their domestic pets; others are scavengers, encouraged or tolerated in their nests because of their usefulness from a sanitary point of view.

Their industry in construction shows a considerable amount of varied ingenuity. Some are miners in the earth, and tunnel wonderful galleries of great extent, whilst others tunnel in wood. Some construct papier-mache nests on the boughs of trees and pens for their domestic insects, whilst some, instead of laboring in these ways, frankly avail themselves of the provision made for them by plants.

There are ants that store grain; ants that grow mushrooms, and prepare suitable beds for their growth; ants that keep dairies; ants that are mere nomad freebooters, sallying forth in their thousands, and killing and eating all other insects in their path, possessing no city of their own, but camping temporarily where their march of pillage and conquest has brought them.

When Brides Must Weep.

The wedding day in most countries is the bride's day, says Tit-Bits. It is her part to look happy, however long a face the groom may pull. Only in Lithuania is it a day of ostentatious gloom for her when, after being led through the lighted church by two young men, followed by her bridesmaids, she takes her stand in front of the altar, to be joined by the groom, also accompanied by several young men.

Behind the wedding party come the two mothers. While the priest performs the ceremony, the bride must weep incessantly. If she is unable to hide her real jubilation and cannot squeeze out a tear, she is considered guilty of a serious breach of etiquette and the ceremony is rendered more interesting by a vigorous scolding administered by the two mothers. Thus the maiden is expected to show the boon she is conferring upon mere man by becoming his wife.

This same attitude towards the Lithuanian woman is proved by all the customs of the little Baltic state that has declared itself a republic. It is shown, for instance, in old photographs. In these the woman is not standing with her hands on the shoulder of her seated lord, like our own photographs of a former period, but throned in state, with her husband and sons standing gallantly beside her.

Watches Invented by Frenchman.

At Nuremberg there is a statue to Peter Henlein, who is credited there with being the inventor of the watch. But Leopold Reverchon shows in La Nature that, after all, Henlein invented nothing but the ring by which a watch is held to a chain, for clocks with springs and stackfreed had already been made for nearly a century, and all he had to do was to make them smaller.

Henlein was born in 1480 and became a master locksmith in 1509. Now in 1504 Julien Coudray of Blois, France, was already a master watchmaker of the best class, as is proved by an order on the earliest of Louis XII to pay 19 livres and 4 sous to ... "watchmaker to the King." And in 1518 he made a watch for Francis I so small that it was inserted in the pommel of the King's dagger. It is therefore more probable that Coudray was making watches before Henlein.

Coleman Bannister confessed to the Moncton police that he took part in a raid on C. P. Munro's ranch when fox skins valued at $8,000 were stolen.

His first Shave

HIS shaving troubles are solved for him before he commences his shaving "career," because he has had an AutoStrop Safety Razor placed in his hands. Not only will he not cut his face, but he will have a razor that will not pull. He will have the razor that sharpens itself. Sharp blades mean smooth shaving!

This will be his morning habit: He will take from his shaving kit a little silver-plated instrument that looks like an ordinary safety razor. He will slip the strop through the razor itself, run the razor up and down the strop a few times, pull it off and the razor is then ready to shave with an edge sharpened with mechanical precision. After shaving he will do the same thing, putting his razor away with the edge free from dampness. He takes nothing apart for stropping or cleaning. He throws no dull blades away, because he hasn't any. He finds it not only cheaper, but also easier, to strop his AutoStrop Safety Razor, than to put a new blade in any other safety razor.

See the AutoStrop Razor assortment at any store where razors are sold. You will find a style to suit your desire. Prices $5.00 and upwards.

UNITED FARMERS OF ONTARIO TO MEET IN CONVENTION IN TORONTO NEXT WEEK

Both the Political and Commercial Interests of the Organization Will Be Considered by the Delegates.

When the United Farmers meet at Massey Hall, Toronto, next week for their sixth annual convention both the affairs of the political organization and the co-operative trading company will be reviewed, and many new proposals made and settled. Many hundreds of farmers are expected, besides the regular attested delegates from the thousand or more branch organizations throughout the Province. All the speakers will be exclusively from the United Farmers themselves. Attendance at the Massey Hall will be by ticket till a few minutes before the meetings begin, when the general public will be allowed to occupy whatever seats are left. It is expected by Secretary J. J. Morrison that Premier Drury and the Cabinet will be present at all the sessions. Hon. T. A. Crerar and many Western Farmers will also be on hand.

The principal question for the political organization to decide will be whether the "Farmers' Sun," the official organ of the U.F.O., will remain a weekly or be changed into a bi-weekly or a daily. The indications from many quarters are that the bi-weekly form will be adopted.

Public May Share in Business.

Radical changes are expected to be inaugurated in the co-operative side of the organization. A proposal to widen the co-operative movement, in order to give the general public an opportunity to share in the business and even the profits of U.F.O. stores will be proposed by Mr. T. F. Loblaw and J. J. Morrison. The second question will be about the advisability of separating the live stock commission business from the co-operative trading business, but only for the purpose of knowing definitely which business is making the profits and which is not.

"The press has a mistaken notion of this proposed separation," said Mr Morrison. "The dividend shareholders will still share in all the business." The idea of the business executive is to concentrate the business of all the stores more than ever in the administrative offices at Toronto in an endeavor to make every branch pay for itself. So far, it is true, the Live Stock Commission Department has been carrying the other business, although this year the stores have all been doing splendidly Mr. Loblaw states. A seven per cent dividend is to be paid proportionately to the value of the shares held. The $14,000 deficit in March, when the U.F.O. store started at 130 King street east, has been steadily reduced. The profit of Live Stock Commission for the year has been $23,000, and the total net profit of the whole business $18,000.

There are three departments of the U.F.O. co-operative business. These are the Live Stock Commission business, with the stock yards at West Toronto the co-operative trading department, which deals principally in car loads, which are distributed over the Province to the farmers who club together to share in the commodities, and, finally, the separate stores. There are eight of these situated at Kingston, Smith's Falls Seaforth, Cobourg, Fenelon Falls Warren, and Aultsville. All of these are really branches of the head Toronto store, situated at 130 King street east, which, in reality, is a wholesale store, supplying principally big boarding houses and restaurants. A new branch store is also being opened at Peterboro. The plan that Mr. Loblaw suggests is to keep the Toronto store as a centre for restaurants and big business, and open two branches for the small shoppers of Toronto, one in the east and one in the west of the city.

Two Kinds of Shareholders.

There are two kinds of shareholders recognized by the farmers. The regular shareholders pays $10. This entitles him to no dividend. He simply share in the profits on his purchases. The other shareholders hold special profit-sharing certificates. These shares sell for 25 dollars each, and permit their owners to share in the 7 per cent. dividend, proportionally to the amount they hold. So far there are about 6,000 of these in the Province. "Our letters patent allow us to pay no more than a 7 per cent. dividend," said Mr. Morrison. The new proposal is simply to permit the general public to share in the profits on his purchases, and the regular shareholder to share in the surplus dividend after the company certificate-holders have received 7 per cent.

GREAT WHITE WAY IS GLOOMY CANYON

BROADWAY IN DARKNESS BY ORDER RESTRICTING USE OF COAL

THEATRE MANAGERS CLOSE DOWN

FAMOUS ELECTRIC SIGNS FAMILIAR TO PUBLIC NO LONGER SEEN

New York, Dec. 11.—The Great White Way was in almost total eclipse last night for the first time since the lightless and fuelless wartime days of more than one year ago. Broadway has not been so dark since 1918.

By concerted action and in compliance with the orders of the Federal Fuel Administration, all the famous advertising electric light signs had snuffed out their glories and they scintillated not. The theatres also, as a result of a meeting held in the noon hour by representatives of all theatrical interests of the city, determined that in the matter of heating and illumination they would immediately revert to all the restriction of the most tense war period. In consequence, even during the one hour between half past seven and half-past eight o'clock, when they have been permitted heretofore to flash, all the exterior electric light signs at the entrance of the theatres were put out of comission, and they will so continue until further orders.

Famous Signs Not Seen

Some of the most famous Broadway beacons that showed only stygian darkness last night where many colored radiance has been flaunted every night for more than a year were the block long sign stop of the Putnam Building, extending from Forty-third to Forty-second streets, advertising a brand of chewing gum; the great constellation of the Palais Royal restaurant between Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth streets; those of Churchill's and the Cafe de Paris, on opposite sides of Broadway, between Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth and the huge Bull Durham display one block to the northward.

Persons who had been accustomed to glance at the electrically lighted clock, forming a feature of the mighty sign advertising underwear, which stretched, fifty by seventy-five feet in area, across the front of the Pekin restaurant, found it invisible and had to consult their wrist watches just as they would have done by daylight. The agile kittens at Forty-second street no longer sported with their spools of thread, and there was nothing but chaos weher usually glowed the seventy-five feet of brilliance of the Wyllis-Overland Company, between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets.

Some of the electric light displays at hotel entrances remained undimmed on the plea that they were necessary for convenience and safety. Many of the smaller advertising signs in front of retail stores also helped to dispel the unwonted gloom until about eleven o'clock, when these, too, were doused, making the great thoroughfare so abysmally dark that thousands flocking out from the theatres into the drizzle and fog could hardly tell whether they were in New York or London.

WHOLE FAMILY IS REJOICING

CLARE SAYS TANLAC HELPED HIM MORE THAN ANYTHING HE EVER TOOK IN HIS LIFE.

"I honestly believe I would be flat on my back in bed today, unable to do a bit of work if it hadn't been for Tanlac," said Jesse Clare, living at 439 St. John's Road, West Toronto, Ont.

"I suffered from stomach trouble and a general run down condition for two years," he continued, "my food soured on my stomach and formed gas that bloated me up so I could hardly get my breath. I would get so dizzy at times that I was in danger of falling down in the street. I did not rest well and in the morning I could hardly drag myself out of bed and go to work. My head ached all the time and I was blue and melancholy and found little pleasure in life.

"I thought I was going to have a breakdown when one day I was too sick to work. My wife sent for a bottle of Tanlac and I was down in bed when I started taking it. Before the end of the week I was up again and at work, and I haven't had a touch of that tired, run out feeling since. My appetite is fine, my food agrees with me, gas has stopped forming and those dizzy spells have disappeared and I am as sound as a dollar. I get up in the mornings full of life and energy and my whole family is rejoicing over the great change Tanlac has made in me, and I can truthfully say nothing I ever took in my whole life before ever did me as much good as Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

BRITISH ASKING FOR AID TO SAVE EUROPE

SAY COLLECTIVE EFFORT IS NEEDED TO AVERT WORLD WIDE DISASTER.

London, Dec. 11.—Sir George Paish editor of the London Statist and well known financial authority, writes in the London Globe appealing urgently for American commercial and financial co-operation with Europe.

"It is becoming clearly evident," he says, "that unless the entire problem is soon dealt with in all its aspects a complete breakdown of credit, of exchange of commerce and of trade must occur in the not distant future."

The collective effort required to avert disaster, he asserts, is the greatest the world has ever been called upon to make. "The people of Europe," he writes, "cannot support themselves wtihout the continued grant of credit for the purchase of urgently needed food and raw materials."

Referring to Secretary of the Treasury Glass's statement that the problem of financing the restoration of Europe belongs primarily to American exporters, the writer says that this is much too big for the American exporters to deal with; they cannot go beyond the limits of their own credits, which are already nearly reached.

Sif George holds that the protective tariff is primarily responsible for Europe's inability to pay America for American goods. Those laws, he points out, are designed to keep out foreign goods, and only by selling goods to America can Europe pay for American goods.

"Although the question of the American tariff and American policy is one for the American people alone," he continues, "the claims of humanity demand that America in one way or another, by banking credit, by private loans or by Government loans, should supply Europe with the food and material she needs in this great emergency."

The Globe says the question will be raised in the House of Commons why the United States has not been asked to accept in payment for Great Britain's debt an equivalent amount of securities of the Allies which Great Britain holds.

"This plan," says the Globe, "would materially rectify the average exchange, improve British credit and reduce the cost of living."

WHAT IS BOLSHEVISM?

Editor Review: The minds of the people are turned anxiously toward Bolshevism. "What is this dreadful spectre of Bolshevism?" the people ask. It stops at no horrors to gain its ends from murder to the abolition of marriage. The answer is that it is not common murder and common robbery. It is something deeper and more revolutionary and lasting than crime.

To understand it we must go back to the question of fundamentals. Certain things are taken for granted as the basis from which we start in religion, science, art, philosophy, etc. For example, we must have a free mind to begin with. Then we must be sincere. Then we take it for granted that matter is real and forces correlative. In philosophy, to give a further illustration we grant that virtue is desirable, that truth (not mere fact) is good for its own sake. It would be easy to multiply instances. Bolshevism rejects these fundamental principles. It asserts that the world has been tied up to this sort of thing long enough, that liberty is what the majority or the party of most force says it is, that no man can appeal to his rights that such rights no longer exist.

In a word Bolshevism proposes to abolish evil in its own way without regard to any scruples. It is the rule of the will of the strongest party unfettered by any principles.

Prohibition scoffs at regulation. It seeks to correct an evil by the total disregard of all fundamental principles. It is useless to plead that the man who does not interfere with others has any right on that account to do as he sees fit. It ignores him. It is pure Bolshevism. Bolshevism is triumphant, not only in Europe, but in America. Science, of course, cannot be affected by it but religion, morals, philosophy, liberty and individualism are swept away by it. The end justifies the means. It is no longer necessary to show that what is being done is right. It is only necessary to force it through. Many abuses are being swept away but just as a flood cleans up it also destroys. Force has succeeded right. One man formerly could hold up a hundred by showing that his contention was founded upon some great fundamental principle. Nowadays he is laughed at.

When the full meaning and effect of this triumph of force is understood and felt there will be a realization of the disastrous results of the theory, but it will be too late. The principle of prohibition is not confused to alcohol which, strangely enough, is about to become the universal source of energy succeeding coal, gasoline, oil and all the other derivatives. There will be a hundred distilleries for every one now in existence. Alcohol is alcohol. It may be made palatable or unfit to drink and fit only for the purposes of energy. But it is the alcohol which the prohibitionists would obliterate. But if abolition is applicable to one article that may be misused, it is applicable to all and to all possible causes of evil. It is wrong and absurd. It is not according to the divine plan, no doubt, because it is impossible. Yet we persist. We refuse to discuss. In these days we just will do it. We are Bolshevists.

UP-TO-DATE FURNISHINGS FOR THE HOME

(By Prudence Bradish.)

A witty man who used to come to our house would exclaim, when he dropped something:

"There. If it hadn't been for the floor that would have gone right through to the cellar!"

Many people treat their floors as if their only purpose was to walk on and keep the furniture from falling through. They fuss over the furniture and pictures but take the floors—and the ceiling too— for granted. Yet the floor is as much a part of the decorative material of the room as anything else and serves to make or break the general effect as much as pictures or lamps, or even the vase of flowers or autumn leaves on the mantel or bookcase. If you doubt this look at almost any room where the general tone of the floor coloring is lighter than that of the walls. The topsy-turvey effect has almost as disturbing an influence upon the nerves as would walking upon the ceiling.

Maybe you will think of having the floors darkened with paint or stain. This is rather complicated if the surfaces are already varnished, but it can be done; consult a painter about it. In an old-fashioned house, with wide boarded floors upon which the feet of generations have trod, you will not want to use rugs—at least not many—for these floors will furnish a part of the old atmosphere that has, alas! so much disappeared in these days of hurry and bustle. But you can conserve this with suitable paint and a large oval braided rug in the centre of one or two old-fashioned hand woven rag rugs. These fit the atmosphere of the old house and go well with wide old boards.

The subject of rugs is fascinating (at this time of year you can think of fine rugs as Christmas presents, even if you can't afford to do anything but think about them!) and as wide as the parts of the world from which they come. In normal conditions of commerce and transportation you can get rugs from Persia, China, Turkey or India—if you can afford it— as readily as one used to get Brussels carpets or rag rugs in the days of your grandmother. Indeed, a really beautiful rag rug is as rare now as the oriental one was a long generation ago.

In decorating a room, as I have said, the floor should be, as a whole, darker than the walls. (The walls should be darker than the ceiling. There are other advantages than the mere artistic effect. Light colored rugs show the track of little Johnny's feet on the way in from playing in the slushy street. Once in a while a tea tray will fall upon your floor and if your rug isn't dark you will wish it were.

One way to get your walls lighter than your floor is with well chosen wall paper. The thing is worth while, which ever way you do it, if you care enough about the general effect of your house, not only upon guests but upon your own family; it is more important as a factor in the family happiness than you might believe.

Twenty-five years ago the prevailing custom was to have one solid carpet, tacked down firmly at the edges. The taking up of it was in the nature of a national emergency. The semiannual beating resounded through the neighborhood, and the folks for a block in every direction said: "Ah, the Smith's are housecleaning"—unless they were too busy with an eruption of their own to notice. The entire family was uprooted with the carpet, and father talked of going to board elsewhere.

Fortunately, the large, tacked down carpet, is seldom seen now, unless in low and medium grade boarding houses. In real homes its place has been taken by smaller and more artistic rugs. They are more easily cleaned, but they add importance to the nature and color of the floor that shows around the edges and between them. The perfectly plain velvet rug is being used a great deal for country living rooms and bed rooms where the furniture is covered and the windows curtained with chintz.

For the living room you will want rugs of a dark, restful tone, without large patterns. The large design jumps up in your face; you want to feel the general effect, rather than to see details in it. Do not definitely buy a rug at the store; get the dealer to send it out on approval. It probably will look very different. Keep hunting till you get exactly what you want. The older, "used" oriental rugs are softer than the new ones with fresh and staring colors; but do not get them too old or too thin; they wear out eventually like other things.

There is much swindling in the rug business; find some one whom you can trust and get his advice. There are many good books about rugs; read a little on the subject—about the varieties of make and design. This will add greatly to the interest of the rug when you get it. A little story about this particular rug or that one is a good thing to have on hand when conversation lags.

As for arrangement in the room, avoid the cat-a-corner effect so popular in many homes. It puts the whole room askew. Walking into some living rooms I have had the feeling of walking into a large scale Chinese puzzle. The best arrangement is parallel with the walls, unless there is a diogonal corner closet, in which case you can lay a rug in front of that.

Another word to the wise: If your floor is waxed and slippery, do not put a little shin plaster rug in front of the door. If you do some guest in making the polite adieux certainly will suffer in his diginity— if he doesn't sprain an ankle—or the maid with a full tea tray will come to grief right there.

The modern style in bedrooms is to have but few rugs, yet to have those of the best quality and matching the furniture. Rag rugs are charming in the bedroom and not very expensive, even if you have them made to order in the same color as your painted bedroom set. You can save a great deal of money and have the satisfaction of doing part of the work yourself if you provide your own rags. Hunt up all the old scraps of cloth you have in the house, cut or tear them into strips about an inch and a half or two inches wide and sew them into one long strip, which may be rolled into a ball. The children love to help in this work. Then, hunt up a weaver, tell him how you want the rug made, and in a short time it will be on your bedroom floor. If you don't know of a weaver, the buyer at your favorite department store can probably tell you of one.

Perhaps you and your children can even make an old-fashioned braided rug yourselves.

Never think that the floors are not a part of the decorative scheme of your house. If they are not it is your own fault. Verily, the floor is the groundwork of the room.

METHODIST MEN HOLD BANQUET TO DISCUSS FORWARD MOVEMENT

Large and Representative Gathering in Reid Street Hall Last Night—Inspiring Addresses by G. H. Clark, of Orillia, Rev. Newton Powell, of Toronto, and Others.

"Months ago we planned this: we had looked forward to it with hope and tonight we thank God," said Rev. A. J. Thomas, M.A., B.D., in referring to the banquet of Methodist men in Trinity Church Sunday School Hall in connection with the Methodist National Campaign associated with the Inter-church Forward Movement.

Last night two hundred and sixty men from all parts of the Peterborough district sat down to dinner, each man being requested to get next some one from another place and to get acquainted. The hall was tastefully decorated, white and red predominating, the Women's Missionary Society of Trinity supplying a well-appointed meal.

Dr. J. E. Middleton.

The chairman was Dr. Middleton, who made a hit by declaring that he spends the days in the city and the nights in the country, and as a city man welcomed those from the country and as a country man was glad to be in the city at such a gathering. "I am chairman tonight," he said, "because of the importunity of the district committee." He feels the church has undertaken a big job in this campaign, that greater sacrifices than have been made in the past will be necessary; but such should be made.

Mr. G. H. Clark.

"This is not my first offence," declared Mr. G. H. Clark, of Orillia, referring to his visits here previously. "I am returning good for evil," said he, "for you came to Orillia and took away Rev. F. E. Malott, B.A., B.D., whom we respected and loved."

Mr. Clark came because he loves the Methodist Church, where he found Jesus Christ and which had broken the bread of life to his family. He was thankful to be here as a layman and business man.

A Big Job.

The Methodist Church is aiming at an increase of 100,000 in membership of the church, 100,000 to that of the Sunday School, 50,000 new members of young people's societies, 200,000 enrolled intercessors, 200,000 enrolled personal works, 100,000 Christian stewards, 5,000 volunteers for life service in the ministry, deaconess and other work and at a special peace thankoffering of $4,000,000, besides the current income of the local and connexional funds.

Imperative Challenge.

Never was there a challenge more imperative, and we can measure up to it if we feel our responsibility and privilege. There is a spirit of must from one end of the country to the other, men have differing ideas on many questions, but the only solution is the love of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men and the application of the Golden Rule.

Has the Church Failed?

Some said the church has failed. "I do not think so," said the speaker. "The church measured up better than any other organization during the war. Who broke the news to father and mother when the boy had paid the supreme sacrifice?" It was the pastor. What other organization had so inspired men and women to give for patriotic purposes, and to give themselves in service?

World Problems.

Mr. Clark had seen many nationalities pass through the gates at Winnipeg, and it meant a great responsibility as a church and as a nation. Yet the problem is even greater in regard to world conditions. It means "Christianize the pagan" or "paganize the Christian."

The speaker is a member of the General Mission Board and they had wrestled with the problem and now they must ask for $700,000 for foreign work as against $400,000 for home.

Veterans of the Cross.

In the Methodist itinerant system, ministers are sent to the out-posts of civilization, and, as a business man, the speaker appealed to business and professional men and farmers to discharge the debt we owe to superanuated ministers. One of the tragedies of the itineracy is that the ministers not knowing where they might be sent; and all honor to them and their faithful wives who loyally accept their appointments.

And our colleges and schools must have adequate resources to fit young men and women for a life service.

The leaves of a gnarly beech tree cling tenaciously to the limb, and in spring a mysterious power enters the tree, circulates through it, there is new life, and the deadwood is cast off.

In this Forward Movement of the churches new life is coming, and men and women will do their part of followers of the Nazarene.

[illegible] followed the speaker's concluding sentence. "I ask you men to join hands with me to help the church do its part."

Rev. Newton Powell.

Trinity Church, Toronto, is one of the largest Methodist churches in that city, and Rev. Newton Powell, its pastor, is a forceful personality. His first remark put him in right with Peterborough men. "At Crow's Nest one summer I met a Peterborough citizen and I wondered whether he lived in heaven or in Peterborough," and since that time the speaker had been hopeful of visiting this city. His associate pastor, Rev. F Tovell, D.D., has often mentioned the old days at George Street Church, of which Dr. Tovell had been pastor.

Three Articles.

Mr. Powell declared impressively his three articles of belief, of which the first is that this is the greatest day of opportunity the world has even seen; the second, that this hurls upon the church such a challenge as never before, and lastly, the speaker's great strongfaith in the church of God.

He is sure this national campaign has the divine urge—it is the church's response to the challenge.

Church Must Speak.

It is not thinkable that the church should be silent now. If it doesn't speak now, it must forever hold its peace. Men are listening to other voices, and there are tens of thousands of men who rarely darken a church door who are looking to the church for direction.

We must match the splendid service of our boys overseas. We haven't forgotten the day the 18-year-old lad rose up and went.

The Great War.

Five years ago many were skeptical about prayer. How quickly we learned to pray in the war. Fathers and mothers were driven to their knees.

Mr. Powell told of a soldiers entrusted with an important despatch during battle and as he took it in the midst of danger cried out, "Oh God! I don't care for myself, but help me deliver this despatch." "I ask you," said the speaker, "are you praying as you did during the war?"

The first word of the national campaign calls us to our altars.

Evagenlism.

The second word is evangelism. We had almost forgotten the Methodist altar rail. We had neglected to challenge people at public services on their relationship to God. When war came, how the soldiers shamed us! They spoke in our sanctuaries, appealing for recruits. And now comes the national campaign with the old evangelism of Wesley: "We will challenge every man for Christ."

Stewardship.

Too many had regarded the title as a fad. If a man became extra good he might graduate to become a tither. Our conception of citizenship probably was pride in the British flag and Empire. But we found citizenship was something mightier. The state could say to the housewife: "Use meat only so many times a week; and to the physically strong: "We need you." This national campaign is teaching us we belong to God. In that light we must order the whole life, not simply the tithe.

The Cross.

The cross is to be made central in the market place. Life service is the need and the call. Nearly every home is related to the graves in Flanders and we are learning that "with His stripes are we healed." The greatest part of this campaign is spiritual, and if we get right with God, there will be no trouble about the financial objectives.

Public Interest.

This campaign has passed through the stages of indifference and inquisitiveness to that of interest. Men in Toronto now stop on the street to enquire about how many new members there are in the Sunday School and how many men are being converted. It is easier to lead men to Christ than ever before. It makes big things possible. Not in fifty years have there been such golden opportunities to go out and reach men.

Movement To Go On.

Already co-operating churches were realizing they could not go back to the old separated conditions. They are planning a permanent movement to lead people to greater things. We are following Jesus Christ in this, not some pastor or organizer. "If you haven't got this going in your church, you have parted company with Jesus Christ in my judgment," said Mr. Powell. That five great churches are lined up to do the same thing at the same time is one of the miracles of history. It has been practically decided to duplicate the Victory Loan plan, and the speaker declared he would be disappointed if the Methodist Church did not get $6,000,000 as a special offering through the movement.

"We must pray together, believe together and work together, and God bless you." were the speaker's closing words.

Rev. A. J. Thomas, M.A., B.D.

As chairman of the Peterborough Methodist district, Rev. A. J. Thomas, M.A., B.D., spoke briefly. He has trembled at the immense work to be done and at the responsibility he has. The ladies and the district committee have worked hard, yet the biggest work had been that of men of the circuits. Some men had come twenty-five miles for this, and had spent the day.

AT THE GRAND

The Gallo English Opera Company opened a two-day's engagement at the Grand last night when they presented the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera "The Mikado" to a fair sized audience. The production will rank among the best of its kind ever heard in Peterborough and it is to be regretted that more people did not take advantage of the opportunity of hearing this excellent operatic organization. However, a further opportunity is given in the matinee this afternoon and the evening performance tonight, and no doubt larger audiences will greet the players.

Miss Hana Shimozumi, the Japanese prima donna, was perfect in her part of Yum Yum, a ward of Ko Ko. Her splendid voice was heard to good advantage in the several solos of her part and her graceful manner on the stage soon won the affection of the audience. She is a dainty little actress, her voice is as clear as a bell and her accent does not show any trace of her foreign birth.

Mr. Jefferson De Angelis, in the part of Ko Ko, the lord high executioner, was responsible for most of the comedy situations and his delineation of the character assigned to him was most amusing. He managed to keep the audience in laughter all the time he was on the stage. As an operatic comedian Mr. De Angelis has few equals.

The character of Nanki Poo, the son of the Mikado, was ably handled by Mr. Daniel Denton and his singing of his solos was of an exceptionally high order. Particular mention might be made of his minstrel song.

Mr. Albert Parr in the part of the Mikado was letter perfect, his voice being particularly adapted to the part assigned to him.

The characters of Pitti Sing and Peep Bo, sisters of Yum Yum, were played by Miss Rosamond Whiteside and Miss Mildred Coon, respectively, and were indeed well taken.

The large and well trained chorus of both male and female voices added greatly to the success of the production. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Max Bendix, is also deserving of considerable credit.

This afternoon H. M. S. Pinafore is being played and this evening the "Chimes of Normandy" will be the attraction when a larger house than that of last night is expected to be present.

The management of the Gallo English Opera Company is quite confident that this present revival of the comic operas will be appreciated as the demand for entertainment of this kind is being more keenly felt all the time. And as long as their productions are on the high order of last night's performance it is safe to say that success will attend their efforts.

THE JAPANESE OBJECT TO KISSES

Motion picture producers have learned through bitter experience, in the case of the films they export to Japan, that kisses and embraces are distinctly out of order in the land of Cherry-blossoms. It is said that in the short space of six months the Jap police censors removed 2350 kisses and 353 hugs from American films, allowing only queen Isabella's kiss to Columbus to escape the censorial scissors.

William Russell Productions must have been on their good Japanese behavior when they filmed his newest photoplay, "A Sporting Chance," for there's nary a "clinch," nor even the faintest little peck in the picture, although you do hear wedding bells a-tinkling in the distance during the last few feet of reel five. However, since the gentleman has only met the lady a bare twenty hours previously, and as both of them have been kept mighty busy with a complicated and baffling mystery in the meantime, perhaps it is too much to expect of even so swift-moving and peppy a hero as "Big Bill."

"A Sporting Chance" will be on the screen at The Empire on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Don't miss William Russell, Fritzi Brunette, and the splendid cast of supporting players. It's a picture that keeps you guessing to the final inch of film and winds up with a clever, [illegible] twist that fairly stuns you with surprise.

CHARGE OF THEFT WAS ADJOURNED

IN THE ABSENCE OF A MATERIAL WITNESS CASE WAS LAID OVER

On the application of the Crown-Attorney the trial of the case, King vs. Gould, was adjourned until the June sittings. The Crown stated to the court that one Goldman, a material witness, could not be located. Mr. F. D. Kerr, who appeared for Gould, opposed the adjournment, and asked that the trial proceed, stating his client was willing that the evidence given at the Police Court should be read and used at the trial. Judge Huycke finally directed the case to stand over until June, and with the consent of the Crown, the accused was allowed to go on his own bail without sureties.

MORE WHISKEY MADE UNDER PROHIBITION

AMOUNT DISTILLED LAST YEAR IN EXCESS OF PREVIOUS YEAR'S RECORD

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 11.—That four million proof gallons of spirits were produced in Canada during the fiscal year which closed on March 31, compared with three and a half million proof gallons in the previous year, is the statement made in the annual report of the Inland Revenue Department.

Increase in Revenue.

The revenue of the department for the year exceeded thirty million dollars, as compared with about twenty-seven millions last year. HOME RULE MEASURE AGAIN POSTPONED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 11.—The introduction of the Irish Bill in the Commons was again postponed today. Bonar Law, Government leader announced that in consequence of the visit of Premier Clemenceau, Lloyd George would be unable to bring the measure forward, either Monday or Tuesday and he could not say whether it would be introduced next week.

PERSIA'S YOUNG RULER

HAS HAD SHORT BUT STRENUOUS REIGN.

He Succeeded His Father, Who Was Driven From the Throne on Account of His Misdeeds, and Had to Fight His Parent, Who Tried to Invade the Country.

SULTAN AHMED MIRZA, the Shah-in-Shah, is the great grandson of Nazired-Din, the first famous potentate who used frequently to visit Europe, and who was wont to enjoy himself, in so doing, enormously. The present boy has never been outside his own dominions. Few kings have ever had a more disturbed career than he since his accession to the throne. Born on January 20, 1898, he succeeded his father on July 17, 1909, when the country summarily ejected his parent from the throne for his innumerable misdeeds, which culminated in the turning of his heavy artillery on the Persian Houses of Parliament.

They can stand a great deal in that country, but a policy of this nature overstepped the mark. So the Shah, his father, withdrew into exile, but he did not retire for long; for no sooner had his son come to the throne than he promptly started an invasion of the country, operating himself along the southern part of the Caspian, and, therefore, to the northeast of Teheran. At the same time, Salar-ed-Dowlah, a well-known local leader, started an insurrection in the Tabriz district in the west. After an effort, the son conclusively defeated the father, though it took nearly all the loan of between one and two millions sterling which had just been advanced by the Imperial Bank of Persia for the development of his country.

For five years the boy was under a regency. He was very carefully brought up. Educated in Teheran, mostly by the aid of foreign professors, he speaks French and Russian fluently, and in addition, of course, to his own language has a knowledge of English.

The Shah is a good tennis player, and used frequently to figure on the court at the British Legation at Teheran. On one occasion Sir George Barclay, the then British Minister, obtained some special racquets for him from England. He is a good amateur photographer, is fond of riding, and recently, to encourage open-air sports among his own people, he founded the Imperial Sport Club, placing at its disposal a piece of land in the vicinity of Teheran styled Eyschabad. It is the intention there all other out-of-door pastimes. Fencing is also practiced at the club. As ing is als practiced at the club. As this sporting innovation is decidedly novel in Persia, it is worth while quoting the exact words of the Shah in giving the ground, namely, that it was because "he had at heart the progress of sport and the physical and moral development of his subjects."

In appearance the Shah is of medium height and stout. Possessed of very remarkable intelligence, quick of perception, courteous of demeanor, he is very popular among his own subjects, the more so as he has always acted on strictly constitutional lines. It was unfortunate that the great war broke out immediately after he had succeeded to the throne at the age of 16, for he was crowned on July 21, 1915. As a result, his country was in almost constant confusion. It always suffers from a certain amount of internal effervescence, more especially when economic conditions are bad; but in the great war Persia spent its time in struggling against becoming a pawn, either on the one side or the other. For a long time the enemy seemed to have been carrying it all their own way, but the outspoken action of the Shah—accepting openly and without reservations the offers of good will on the part of Russia and Britain—materially cleared the air. The outlook, consequently, is now good.

Obviously the young ruler has personality. The Foreign Ministers like him, for he has always acted very straightforwardly; they have invariably trusted in what he says.

Much of the success of Persia is due to the ability of its diplomatist abroad, to whom the credit of acting honestly and straightforwardly is admittedly due; but the personality of the Shah is the main factor in the situation created by the new Anglo-Persian treaty. One of the chief authors of the treaty is Prince Nosrat-ed-Dowle, the new Foreign Minister of Persia, a son of Prince Farman-Farma, Governor of the Fars. The Minister is regarded as one of the coming men in Persia. He lived in Paris for a long time, where he took his degree of doctor of law, and he then went to England to study the language, which he speaks quite well. He was first of all Under-secretary to the Ministry of Justice, then Minister of Justice himself in two Cabinets, giving up the post only about two months ago, when he was appointed Foreign Minister. Nosrat-ed-Dowle has never filled any diplomatic post outside his own country except that when he was in Paris he held the rank of the hon. attache to the legation. His younger brother Prince Mohammed-ed-Hussein, is accompanying the Shah on his visit to Europe as aide-de-camp. Prince Mohammed studied in Russia, where under the old Imperial regime he was a member of the Corps des Pages. It might be added that one of the [illegible] of the Foreign Minister is about to enter Harrow School in England.

Artificial Arms and Legs.

Artificial arms and legs were, it is believed, used in Egypt as early as 700 B.C. They were made by the priests, who were the physicians and surgeons of those days in the land of the Nile.

SANTO DOMINGO.

An Island That Now Wants Self-Determination.

In connection with the petition sent to Washington by a group of Spaniards, suggesting that this would be an opportune time for the United States to withdraw its troops from Santo Domingo, the National Geographic Society has issued the following bulletin concerning the island republic:—

"Geographically, the island of Haiti, including within its limits the two republics of Santo Domingo and Haiti, is in the class of the most favored of nations, situated on the Western Continent about midway between its two grand divisions of North and South America and abounding in natural resources," says the bulletin.

"The name Haiti, or 'High Island,' is significant of the character of its topography. 'Sire,' once said a British admiral to his king, George III, when asked about the island, 'Haiti looks like that,' and he crumpled up a piece of paper and placed it upon the table. A brief description though this may be, it well fitted the case. The island is about 400 miles long and 150 miles wide. It is irregular and is intersected by three chains of mountains.

"Historically, Haiti, or Santo Domingo, is the senior of our own country, if we leave out of consideration the legendary reports concerning the visit of the Norsemen to our northern coasts 800 years ago, and we are somewhat indebted to this beautiful island for our own development.

"On St. Nicholas Day (December 6), 1492, Columbus entered a port at the extreme west end of the island of Santo Domingo or, as the whole island was then called by the aborigines, Haiti. The natives themselves called the port Bohio, but Columbus christened it, in honor of the day he was celebrating, Port St. Nicholas, the name still existing as St. Nicholas Mole. This date will ever be memorable in the annals of the Haitiens as marking the beginning of the history of the island.

"Columbus now called the island Hispaniola in honor of the country which had sent him forth to discover it, and it is to be regretted that this name given by the immortal discoverer has been lost, for its present two names are conflicting and confusing.

"Columbus then determined to build a permanent settlement, and after reconnoitering he selected for this purpose a site on an elevated plain near a spacious bay on the north coast of the island. Here was established the first town in the new world, which was dignified by the name of his queen and patron, Isabella.

"But the course of empire was still south, and soon Santo Domingo City became the centre of the colonial activities.

"A little love affair connected with the growth of this city is interesting. One of the Spanish party, Miguel Dias, having got into difficulty with an officer, severely wounding him in combat, fled to escape punishment. Finding shelter in an Indian village and being received with much cordiality and hospitality, he in return gave his heart to the young Caguisse, who was then governing the tribe. His protestations met with favor, and the young Spaniard found himself the consort of a queen of no mean accomplishments. But he soon wearied of his environment and sighed for his old companions. The queen, seeing his discontent and fearing to lose him, gave him the secret of her vast wealth and, loading him with the precious metal, sent him back to the Spaniards to induce them to return with him and settle in her country. Dias delivered this message to Columbus, who immediately ordered an exploration of that part of the island to ascertain the truth of the Spaniard's report.

"The sequel to this little love affair is also interesting, but most pathetic, Zamcaca, after giving her all to her lover, who was thereby promoted to high honors in the colony, being the first alcade of the new city, was so disheartened by the cruel treatment accorded her people that she fled from civilization and affluence to the wilds of the forests, leaving her two children and still faithful husband to mourn her loss, and was never heard from again.

Indian Jewels.

Crossing from China to India, we shall find the people there often loaded with jewelry, writes Frank G. Carpenter, in "How the World is Clothed." That worn by a single girl in the Himalya mountains may weigh many pounds. It is usually of brass, but sometimes of gold and silver. In the valley of the Ganges, there are women who wear metal rings in their noses, and some who have silver bells much like sleigh bells fastened about their toes.

Remembering the Boys.

A friend of mine performed a wedding ceremony for a young couple in our home town, after which the bridegroom took all the money out of his pocket, which was 75 cents, and turned to my friend, the minister, and said: "I will have to keep 50 cents of this to buy cigars for the boys," and handed him the 25 cents for the fee.—Chicago Tribune.

And whose soul have I now? That of a child, or of a young man, or of a feeble woman, or of a tyrant, or of a domestic animal, or of a wild beast? —Marcus Aurelius.

A CITIZEN ARMY.

Universal Military Training in Switzerland.

In connection with the frequent agitation for universal military training in Canada, it is interesting to study the systems of other countries where such service has been tested.

Universal compulsory military service in Switzerland dates from 1874, when the old system of requiring each canton to raise an allotment of three men for every hundred men of its population, was done away with, and the system of requiring every able-bodied man to meet for training was substituted. The system worked with very little trouble or friction from the beginning, and the Swiss people are very proud of their citizen army.

The Swiss boy, at the age of 10, is put into the gymnastic class at school and begins learning the elements of the soldier drill on the schoolhouse playground. Long before he is old enough to be called upon for service he has learned to do the manual exercises and to go through much of the drill that afterward fits him for a soldier.

When a boy reaches 17 years he is liable to service—a liability which continues until he is 50 years of age. Even after that he may be liable, if he is capable of doing any other army work than soldiering, such as acting as baker, veterinary surgeon, or otherwise.

Yet with all of this universal training, the only people in Switzerland who make arms an exclusive profession are the commander-in-chief, selected by the Federal Assembly, and the general staff. These form the brains of the army. The rank and file belong to the cantons.

The Swiss man sacrifices cheerfully a definite amount of his time to preserve his independence as a citizen of a free country.

Entrenched behind his native rocks, the citizen army of Switzerland contains every element of the nation. The man of wealth and the peasant are found shoulder to shoulder. No man is compelled to spend the crucial years of his life away from home in the army, and yet every man is required to contribute his share to that army's maintenance and the nation's safety.

At the age of 20 every able-bodied Swiss youth becomes a member of the Auszug, and every one who lacks the necessary qualifications regrets that he is unable to co-operate with other young defenders of his country. During the first year of liability he must serve 75 days or more, and 11 days for each successive year he is called [illegible]. It is no excuse that he has brothers already in the army, or that he has a widowed mother dependent upon him. The burden of preparedness, spread over a nation, becomes no onerous task for any-one, and the average young man in Switzerland looks upon his time spent in training camps as a pleasurable vacation, profitable to the safety of his country.

Service in the "Auszug," or "Elite," continues until the citizen reaches the age of 32. Thereafter he passes into what is known as the "Landwehr" or First Reserve, where he remains until he has completed his forty-fourth year. He must give in that time nine days of service during each four years that he belongs to the "Landwehr." After he has passed 44 he goes into the "Landsturm," or Second Reserve, where he stays until he is 50, and even beyond that if national necessity calls him.

At the various stages in his career proper exemptions become the lot of the soldier. Those in the employ of the state, railway and steamboat men, hospital officials and others reach their exemption early; preachers, doctors, prison officials, postal and telegraphic officials are exempt; but the man who has to go into the field has the consolation that the man who may stay at home also has his burden to bear, for, in addition to all other taxes, he must pay a special military poll tax of $1.20, a military property tax of 15 cents per $100 (with property under $200 exempted), and a military income tax of 1½ per cent. The total tax thus paid by any one person cannot exceed $600. The assessments are rigorously made and every penny exacted.

Mandeville's Giraffe.

Sir John Mandeville, in his "Travels," gives this description of a giraffe which he calls "Gerfauntz" or "Orafles": "A beast spotted, and that is a little more high than a steed, but he hath a neck twenty cubits long, and he may look over a great high house."

Some People Never Get Tired.

Why Milk Sours.

It is a common impression that thunder sours milk, but this is not so.

The reason that milk sours is that minute plants, known as bacteria, act on the sugar in milk, changing it into lactic or milk acid. One scientist, however, says this explanation is not satisfactory. He regards the souring of milk as a result of feeding on milk sugar by the lactic acid germs, leaving behind them what is known as sour milk.

No matter what the true explanation may be in detail, we believe that souring of milk is caused in some way by "germs" or bacteria which are microscopic plants that fall into milk from the air, and get in from many other places.

Like all plants, they must have air, suitable temperature, and moisture, in order to grow. The common plan of preventing the milk going sour is to cool it to 50 deg. F. as soon as possible after milking and keep it cold until it is used. The reason for this is, the cold makes an unfavorable condition for these plants to grow, hence the milk remains sweet, though sometimes it takes on bad flavors, or develops disease producing germs. In order to prevent this, we "pasteurize" milk in order to kill the germs present, by means of heat. If it is cooled and kept cold after heating, the milk will keep sweet for some time and is free from disease germs. This is known as the safest kind of milk to use. "Safety First" is a good rule when buying milk.—Prof. H. H. Dean, O. A. College, Guelph.

AT THE GRAND

The Gallo English Opera Company opened a two-day's engagement at the Grand last night when they presented the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera "The Mikado" to a fair sized audience. The production will rank among the best of its kind ever heard in Peterborough and it is to be regretted that more people did not take advantage of the opportunity of hearing this excellent operatic organization. However, a further opportunity is given in the matinee this afternoon and the evening performance tonight, and no doubt larger audiences will greet the players.

Miss Hana Shimozumi, the Japanese prima donna, was perfect in her part of Yum Yum, a ward of Ko Ko. Her splendid voice was heard to good advantage in the several solos of her part and her graceful manner on the stage soon won the affection of the audience. She is a dainty little actress, her voice is as clear as a bell and her accent does not show any trace of her foreign birth.

Mr. Jefferson De Angelis, in the part of Ko Ko, the lord high executioner, was responsible for most of the comedy situations and his delineation of the character assigned to him was most amusing. He managed to keep the audience in laughter all the time he was on the stage. As an operatic comedian Mr. De Angelis has few equals.

The character of Nanki Poo, the son of the Mikado, was ably handled by Mr. Daniel Denton and his singing of his solos was of an exceptionally high order. Particular mention might be made of his minstrel song.

Mr. Albert Parr in the part of the Mikado was letter perfect, his voice being particularly adapted to the part assigned to him.

The characters of Pitti Sing and Peep Bo, sisters of Yum Yum, were played by Miss Rosamond Whiteside and Miss Mildred Coon, respectively, and were indeed well taken.

The large and well trained chorus of both male and female voices added greatly to the success of the production. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Max Bendix, is also deserving of considerable credit.

This afternoon H. M. S. Pinafore is being played and this evening the "Chimes of Normandy" will be the attraction when a larger house than that of last night is expected to be present.

The management of the Gallo English Opera Company is quite confident that this present revival of the comic operas will be appreciated as the demand for entertainment of this kind is being more keenly felt all the time. And as long as their productions are on the high order of last night's performance it is safe to say that success will attend their efforts.

THE JAPANESE OBJECT TO KISSES

Motion picture producers have learned through bitter experience, in the case of the films they export to Japan, that kisses and embraces are distinctly out of order in the land of Cherry-blossoms. It is said that in the short space of six months the Jap police censors removed 2850 kisses and 353 hugs from American films, allowing only queen Isabella's kiss to Columbus to escape the censorial scissors.

William Russell Productions must have been on their good Japanese behavior when they filmed his newest photoplay, "A Sporting Chance," for there's nary a "clinch," nor even the tiniest little peck in the picture, although you do hear wedding bells a-tinkling in the distance during the last few feet of reel five. However, since the gentleman has only met the lady a bare twenty hours previously, and as both of them have been kept mighty busy with a complicated and enthralling mystery in the meantime, perhaps it is too much to expect of them so swift-moving and peppy a pace as "Big Bill."

"A Sporting Chance" will be on the screen at The Empire on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Don't miss William Russell, Fritzi Brunette, and the splendid cast of supporting players. It's a picture that keeps you guessing to the final inch of film and winds up with a clever, unexpected twist that fairly stuns you with surprise.

CHARGE OF THEFT WAS ADJOURNED

On the application of the Crown-Attorney the trial of the case, King vs. Gould, was adjourned until the June sittings. The Crown stated to the court that one Goldman, a material witness, could not be located. Mr. F. D. Kerr, who appeared for Gould, opposed the adjournment, and asked that the trial proceed, stating his client was willing that the evidence given at the Police Court should be read and used at the trial. Judge Huycke finally directed the case to stand over until June, and with the consent of the Crown, the accused was allowed to go on his own bail without sureties.

An Island That Now Wants Self-Determination.

In connection with the petition sent to Washington by a group of Spaniards, suggesting that this would be an opportune time for the United States to withdraw its troops from Santo Domingo, the National Geographic Society has issued the following bulletin concerning the island republic:—

"Geographically, the island of Haiti, including within its limits the two republics of Santo Domingo and Haiti, is in the class of the most favored of nations, situated on the Western Continent about midway between its two grand divisions of North and South America and abounding in natural resources," says the bulletin.

"The name Haiti, or 'High Island,' is significant of the character of its topography. 'Sire,' once said a British admiral to his king, George III, when asked about the island, 'Haiti looks like that,' and he crumpled up a piece of paper and placed it upon the table. A brief description though this may be, it well fitted the case. The island is about 400 miles long and 150 miles wide. It is irregular and is intersected by three chains of mountains.

"Historically, Haiti, or Santo Domingo, is the senior of our own country, if we leave out of consideration the legendary reports concerning the visit of the Norsemen to our northern coasts 800 years ago, and we are somewhat indebted to this beautiful island for our own development.

"On St. Nicholas Day (December 6), 1492, Columbus entered a port at the extreme west end of the island of Santo Domingo or, as the whole island was then called by the aborigines, Haiti. The natives themselves called the port Bohio, but Columbus christened it, in honor of the day he was celebrating, Port St. Nicholas, the name still existing as St. Nicholas Mole. This date will ever be memorable in the annals of the Haitiens as marking the beginning of the history of the island.

"Columbus now called the island Hispaniola in honor of the country which had sent him forth to discover it, and it is to be regretted that this name given by the immortal discoverer has been lost, for its present two names are conflicting and confusing.

"Columbus then determined to build a permanent settlement, and after reconnoitering he selected for this purpose a site on an elevated plain near a spacious bay on the north coast of the island. Here was established the first town in the new world, which was dignified by the name of his queen and patron, Isabella.

"But the course of empire was still south, and soon Santo Domingo City became the centre of the colonial activities.

"A little love affair connected with the growth of this city is interesting. One of the Spanish party, Miguel Dias, having got into difficulty with an officer, severely wounding him in combat, fled to escape punishment. Finding shelter in an Indian village and being received with much cordiality and hospitality, he in return gave his heart to the young Caguisse, who was then governing the tribe. His protestations met with favor, and the young Spaniard found himself the consort of a queen of no mean accomplishments. But he soon wearied of his environment and sighed for his old companions. The queen, seeing his discontent and fearing to lose him, gave him the secret of her vast wealth and, loading him with the precious metal, sent him back to the Spaniards to induce them to return with him and settle in her country. Dias delivered this message to Columbus, who immediately ordered an exploration of that part of the island to ascertain the truth of the Spaniard's report.

"The sequel to this little love affair is also interesting, but most pathetic, Zamcaca, after giving her all to her lover, who was thereby promoted to high honors in the colony, being the first alcade of the new city, was so disheartened by the cruel treatment accorded her people that she fled from civilization and affluence to the wilds of the forests, leaving her two children and still faithful husband to mourn her loss, and was never heard from again.

Indian Jewels.

Crossing from China to India, we shall find the people there often loaded with jewelry, writes Frank G. Carpenter, in "How the World is Clothed." That worn by a single girl in the Himalya mountains may weigh many pounds. It is usually of brass, but sometimes of gold and silver. In the valley of the Ganges, there are women who wear metal rings in their noses, and some who have silver bells much like sleigh bells fastened about their toes.

Remembering the Boys.

A friend of mine performed a wedding ceremony for a young couple in our home town, after which the bridegroom took all the money out of his pocket, which was 75 cents, and turned to my friend, the minister, and said: "I will have to keep 50 cents of this to buy cigars for the boys," and handed him the 25 cents for the fee.—Chicago Tribune.

Searching Questions.

About what am I now employing my own soul? On every occasion I must ask myself this question, and inquire: What have I now in this part of me which they call the ruling principle? And whose soul have I now? That of a child, or of a young man, or of a feeble woman, or of a tyrant, or of a domestic animal, or of a wild beast? —Marcus Aurelius.

A CITIZEN ARMY.

Universal Military Training in Switzerland.

In connection with the frequent agitation for universal military training in Canada, it is interesting to study the systems of other countries where such service has been tested.

Universal compulsory military service in Switzerland dates from 1874, when the old system of requiring each canton to raise an allotment of three men for every hundred men of its population, was done away with, and the system of requiring every able-bodied man to meet for training was substituted. The system worked with very little trouble or friction from the beginning, and the Swiss people are very proud of their citizen army.

The Swiss boy, at the age of 10, is put into the gymnastic class at school and begins learning the elements of the soldier drill on the schoolhouse playground. Long before he is old enough to be called upon for service he has learned to do the manual exercises and to go through much of the drill that afterward fits him for a soldier.

When a boy reaches 17 years he is liable to service—a liability which continues until he is 50 years of age. Even after that he may be liable, if he is capable of doing any other army work than soldiering, such as acting as baker, veterinary surgeon, or otherwise.

Yet with all of this universal training, the only people in Switzerland who make arms an exclusive profession are the commander-in-chief, selected by the Federal Assembly, and the general staff. These form the brains of the army. The rank and file belong to the cantons.

The Swiss man sacrifices cheerfully a definite amount of his time to preserve his independence as a citizen of a free country.

Entrenched behind his native rocks, the citizen army of Switzerland contains every element of the nation. The man of wealth and the peasant are found shoulder to shoulder. No man is compelled to spend the crucial years of his life away from home in the army, and yet every man is required to contribute his share to that army's maintenance and the nation's safety.

At the age of 20 every able-bodied Swiss youth becomes a member of the Auszug, and every one who lacks the necessary qualifications regrets that he is unable to co-operate with other young defenders of his country. During the first year of liability he must serve 75 days or more, and 11 days [illegible] to the standard. It is no excuse that he has brothers already in the army, or that he has a widowed mother dependent upon him. The burden of preparedness, spread over a nation, becomes no onerous task for anyone, and the average young man in Switzerland looks upon his time spent in training camps as a pleasurable vacation, profitable to the safety of his country.

Service in the "Auszug," or "Elite," continues until the citizen reaches the age of 32. Thereafter he passes into what is known as the "Landwehr" or First Reserve, where he remains until he has completed his forty-fourth year. He must give in that time nine days of service during each four years that he belongs to the "Landwehr." After he has passed 44 he goes into the "Landsturm," or Second Reserve, where he stays until he is 50, and even beyond that if national necessity calls him.

At the various stages in his career proper exemptions become the lot of the soldier. Those in the employ of the state, railway and steamboat men, hospital officials and others reach their exemption early; preachers, doctors, prison officials, postal and telegraphic officials are exempt; but the man who has to go into the field has the consolation that the man who may stay at home also has his burden to bear, for, in addition to all other taxes, he must pay a special military poll tax of $1.20, a military property tax of 15 cents per $100 (with property under $200 exempted), and a military income tax of 1½ per cent. The total tax thus paid by any one person cannot exceed $500. The assessments are rigorously made and every penny exacted.

Mandeville's Giraffe.

Sir John Mandeville, in his "Travels," gives this description of a giraffe which he calls "Gerfauntz" or "Orafles": "A beast spotted, and that is a little more high than a steed, but he hath a neck twenty cubits long, and he may look over a great high house."

Why Milk Sours.

It is a common impression that thunder sours milk, but this is not so.

The reason that milk sours is that minute plants, known as bacteria, act on the sugar in milk, changing it into lactic or milk acid. One scientist, however, says this explanation is not satisfactory. He regards the souring of milk as a result of feeding on milk sugar by the lactic acid germs, leaving behind them what is known as sour milk.

No matter what the true explanation may be in detail, we believe that souring of milk is caused in some way by "germs" or bacteria which are microscopic plants that fall into milk from the air, and get in from many other places.

Like all plants, they must have air, suitable temperature, and moisture, in order to grow. The common plan of preventing the milk going sour is to cool it as soon as possible after milking and keep it cold until it is used. The reason for this is, the cold makes an unfavorable condition for these plants to grow, hence the milk remains sweet, though sometimes it takes on bad flavors, or develops disease producing germs. In order to prevent this, we "pasteurize" milk in order to kill the germs present, by means of heat. If it is cooled and kept cold after heating, the milk will keep sweet for some time and is free from disease germs. This is known as the safest kind of milk to use. "Safety First" is a good rule when buying milk.—Prof. H. H. Dean, O. A. College, Guelph.

GOSSIP FROM BIG LEAGUE MEETINGS

New York, Dec. 11.—Even if the big leagues decided to abolish freak deliveries, it is generally felt that the pitchers affected will be comparatively few in number. "Hod" Eller, of the Cincinnati Reds, is the most prominent shine ball twirler in the National League, and, of course, he would have to change his style a bit.

The regular authorized spitball artists who are likely to be exempted if the new ruling is passed are Grimes, of Brooklyn; Rudolph, of Boston; Hendrix, of Chicago; and Doak, of St Louis. In the American League Cicotte and Sothoron are the most noted spitball hurlers.

Lieut. Dick Hoblitzel, United States Army Dental Corps, formerly star first baseman of the Boston Red Sox, has signed to coach the West Point cadets in baseball, it was announced today. Hoblitzel succeeds Hans Lo-[illegible] former Giant third-sacker, who succeed Sammy Strang three years ago. Hoblitzel was signed for one year.

Jack Coombs signed a contract to act as coach of the Detroit pitchers for next year. President Navin in obtaining the services of Coombs made a wise move, as there is no better developer of young pitchers than "Colby Jack." Had the pitching staff of the Tigers been able to hold its own last season Detroit might have won the pennant.

Ask if Hughie Jennings had been signed for next season, President Navin, of the Detroit club, replied in the negative. "Jennings," Navin said, "has not signed a contract in the last ten years." His is generally a verbal agreement, and the same formality will probably be used this season.

James A. Gilmore was seen strolling about the lobby of the Biltmore. Somebody suggested that the former Federal League president was lying in wait for the opportunity to launch another new league, after the threatened break between the Colonels and Ban Johnson.

Buck Herzog is still in our midst. The Cantaloupe King has not signed a contract as yet, and the chances are that he won't, as usual, until he gets his price. There is a persistent rumor afloat that Herzog will appear in the uniform of the Yankees this coming season. He and Miller Huggins have been seen with their heads together on several different occasions.

SAYS EX-KAISER IS MENACE TO HOLLAND

MEMBER OF CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES DEMANDS HE BE EXTRADITED

The Hague, Dec. 11.—"If previously we have not regarded [illegible] danger to our country, he is now proving to be a danger," said Deputy Sannes in the Chamber of Deputies, referring to former Emperor William of Germany. The deputy was dealing with a book written by Carl Kautsky, a German Socialist, which Sannes declared showed that the former Emperor was the cause of the world war. The data in Kautsky's book is said to have been obtained from official archives in Berlin.

Deputy Sannes asked the Government to reconsider the question of the sojourn at Amerongen of the former Emperor and seriously to consider the question of his extradition.

This incident constituted the first serious anti-Kaiser movement to occur in the Dutch Parliament.

MR. MATTHEWS WAS CHAIRMAN 18 YEARS

WATER COMMISSIONERS ENJOY REMINISCENCE OF THEIR ACHIEVEMENTS

At a meeting of the Utility Commission held on the 10th instant and before entering upon the business of the day, the members of the Commission engaged for a short period in a reminiscence of their service in office, from which it appeared Mr. Matthews had served continuously for eighteen years and had been chairman during all that time as Water and Utility Commissioner and Mr. Moore for sixteen years and Mr. Hicks for six years, and during the time, in office, of the two former members, vast improvement has been made in all matters pertaining to the Plant and Water service; and a resolution was passed expressive of deep regret at the retirement of Mr. Matthews, who had been a most efficient and devoted officer, whose absence will be deeply regretted by the other Commissioners and also by the City at large. It will indeed, be extremely difficult to find a Commissioner with the business capacity to fill Mr. Matthews' place and be prepared to sacrifice so much valuable time and give such splendid administration and service to the city.

Mr. Moore was appointed chairman.

POET-COMMANDER IS WILLING TO CONFER

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 11.—Gabriele d'Annunzio is ready to co-operate with the Italian Government to bring about the return of normal conditions in the Adriatic if satisfactory guarantees are given that Italy will neither renounce Fiume nor evacuate the territories occupied since the signing of the armistice, it was officially stated here today. The position of the poet-commander was given by d'Annunzio in reply to terms offered by Gen. Badoglio, chief of staff of the stationed Italian army, who, it is stated, proposed the retention of Fiume by Italy and the surrender of all claim to Dalmatia.

BRANTFORD LABOR TO PUT UP CIVIC TICKET

THREE CANDIDATES FOR CIVIC HONORS IN EACH WARD IN CITY

Brantford, Dec. 11.—Officials of the Independent Labor Party are busily engaged in framing a complete municipal slate for the elections in January. It is announced that there will be three candidates for aldermanic honors in each ward, as well as candidates for vacancies on all the public utility boards. Whether the nomination for mayor will go to Ald. Symons or Mayor MacBride is a matter of uncertainty, it being intimated today that possible new entries in the contest might mean Mayor MacBride's nomination for a third term. The Labor party meets Friday night, when a slate will be announced.

Will Investigate Proposed Radial.

The Chamber of Commerce proposes to secure all data and information in connection with the proposal to build a hydro radial from Guelph to Hamilton by way of the village of St. George. The radial would thus tap Brant County, and would, it is thought, interfere with a considerable volume of business which now comes to Brantford.

SUPPLY OF COAL IN SIGHT IS LIMITED

FUEL CONTROLLER HARRINGTON URGES THE CONSUMER TO BE CAREFUL

"Although the strike of coal miners is settled, people must not bank too much upon coal coming into the country at once. It will take three or four months for us to get caught up with what we have lost because of the strike," said Mr H. A. Harrington, Provincial Fuel Administrator, in an address of warning to the public. "Utmost conservation is absolutely essential on the part of all consumers. Reports come from the United States of serious shortages and of people having to burn their furniture to keep warm."

The miners are in somewhat of a peculiar mood just at present, and it is hard to predict just what the developments will be in the future, Mr. Harrington said. It is well, therefore, for no more coal to be used than is absolutely neccessary.

An investigation at Black Rock on the part of officials of the Fuel Administrator's office revealed the fact that there were 100 cars of anthracite coal there destined for Ontario. Just as soon as Mr. Harrington learned this he ordered that they be moved forward, and they crossed into Ontario yesterday. They are consigned to all parts of the province, and will help considerably in relieving the shortage which was developing.

RETURNED SOLDIER KILLED

Alex. Reid, Belleville, fell fifty feet Down Shaft.

Belleville, Dec. 11. — Alexander Reid, a returned soldier, was killed yesterday at the Corby distilling plant at Corbyville, killed, and Percy Slack seriously injured. The men were engaged about the plant for the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company and from some cause fell down an elevator shaft, a distance of fifty feet. Reid was terribly injured and lived but a few minutes. Slack's life was spared by falling upon Reid. The latter's home was in Sidney Township. During the war he was wounded and gassed.

Geo. Macdonald's home at Brantford was entered by thieves and two diamonds and a ruby stolen.

BOARD TO INSTITUTE A TARIFF INQUIRY

PROBE NEXT YEAR TO ASCERTAIN HOW DUTY AFFECTS LIVING COSTS

Winnipeg, Dec. 11.—Public sittings will be held by the Board of Commerce early next year to determine the effect of the tariff on the cost of necessaries of life. The following announcement was made by the chief commissioner, H. A. Robson, K.C.

The cost of necessaries of life is enhanced in many cases by the customs tariff. This tariff may be protective or revenue-producing. If merely protective it is a question whether an increase in cost of necessaries thereby is, in the present circumstances, warranted. If a particular duty is revenue producing, then it is a question whether that revenue cannot otherwise be raised and necessaries to that extent relieved. The Board of Commerce can inquire into all items making up cost. [illegible] see if the tariff is made use of to unreasonably enhance prices. In the course of inquiries instituted by the Manitoba and Saskatchewan governments through J. F. Frame, K.C., it has appeared that there is reason to further investigate into the cost item brought about by the payment of customs duties and into the cost enhancement by reason of tariff protection.

The board is therefore instituting inquiries in this direction. It is accumulating information that it is fully expected that early in the new year public sittings will be held at appropriate points to go fully into these questions.

Necessaries of life are defined as any staple and ordinary article of food (whether fresh preserved, canned or otherwise treated), clothing and fuel, including the products materials and ingredients from or of which any thereof are in whole or in part manufactured, composed, derived or made, and such other articles of any kind as the board may from time to time by special regulation prescribe. This now also includes drugs and medical supplies. The matters to which Mr. Frame particularly devoted attention were boots and shoes and textiles; that is a wide field, but it will be seen that there is even wider ground that may be covered.

"RED MICHALE" FOR SENATE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 11.—In political circles the name of Dr. Michael Clark, member for Red Deer, Alberta, is being mentioned for the Senate vacancy in Alberta, due to the death of Senator Peter Talbot.

TWENTY-FIVE MILLIONS

Will Be Required to Maintain Militia Next Year.

Ottawa, Dec. 11.—In the neighborhood of twenty-five million dollars will be required next year for the maintenance of the reorganized Canadian permanent force and the active militia at its pre-war strength, it is reported. During the war period military expenditures have been met out of special war appropriations. Hereafter such expenses will be paid out of the departmental estimates. These estimates are now in course of preparation. The cost of the maintenance of the permanent force and the active militia in 1913 was in the neighborhood of eleven million dollars. Prices of materials have, however, since increased upwards of 110 per cent. The amount of the appropriation which Parliament will be asked to vote for the militia will be determined by the Government after the draft estimates have been considered by the Treasury Board. The total will also to some extent depend upon the decision of the [illegible] of Major-Generals Sir William Otter, Sir Edward Morrison and Brig.-General McNaughton. The committee has been preparing a plan for the reorganization of the active militia and the perpetuation of units of the expeditionary force.

Department Denies Story.

Ottawa, Dec. 11.—The Militia Department has issued a denial of the newspaper item which stated that 25 million dollars would be required next year for militia purposes. It was positively stated that this amount was far in excess of the estimates, and the view is expressed that 15 or 16 millions would be nearer the mark.

MRS. MILLS RE-ELECTED BY ACCLAMATION

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the G.W.V.A. held their annual meeting on Monday at their rooms. The following report was read by the secretary:

Madame President and Ladies:

I beg to submit my second annual report for the year ending November, 1919. The Ladies' Auxiliary has been most active during the past year and our funds have been added to in various ways.

The first event of the year was a big Christmas treat and tea, given by the Veterans to over 1,000 soldiers' children at the armories, the responsibility of which largely rested with the ladies. Early in January we presented the Veterans with a Victrola and records as a New Year gift, and later in the month we gave a card party, which was well patronized. Our first big dance was held in February at "The Empress," and was a great success in every way.

In April, during the Veterans' great drive for funds, we served tea for the canvassers each night, ending with a dance on Friday of that week, and the ladies also assisted them on their tag day. In May we stocked our kitchen with many necessary articles, the cutlery and dishes having been bought earlier in the year. In July several patriotic little girls held a social and sale of work, by which they helped to augment the funds. In June we held our first meeting in our new room on Murray street, which has been set aside for our use by the kindness of the Veterans. The fall work opened in September with renewed activities. In October the Veterans gave a card party and dance, at which the ladies assisted. During the entire year the visiting members were most active, and many visits were paid regularly to the hospital, and fruit and books distributed; sick and needy cases were also investigated and relieved; and here special mention should be made of Mrs. Robert Bugg, whose faithful and constant work has never flagged.

The Ladies' Auxiliary has a membership of 95, and an average attendance of 30. During the year some 40 letters have been written by the secretary.

M. MASSEY-COOKE,
Secretary.

Report of Visiting Committee.

Madame, President and Ladies,—

I have much pleasure in presenting to you my report for year ending November, 1919. It has been my privilege to visit the hospital each week; to take fruit, flowers and books to our brave boys who are mostly suffering from wounds or other trouble caused through the war. I find those who were gassed are the worst. I may also add that I have not been alone in this work, Mrs. Massey-Cooke having accompanied me during the last half of the year, and helped to provide many magazines and reading matter, which is always appreciated. We do not confine our visits to our soldiers alone, but visit their wives, parents and widows. We never bring any fruit away, but give it to any sick or aged persons we may be visiting. I have also written a number of letters of sympathy and sent plants. The Silent Reaper has been among us during the year; some of our boys have gone to their last home; one of our own members has lately passed away.

One of my visits was paid to the jail; but the G.W.V.A. have dealt with this case.

Mrs. Chas. Perry and Mrs. Johnson have on several occasions driven me to the hospital, and Mrs. Dolby has three times donated fruit.

It has also been my privilege during the past year to investigate many needy cases, and to help them with groceries, fuel, clothes, and in other ways. I have paid 341 visits during the year, and my expenses for fruit and car fares were $26.25.

May God prosper our auxiliary, and increase our faith, also our members.

GOLLOP'S HOTEL SOLD TO BRACEBRIDGE MAN

MR R. GOLLOP GIVES UP MANAGEMENT OF HOSTEL HE HAS MADE POPULAR

It has been announced that Gallop's Hotel has changed hands. Mr. R. Gallop has sold out to Mr. Fisher, of Bracebridge. Mr. Fisher is a hotel man well known to the travelling public.

Mr. Gallop was the proprietor for a number of years of the Snowden House of this city. He came to Peterborough many years ago, and has been connected with the hotel business all his life. His well-known ability in this line has made his name familiar among those who comprise the travelling public, and it is with much regret that the people learn of his intended retirement.

Mr. Gallop acquired possession of Gallop's Hotel over a year ago. It was, before this, known as the Grand Hotel. Under Mr. Gallop's management the hotel has gone well ahead, and has acquired the reputation of being one of the most up-to-date hotels of its kind in this part of the province. Peterborough citizens will wish Mr. Gallop every success in any new venture he may make.

REV. DR. CHAFER NOTED TEACHER

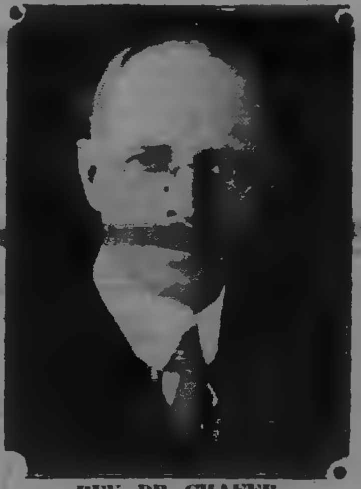
EMINENT EVANGELIST WHO IS HOLDING SPECIAL SERVICES AT ST. PAUL'S

LAW AND GRACE ARE EXPLAINED

INTERESTING THEME IS ABLY DISCUSSED AT MEETING YESTERDAY AFTERNOON

At the afternoon service in St. Paul's Church yesterday Rev. Dr. Chafer continued his study of the subject of "Grace," dealing especially with the difference between law and grace. Those who attended the meeting were greatly helped by his lucid exposition of this subject, many saying that a subject had been clarified for them which they had always had great difficulty in understanding.

In a word, it may be said that the difference between law and grace is that the law said "do and live," while grace says, "because you are living, do." Grace introduces the sinner to a new law of life. It is the law of life in Christ Jesus. It gives him a new motive for service. He serves not in the hope that he may be saved, but because he is saved. He said that the most difficult part of the New Testament to interpret is the gospels, and that for the reason that they are midway between law and grace. Christ himself came under the law, and spoke to the men of His time as those who were under law. While grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, grace did not begin until the death of Christ. Christ was a minister for the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises unto the fathers. His ministry, therefore, began, and almost to the close proceeded within Jewish and legal limits. He said, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." It will save the Bible student much confusion if he will remember this. When reading the gospels, therefore, it should be borne in mind that the dispensation in which Christ lived was still legal. Hence all positonal and ethical truth in the first three gospels up to the Cross is in accord with the principles of merit by works. Jesus Christ Himself was "full of grace," and grace governs all His actions. It is only in the epistles, therefore, that the meaning of grace is explained. And it is in the epistles that those who live today find the conditions of their salvation, their blessings and their privileges.



REV. DR. CHAFER

Dr. Chafer in the evening spoke on what it is that God does for the sinner the moment He saves him. A brief paragraph such as this cannot do justice to a theme which took the speaker over an hour to expound. It may be said that the substance of this address is found in Dr. Chafer's great work on Salvation. He is the author of five other books, namely "Satan," "Evangelism," "The Kingdom in History and Prophecy," and "He That Is Spiritual." He will preach again this evening in St Paul's. There will be no service on Friday afternoon. The service preparatory to Communion will be held on Friday evening, when new members will be received into the church. It is expected there will be a large addition on this occasion. Dr. Chafer will speak on Saturday afternoon and then will be present at both services on the Lord's Day. Those who miss these services miss hearing one of the greatest Bible teachers on this continent. God has given some apostles, some prophets, some vangelists, some pastors, some teachers. Dr. Chafer is pre-eminently a teacher. The public are invited to these services.

METHODIST MEN

This is a time of heart searching and of inspiration and consecration. It is the duty and the privilege of Peterborough city and district to raise $43,000 as our portion, to aim at an increase of 1,170 in church membership, to call 59 young people to lay all on the altar of Jesus Christ for life service.

With evident deep feeling, Mr. Thomas appealed to the men to go out for the non-church goers in their communities and bring them to Christ and the church.

"The co-operation of every man and every woman is needed," said Mr. Thomas.

Banquet Briefs.

Chandaliers with five red candles each graced the tables.

Mr. Geo. King was pianist.

Mr. J. M. Greene is chairman of the district campaign committee, and is doing much work.

Mrs. Joseph Walsh gracefully [illegible] the vote of thanks to the ladies.

The Rev. B. Greatrix made the opening prayer for the spiritual conquest.

Ladies graced the galleries and were interested listeners.

Mr. R. F. Downey has the knack of making announcements.

No charge was made, but the collection met expenses.

All the Methodist churches of the city and practically every circuit of the district were represented. Warsaw shook hands with Pontypool, Bridgenorth with Bethany, Wesley with Cavan, Lakefield with Millbrook.

Some will report to their home churches.

"O God, Our Help in Ages Past" had a peculiar impressiveness.

The banquet will undoubtedly give impetus to the Methodist national campaign here.

At the close, after silent prayer, Mr. E. E. Ingall led in prayer and Rev. F. E. Malott, B.A., B.D., dismissed with the benediction.

FRENCH PAPERS IN FAVOR OF NEW ALLIANCE WITH BRITAIN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 12.—Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George resumed their conferences on war problems today. Earl Curzon of Kedelston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Sir Maurice Hankey, Secretary of the War Cabinet, and the French ambassador, were present.

International finance was under discussion. J. Austin Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, was called into the conference, and cancelled a speaking engagement to attend.

French Favor Entente.

Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George have a clear understanding as to the situation resulting from the present German attitude, according to French newspapers, which speak with satisfactory opinion of the conferences in London by the two statesmen. Many newspapers express the desire that the conferences should end in the conclusion, if not of an alliance, at least of an entente or agreement equivalent to a real alliance, between Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

VICTORIOUS IN ONE PART OF RUSSIA BUT DEFEATED IN ANOTHER

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 12.—Bolsheviki forces have again heavily attacked the left flank of General Denekine's army and driven the latter's volunteers back to a depth of nearly forty miles along a front of from 300 to 400 miles. The Reds are within fifty miles of Kharkov and Poltava and are swinging around to the south-east of Kiev, which is also threatened from the northwest.

According to news from South Russia, the situation gives rise to anxiety; on the Caucasus front, however, the Bolsheviki have been repulsed before Tzaritsan with heavy losses. Don Cossacks have also been successful in pushing back Reds.

Amyot, Deputy Minister of the Federal Health Department, this morning, when interviewed regarding the smallpox epidemic. If all were vaccinated, the epidemic would be at an end in two weeks, but with so many centres now existing it is likely that it wil continue until most of the unvaccinated are picked out by it.

WHATMAN CLAIMS CARELESSNESS OF LANDLADY CAUSED DEATH OF SON

The case, which occupied the attention of the County Court yesterday afternoon was Whatman vs. Duprau. Mr. J. Wearing appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. F. D. Kerr for the defendant.

The first witness was Mr. Russel Whatman, the plaintiff, who gave a description of the surroundings of a home he formerly occupied as a tenant of Mrs. Margaret Duprau. It is 177 London street.

In June last the plaintiff's son fell into a cistern at the rear of this house and was drowned. He is suing for the costs of the funeral and the loss of the boy's usefulness as he would have grown up.

In the witness box he declared that he had informed his landlady of the dangerous condition of the cistern some time before the accident occurred. One door opens into the cistern room from a walk, which passes along the side of the house. Another opens into the cistern room from a shed to the back.

In this shed his children were accustomed to play, stated the witness. The door between the shed and the cistern room was kept shut and bolted with a stick, he swore.

Broke the Bolt.

Mrs. Whatman was the next witness and her description of the surrounding buildings corresponded in every detail with that of her husband.

She swore that on the day of the accident that resulted in the drowning of her child, Mrs Duprau, the defendant, had come through that door leading from the shed to the alleyway in which the cistern was. She had to break the board that was acting as a bolt to get through the door, swore the witness.

The next witness was Irene Whatman, the nine-year-old daughter of the plaintiff. The judge questioned the little girl for a short time and decided that she could understand the terrible consequences of taking a false oath.

She swore that she, her sister, and her brother that was drowned, were were playing in the shed at the back of her house on the morning of the accident. She saw Mrs. Duprau come and break the board holding the door and go on into the house where he mother was working.

She described the surrounding the same as her mother and father had done.

"Did you ever play in that shed when the door was open?"

"No, mamma wouldn't let us."

"Why would your mother not let you go in the room where the cistern was?"

"Because it wasn't safe. I could see the boards shake when either my mother or my father went to get water."

"I am told you used to play in a little yard beside your place that was next to this cistern room," commenced Mr. Kerr.

"Who told you that?" asked the witness indignantly.

Under cross-examination the witness stuck firmly to her story and stated that she saw Mrs. Duprau break the board holding that door before she went through it.

Realized the Danger.

Mr. H. Pall was summonded as a witness and gave testimony as to the rotten condition of the floor in that room with the well and cistern.

"Did you ever speak to Mrs. Duprau about the condition of that floor?"

"No, not directly, but I mentioned it to Mrs. Lattimer and offered to fix it for her if she would get the lumber."

"Did you use water out of this well?"

"I did until I drew a big cat up out of it, then I quit."

P. C. Wigg and P. C. Lawrence produced pieces of rotten wood which they swore they had taken from the floor through which the boy had fallen.

Defendant's Testimony.

Then the defendant took the stand. She swore that on the day of the accident she had gone through that door but she had not had any difficulty in opening it. She had often see it open while the children were playing in the shed, she stated.

She swore that she had asked the plaintiff to leave that house several months before the accident, both because he was not paying his rent and because she wanted to fix the place up and could not do it with the children around.

Witness had not realized the dangerous condition of the cistern foor before the accident, but she was aware that the floor of nearly all the house needed fixing.

Mrs. Lattimer was the record witness called by the defence and swore that lumber had been provided for the tennants to fix the floor. They were fixing a small shed and were to fix the floor with the best of the boards that were left over. Mr. Pall told me that they were tired after their night's work and would fix it on a holiday. They did not fix it at all, declared the witness.

The plaintiff, in giving his evidence, swore that this lumber had been carried away by Mrs. Duprau for fire wood, which she emphatically denies.

The court adjourned at this stage until 10 o'clock this morning.

IMPORTANT SESSION OF THE DIPLOMATS

CONFERENCE IN LONDON TODAY IS REGARDED OF UNUSUAL IMPORTANCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 12. — Unusual importance is attached to the conference held at Premier Lloyd George's official residence in Downing street today, attended by Premier Clemenceau of France, Foreign Minister Scialoia of Italy and other British and Allied representatives of prominence. The general belief in diplomatic quarters was that the conference was for the purpose of discussing the proposed Allied loan to Austria and the subject of the pact between France and Great Britain to guarantee France against unwarranted attacking, into which agreement, it was originally explained, the United States would enter. Up to mid-afternoon no official announcement had been made regarding the work or purpose of the conference.

NO MONEY ORDERS FOR UNITED STATES TO BE ISSUED BY CANADIAN OFFICES

Order Just Issued to be Effected Until Rate of Exchange is Normal

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—Twenty million dollars in gold are being shipped from Ottawa to New York in an endeavor to stabilise Canadian exchange in New York. Part of the gold has arrived and the remainder is on the way. The recent heavy slump in the rate is already reflected in serious interference with the business between the two countries.

Owing to the uneasy overfluctuation and lack of stability the post office department has issued instructions to all offices that the issue of money orders payable in the United States is suspended for the time being. The issue will not be resumed until the exchange rate shows signs of stability. Shipments of gold to New York are expected to have a stabilising effect within a few days.

GERMANY SENDS NOTE TO ALLIES

HINTED THAT ANSWER TO DEMAND TO SIGN PROTOCOL IS CONCILIATORY

OBSTINATE ON SCAPA FLOW ISSUE

SAY THAT LETTER CAUSING TROUBLE WAS NOT PROPERLY TRANSLATED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Dec. 12.—Germany's reply to the last notes from the Supreme Council has been sent to Versailles. Nothing has been given out relative to its contents aside from the hint that its general tenor reciprocates the conciliatory tone of the last communication from Entente.

Reports state that the reply renews the Government's disclaimer of responsibility for the sinking of the interned German warships at Scapa Flow, and sets forth exceptions to Supreme Council's insistence upon compensation for the scuttled vessels. It is said to claim that objectionable passage from letter from Admiral Von Trotak, head of the German Admiralty to Admiral Von Reuter, Commander of German ships was not translated properly and that it was out of context with the rest of the letter.

On the proposition that Germany sign the protocol to the peace treaty and permit the issue involving the selection of indemnity tonnage to be adjusted later, it is reported the note proposes that the latter be forthwith submitted to a body of experts. This stand is taken because of the importance of the matter to German harbor facilities. It is hoped to obtain concession in the Scapa Flow issue and it is believed the notes indicate a measure of obstinacy over yielding on this point.

CANADIAN GOLD IS SHIPPED TO NEW YORK

OBJECT MAY BE TO CHECK DEPRECIATION ON MONTREAL EXCHANGE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Dec. 12.—The Canadian Government is shipping ten million dollars in gold to this city it was announced today. The shipment, which is surely a Canadian Government matter, is said to be for the purpose of meeting some obligations here and also to check the depreciation in Montreal exchange. Canadian Exchange yesterday underwent a sensational decline of 43.75 per thousand dollars, which carried the rate to $110 or a premium of eleven per cent on the dollar in Montreal. Sale of Canadian grain bills is believed to have accentuated the weakness in exchange rates.

Woodstock Council Wants Hydro Chairmanship for Six Years.

Woodstock, Dec. 12. — The members of the Woodstock city council have placed themselves on record as opposed to the appointment of Sir Adam Beck as chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission for a period of ten years. All the members of the council have announced their intention to serve again the public next year if returned by acclamation. In the event of a contest several of the aldermen for 1919 will drop out.

OFFICIALS MAKE INSPECTION TOUR AND FIND FACTORY CONDITIONS IDEAL

Factory Inspector Tutt of Toronto, who has been in the city on official business for some days, has completed his inspection of the local manufacturing plants. On his rounds of inspection he was accompanied by Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., who was anxious to post himself on his legislative duties by securing first-hand knowledge of working conditions in the city.

There was nothing found amiss by the inspectors, except in one case, in which the proprietors of a factory on the east side, where a number of girls are employed, were ordered to provide a fire escape, as the situation of the room where the girls work is peculiar and egress would be difficult if fire broke out in the plant.

The officials are in a position to give the manufacturers of the city a clean bill. The factories are well heated, well lighted, generally well ventilated, and the health of the employes is in no place in danger. The general plan of the Quaker Oats building, the care that is taken to provide for the comforts of the inmates, was especially noted by the officials. The published report of Inspector Tutt, when given official circulation, will prove an excellent advertisement for Peterborough. Mr. Tooms, too, is now in a position to deal intelligently with the Factory Act when that measure comes up for amendment.

Not only were working conditions in the various plants satisfactory, but it was also ascertained that the law regulating the employment of boys and girls was being faithfully observed.

ONTARIO DOCTORS ARE CAUTIONED TO BEWARE OF SLEEPING DISEASE

Peterborough Physicians With the Rest Receive Warning From Provincial Health Authorities—Cause of Disease is Yet Unknown.

The influenza epidemic of 1918 taught the Provincial health authorities a lesson of which they are now taking advantage. The danger threatening the province now is not influenza or anything similar, but that terrible disease known technically as Lethargica Encephalite and commonly as the sleeping sickness.

The lesson which the health authorities learned was to be prepared and this motto is the one that is before them in connection with the threatened invasion of the sleeping disease. Precautions are already being taken on account of the cases of this disease reported in Winnipeg and varios parts of Ontario.

Circulars have been sent to the doctors of Ontario from Provincial Health headquarters, asking them to be on the alert for symptoms of the disease. If any are discovered they are requested to inform the Medical Health Officer of the fact immediately in the same way as they report smallpox and othed contagious diseases. The medical men have come to learn the great advantages of united effort and co-operation, in preventing the spreading of disease.

Somewhat Mysterious

The cause of this disease is yet somewhat of a mystery. "It is due to some unknown infective agent," is the way the doctors express it. This makes the disease much more dangerous because it is impossible to invent a vaccine or take other steps to avoid the disease until the nature of this unknown infective agent has been ascertained.

A patient suffering from this disease is not necessarily always asleep as the common name might lead to believe. Even in the most serious cases the patient may be aroused. They move about in an indifferent manner and appear to take no interest in their surroundings. The face usually assumes a mask-like expression and the patient does not appear to realize what is happening around him.

The sleeping disease involves chiefly the stem of the brain and what is known as the basal ganglia. In a certain proportion of cases, the surface of the cerebrum is affected. The temperature usually ranges from 100 to 102.5 degrees.

The grave danger in connection with the sleeping disease is that paralysis almost always occurs, not immediately, but some time after the patient has commenced to suffer from the former trouble.

There have so far been no reports of sleeping disease in Peterborough or this neighborhood but that is no reason why the citizens should not co-operate with the health authorities in preventing it taking hold here. If the head of the provincial department regards the situation serious enough to send out the warning message to the doctors, Peterborough doctors included, it must be of sufficient importance to demand attention. If any of these symptoms, of even to a slight degree, are noticed by anyone, a doctor should be immediately summoned, because, on account of the unknown nature of the trouble, even with prompt attention the medical man will be called on to perform a dificult service, providing always, of course, it is this disease from which the person is suffering.

EXPLAINS PLAN OF GOVERNMENT

SOLDIERS DISCHARGED OVERSEAS

GIVES REASONS WHY THAT POLICY WAS DISCOURAGED BY MINISTRY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—In a statement issued today, Sir Edward Kemp, overseas Minister of Militia, sets forth the chief features of the policy adopted by the Government soon after the signing of the armistice in regard to the discharge in the British Isles of soldiers on the strength of the Canadian forces.

"Immediately after armistice," he says, "strong pressure from many quarters was brought to bear on the overseas ministry to grant discharges in the British Isles upon the same terms as discharges in Canada. The attitude on the part of the soldiers was easily understood, because they were weary of military service and many therefore desired to obtain their discharge immediately instead of waiting their turn for demobilization in Canada, especially in view of the fact that they would have their war service gratuity to spend in England. On the other hand, the Government desired to avoid any injustice to those who had to wait their turn for demobilization in Canada. Therefore the 'wide open door' discharge in Great Britain was discouraged."

After a reference to the comments which have been made upon the situation by those who are not familiar with all the conditions, the Minister says: "In the meantime, let is be clearly and definitely understood that in England, as in Canada, necessitous cases of need in connection with Canadian soldiers and their dependents have been carefully looked after and great care has been taken through the funds at the disposal of Canadian representatives to see that not only in respect of those discharged in England, but in many other cases hardship, when discovered, has been provided for."

HAMILTON CONTROLLERS AMEND THE PETITION OF PETERBOROUGH CITY COUNCIL

Hamilton, Dec. 12.—The controllers received a communication from the city clerk of Peterboro asking for the endorsation of a petition to the Legislature to amend the Municipal Act regarding the appointment of police commissions, so that they should consist of the Mayor and two other members elected by qualified voters. The petition was endorsed after it had been amended to read that the commission shall be composed of the Mayor, police magistrate and one elected member.

PREMIER DRURY WARNS AGAINST DUPLICATING RAILWAY LINES

Assures Representatives of Hydro Municipilities That He Has Confidence in Sir Adam Beck but Declines to Make Any Promises at Present.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Dec. 12.— Through sympathy with the projects of the Hydro-Electric Commission and confidence in Sir Adam Beck, coupled with some fears that the proposed radial lines might possibly duplicate existing lines, all this was expressed by Premier Drury this morning, in an interview with three hundred representatives of the Hydro municipalities in various parts of the province. The deputation submitted a resolution that the term of office of Sir Adam Beck, chairman, be six years, and that the commission consist of five members for such terms as would ensure continuity of the board. Secretary Harrington presented the arguments and J. Lyon of Guelph urged that Sir Adam should not have a shorter term than the chairman of the Dominion Raiway Board, who is appointed for ten years.

Premier Drury in reply characterized himself as an outstanding believer in Ontario's waterpowers and their development. He regarded Sir Adam as like Niagara Falls. A great force, but declined to make any promises just at present. The Legislature must consider the Hydro Radial project. In view of coming nationalization of railways, it wouldn't do to go ahead with railways that were duplicating.

Mr. Lyon replied that the Hydro Radial project did not propose to duplicate but electrify steam lines. He mentioned the projected lines from Galt, Brantford, and Guelph, and from Brantford to London, as, apparently duplicating existing lines. He wanted to be assured that they were not.

LLOYD GEORGE AND CLEMENCEAU STILL DISCUSSING NEW WAR PROBLEMS

CABINET MEMBERS CONSULTED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 12.—Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George resumed their conferences on war problems today. Earl Curzon of Kedelston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Sir Maurice Hankey, Secretary of the War Cabinet, and the French ambassador, were present.

International finance was under discussion. J. Austin Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, was called into the conference, and cancelled a speaking engagement to attend.

French Favor Entente.

Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George have a clear understanding as to the situation resulting from the present German attitude, according to French newspapers, which speak with satisfactory opinion of the conferences in London by the two statesmen. Many newspapers express the desire that the conferences should end in the conclusion, if not of an alliance, at least of an entente or agreement equivalent to a real alliance, between Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

SEE SAW TRIUMPHS FOR THE BOLSHEVIKI

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 12.—Bolsheviki forces have again heavily attacked the left flank of General Denekine's army and driven the latter's volunteers back to a depth of nearly forty miles along a front of from 300 to 400 miles. The Reds are within fifty miles of Kharkov and Poltava and are swinging around to the southeast of Kiev, which is also threatened from the northwest.

According to news from South Russia, the situation gives rise to anxiety; on the Caucasus front, however, the Bolsheviki have been repulsed before Tsaritzan with heavy losses. Don Cossacks have also been successful in pushing back Reds.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 12.— It may become necessary in the near future for adjoining provinces to isolate the province of Ontario, and the United United States may act even more phomptly," said Dr. J. A. Amyot, Deputy Minister of the Federal Health Department, this morning, when interviewed regarding the smallpox epidemic. If all were vaccinated, the epidemic would be at an end in two weeks, but with so many centres now existing it is likely that it wil continue until most of the unvacinated are picked out by it.

WHATMAN CLAIMS CARELESSNESS OF LANDLADY CAUSED DEATH OF SON

The case, which occupied the attention of the County Court yesterday afternoon was Whatman vs. Dupau. Mr. J. Wearing appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. F. D. Kerr for the defendant.

The first witness was Mr. Russel Whatman, the plaintiff, who gave a description of the surroundings of a home he formerly occupied as a tenant of Mrs. Margaret Duprau. It is 177 London street.

In June last the plaintiff's son fell into a cistern at the rear of this house and was drowned. He is suing for the costs of the funeral and the loss of the boy's usefulness as he would have grown up.

In the witness box he declared that he had informed his landlady of the dangerous condition of the cistern some time before the accident occurred. One door opens into the cistern room from a walk, which passes along the side of the house. Another opens into the cistern room from a shed to the bach.

In this shed his children were accustomed to play, stated the witness. The door between the shed and the cistern room was kept shut and bolted with a stick, he swore.

Broke the Bolt.

Mrs. Whatman was the next witness and her description of the surrounding buildings corresponded in every detail with that of her husband.

She swore that on the day of the accident that resulted in the drowning of her child, Mrs. Duprau, the defendant, had come through that door leading from the shed to the alleyway in which the cistern was. She had to break the board that was acting as a bolt to get through the door, swore the witness.

The next witness was Irene Whatman, the nine-year-old daughter of the plaintiff. The judge questioned the little girl for a short time and decided that she could understand the terrible conseqnences of taking a false oath.

She swore that she, her sister, and her brother that was drowned, were were playing in the shed at the back of her house on the morning of the accident. She saw Mrs. Duprau come and break the board holding the door and go on into the house where he mother was working.

She described the surrounding the same as her mother and father had done.

"Did you ever play in that shed when the door was open?"

"No, mamma wouldn't let us."

"Why would your mother not let you go in the room where the cistern was?"

"Because it wasn't safe. I could see the boards shake when either my mother or my father went to get water."

"I am told you used to play in a little yard beside your place that was next to this cistern room," commenced Mr. Kerr.

"Who told you that?" asked the witness indignantly.

Under cross-examination the witness stuck firmly to her story and stated that she saw Mrs. Duprau break the board holding that door before she went through it.

Realized the Danger.

Mr. H. Pall was summonded as a witness and gave testimony as to the rotten condition of the floor in that room with the well and cistern.

"Did you ever speak to Mrs. Duprau about the condition of that floor?"

"No, not directly, but I mentioned it to Mrs. Lattimer and offered to fix it for her if she would get the lumber."

"Did you use water out of this well?"

"I did until I drew a big cat up out of it, then I quit."

P. C. Wigg and P. C. Lawrence produced pieces of rotten wood which they swore they had taken from the floor through which the boy had fallen.

Defendant's Testimony.

Then the defendant took the stand. She swore that on the day of the accident she had gone through that door but she had not had any difficulty in opening it. She had often see it open while the children were playing in the shed, she stated.

She swore that she had asked the plaintiff to leave that house several months before the accident, both because he was not paying his rent and because she wanted to fix the place up and could not do it with the children around.

Witness had not realized the dangerous condition of the cistern foor before the accident, but she was aware that the floor of nearly all the house needed fixing.

Mrs. Lattimer was the record witness called by the defence and swore that lumber had been provided for the tennants to fix the floor. They were fixing a small shed and were to fix the floor with the best of the boards that were left over. Mr. Pall told me that they were tired after their night's work and would fix it on a holiday. They did not fix it at all, declared the witness.

The plaintiff, in giving his evidence, swore that this lumber had been carried away by Mrs. Duprau for fire wood, which she emphatically denies.

The court adjourned at this stage until 10 o'clock this morning.

GIVES REASONS WHY THAT POLICY WAS DISCOURAGED BY MINISTRY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—In a statement issued today, Sir Edward Kemp, overseas Minister of Militia, sets forth the chief features of the policy adopted by the Government soon after the signing of the armistice in regard to the discharge in the British Isles of soldiers on the strength of the Canadian forces.

"Immediately after armistice," he says, "strong pressure from many quarters was brought to bear on the overseas ministry to grant discharges in the British Isles upon the same terms as discharges in Canada. The attitude on the part of the soldiers was easily understood, because they were weary of military service and many therefore desired to obtain their discharge immediately instead of waiting their turn for demobilization in Canada, especially in view of the fact that they would have their war service gratuity to spend in England. On the other hand, the Government desired to avoid any injustice to those who had to wait their turn for demobilization in Canada. Therefore the wide open door discharge in Great Britain was discouraged."

After a reference to the comments which have been made upon the situation by those who are not familiar with all the conditions, the Minister says: "In the meantime, let is be clearly and definitely understood that in England, as in Canada, necessitous cases of need in connection with Canadian soldiers and their dependents have been carefully looked after and great care has been taken through the funds at the disposal of Canadian representatives to see that not only in respect of those discharged in England, but in many other cases hardship, when discovered, has been provided for."

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

FRIDAY, DEC. 12, 1919.

OUR RETIRING CITY COUNCIL.

THE CITY COUNCIL for 1919, the first elected under the special Act providing for the general vote, has wound up its business for the year. Five of the members hold over, and the terms of the other five expire. Mayor Duncan, who completes his second year of office, enjoying the distinction of two elections unopposed, has been fittingly honored by his associates. The best of feeling prevails among the aldermen, the hold overs and the retiring.

The record made by the retiring Council is now a matter of history. Beyond all question the aldermen have had a strenuous year, as from the outset they have been confronted by the problem of constructing one of the most gigantic and costly public works ever undertaken in this city. The erection of the Hunter street bridge was a matter calculated to test the stamina and the business acumen of any man. The aldermen have been accused of unnecessary delay and vacillation. They have decided on a line of action in committee, only to rescind this in open session. They hesitated over the question of contracts, but the issues involved were grave. Every member of the Council appeared to realize his responsibility to the ratepayers, and this behooved him to move with caution.

The Council of 1919 has achieved something worth while. The Hunter street bridge will be one of the finest structures of its kind in the world. It will share with the lift locks the honor of being one of Peterboroug's best advertising assets. It will prove useful as well as ornamental, something that will make for the development of the city on both sides of the river. Out of all the volume of debate, out of all the meetings in committee and special sessions, the aldermen have at last evolved something that is sure to stand every man as a creditable memorial of the service he rendered the city in 1919.

The City Council, too, has just demonstrated that it is composed of members not lacking in vision. They can see ahead and have done what they could to improve living conditions in the city, to provide for the comfort of generations who are to come after. They have arranged for the purchase by the city of Riverside Park and adjoining property, and for the acquisition from the Quaker Oats Company of a strip of river front on the north side of the new bridge, the whole to be maintained as a park. The best of business reasons could be advanced to show why the city should secure this property but there is a higher incentive than mere material advantages. The land in question can be converted into one of the best parks in the city. Its location, not only from a central standpoint, but as a site on the banks of one of the most beautiful rivers in Ontario is ideal. Tired mothers and children from the crowded districts of the city will find a convenient resting place and playground. Peterborough has a number of parks but was never called upon to pay for one except the small piece of land near the King Edward School. Every outlying quarter of the city has its park, and the purchase of the property at the eastern terminus of the bridge will be a concession to the residents of the central part of the city.

People may criticize the Council, but those who have any idea of the peculiar nature of their tasks during the past year will be charitable in their judgment, although common justice rather than charity is sufficient. If the aldermen began the year at odds, if misunderstandings delayed definite action, they have finished with work accomplished and with still greater things arranged for.

THE LOCAL MILITIA SITUATION.

THE DIFFERENCE of opinion which exists locally as to the fate of the 57th Regiment is a matter that should be left to those who are directly interested. It is a discussion from which the ordinary layman may well abstain. However, one side of the problem was presented by The Review the other night, and it is only fair to give the views of those who are opposed to the ideas then set forth.

It is true that the 57th Regiment is one of the most highly esteemed institutions in the city. It has a history contemporaneous with the growth of Peterborough from a town to its present status. It was represented in the Northwest Rebellion in 1885 and in the South African war fifteen years later. When the recent war broke out one hundred and twenty-eight members of the 57th Regiment went overseas with the 2nd Battalion, which was made up of drafts from the militia units in the district. That battalion was commanded by Col. McLaughlin of Bowmanville and made an honorable record in the war. It is now proposed to perpetuate the 2nd Battalion as a tribute to its achievements in actual service. If this is done it will mean the absorption of Peterborough's favorite military unit, and the battalion will be commanded by an officer residing in Bowmanville instead of a citizen of Peterborough.

Naturally the Peterborough survivors in the 2nd Battalion are in favor of the perpetuation of the unit with which they saw service. It is denied, however, that if this is done and the name of the 57th Regiment dropped the headquarters will be removed from this city to Bowmanville because the commanding officer lives in the latter place. The splendid local armories, it is pointed out, will still be utilized and remain as the headquarters. It is also stated, by way of refuting the contention of a change in the headquarters, that Col. Rogers commanded the local Dragoons while living in Toronto, and still the headquarters of that unit was not shifted.

That is the position of the affair as given to The Review by the supporters of both propositoins, and again we repeat, it is a matter for the military authorities to decide. There are distinguished local members of the 2nd Battalion who are certainly entitled to be heard with every consideration.

END OF THE COAL STRIKE.

THE RATIONAL method of settling a labor dispute is by disinterested arbitration. When the government of a country takes a hand in such matters, quick and effective action at once follows. Both parties to a dispute are likely to be willing to submit to the findings of an arbiter so powerful.

Some years ago, in 1904 to be correct, when the late Col. Roosevelt was President of the United States, there was a general coal strike in progress, that, too, just at the beginning of the winter season. The continent was threatened with a fuel famine. President Roosevelt took prompt action, but he brought executive pressure to bear not upon the strikers, but upon the mine owners. The latter were notified that work in the mines must be resumed at once, no matter what the cost. The order was obeyed.

President Wilson, it is true, threatened the men with drastic measures unless they returned to work, but he acknowledged his belief in the righteousness of their cause by securing for them an advance of fourteen per cent. in wages as against the twenty-five they asked for. This is a temporary schedule, as a commission is to be appointed to look into the merits of the contentions of the men.

The strike has been settled to the satisfaction of the men—only one of the committee voting against the settlement—and that of the public. Work was resumed at once, and the shipments of coal will be normal by the middle of next week. The situation has been saved and the benefit to be derived from sane methods of dealing with labor troubles has been demonstrated.

TRIMMING THE SHIP OF STATE.

PASSENGERS on a lake steamer, very often in a moment of excitement crowd to one side of the vessel and court disaster to themselves by threatening to capsize the craft. Realising their danger, they rush in a body to the other side, and merely reverse conditions. But give them time to think, and they will eventually guarantee their personal safety by trimming the boat. The medium course will be adopted.

Representation in the Ontario Legislature may have been one-sided. The craft was in danger of capsizing. Then the electors, regarded as passengers on the ship of state, hastened to the other extreme. Equilibrium has not yet been established, but eventually the craft will assume a normal attitude, trimmed by those on board. After both extremes have been reached, the medium course is adopted.

There is error and fallacy in the best and much of truth and righteousness in the worst of parties or factions. Elements that divorce themselves from each other after a vain attempt to succeed going it alone, will be reunited. The ship of state can never make satisfactory progress if the load which it carries is so placed as to tilt it over at a dangerous angle.

The party that controls in the future will not be representative of a single class alone. All interests will be given a place. There will be farmers and workingmen, professionals, manufacturers and educationists among the members. It matters little by what name it is known, the principles and the policies that have made the Conservative party great since the beginning of political history will once more hold the ascendancy.

The inception of the Union Governmnet in Canada was ideal statesmanship. It was not a political manoeuvre to carry the election, because no such tactics were necessary. The party that had carried on the war for three years was safe in the confidence of the people. The object in view was to give the Canadian people a chance to present a united front to the world. The leaders of the Liberal party had, by their war attitude forfeited the support of the rank and file. These would have been practically disfranchised in the election of 1917 but for the formation of the Union party, a party which it was understood was to last only for the duration of the war.

The privates in the ranks of the old Liberal party did not for all time abandon their political associations when they supported Conservative candidates in 1917. It is unjust to expect the sacrifice of them now. Personally they had nothing to gain. They have no object now to remain where they placed themselves two years ago. If they supported the Conservative Administration in a national crisis and from the loftiest of patriotic motives, they are under no obligation to continue their allegiance.

With the Liberal Unionist who accepted office the case is different. All such appear to be marked men. If they made sacrifices by entering the Union Cabinet a sacrifice that is to be brought home to them now they should be willing to endure, for sacrifices were not unusual during or as a result of the war. They certainly cannot bring any strength to the party with which they cast in their lot. Nothing is to be expected from the rank and file in the way of further support. Union Government has had its day. The time has come for the Conservative party to re-establish itself on the old foundation and to reaffirm its adherence to a sane fiscal policy for the Dominion, a policy to which its new associates have always been opposed.

The next Federal election will beyond all question be fought with the trade issue as the leading problem. That is the Conservative party's one hope. It would weaken itself beyond all chance of reparation if it attempts a compromise by way of concessions to any Ishmaelite element that may be retained in its councils.

NEW PENSION SCHEME FOR HYDRO EMPLOYES

2500 WORKERS ARE INTERESTED SICK BENEFITS ARE PROVIDED AS WELL

The Hydro-electric Power Commission of Ontario intends to provide pensions and sick benefits for its employes. The scheme is to come into effect as on November 1 last—the beginning of the fiscal year. It is to apply only to permanent employes, but does not include departmental heads. About 2,500 employes will enjoy only the sick fund benefits.

A pension will be paid to a man when he reaches 65, and has been in the service 15 years; or to a man who has been in the service 15 if he is permanently disabled. This pension will be one-eightieth of his average salary for the last five years before retiring, multiplied by the number of years he has been in the service.

The insurance plan provides for paying to the estate of a male employe upon his death a sum amounting to 5 per cent. of his salary for each year he has been in the service, providing it does not exceed twice the current salary.

For the first seven days an employe is sick he or she will be kept on the departmental pay list. After that time the employe will be transferred to the sick benefit list. The first month a certain sum will be paid, for the second month the amount will be increased, and for the third period of perhaps a month it will be further increased. These payments will be made together with certain medical supervision and amounts paid under the Workmen's Compensation plan.

A savings account will be opened for each woman employe of the commission and in this will be deposited each year she is in the service 5 per cent. of her year's salary. Whenever she leaves the service she will be paid the amount which accrues.

There will be no assessment on the employes for any of these benefits, as the cost will all be borne by the commission.

U. S. LIBERALS WILL ORGANIZE NEW PARTY

MAIN PLANK IN PLATFORM WILL BE DISSOLUTION OF MONOPOLIES

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 12.—Immediate establishment of a new national political party will be recommended to the National Conference of Liberals, in session here, by the sub-committee on political procedure, according to an announcement made today by the committee chairman, Daniel Carroll, of North Dakota.

Carrol stated in his announcement that all but two of the committeemen were in favor of the formation of a new party immediately. The two who opposed it, he said, believed it would be better to wait until 1924.

Dossolution of monopolies is the only solution of the economic and industrial problems facing the nation, according to the report of the Programme Committee, submitted today to the conference.

The committee said its report was designed to eradicate "poverty and squalidness."

The report especially assails the alleged steel, beef, oil, milling and coal trusts, and asserts that, by monopolising patents and the railroads, these organizations have precluded all others from competing with them.

Under public ownership of railroads, this particular alleged monopoly would be broken and freight cars would be distributed equally among all industries, the report says. To break up the alleged patent monopoly, it was suggested that all patents be open to use by anybody by payment to the owner of a royalty, to be fixed by the government.

HOME-MADE BREAD

Home bread-making reduces the high cost of living by lessening the amount of expensive meats required to supply the necessary nourishment to the body. The increased nutritious value of bread made in the home with should be sufficient incentive to the thoughtful housewife to give this important food item the attention to which it is justly entitled. Bread made with Royal Yeast will keep fresh and moist longer than that made with any other.

Made in Canada

Where The Relations Are Ideal

Bell Telephone Company By Considerate Treatment of Employes Have Solved Labor Problem.

Amid all the labor disputes which have characterised the present year, it is pleasant to note that many employers by wise policies of enlightened self-interest have attained a gratifying degree of harmony with their employees. The results in these cases have been not only to avoid strikes, but to build up a more or less friendly and agreeable relation between the workers and those who employ them.

A conspicuous example is the Bell Telephone Company, which about three years ago, voluntarily established a pension and benefit plan, under which last year the company paid for pensions, accident disability benefits and expenses, sickness disability benefits and death benefits, a sum of no less than $147,265.00. In addition to this, the company bears the total expense of operating the plan, which amounts to several thousand dollars per year.

This plan requires no cash contribution from the employees. The only requirement for participation in its benefits is continuous service. As soon as an employee has worked for the company continuously for two years, he or she is in a position to receive certain benefits for the plan, and the longer the continuous service exists, the more substantial are the benefits that accrue.

In the matter of sickness disability, for instance, there is a sliding scale. Employees with two years service, who are unfortunate enough to be unable to work on account of illness, receive four weeks full pay and nine weeks half pay; and the amount of full and half pay increases with length of service until an employee, whose term of employment is ten years or more, will receive full pay for thirteen weeks and half pay for thirty-nine weeks. Over $100,000.00 was paid out by the company under this heading alone in 1918.

The plan includes a pension, equal to one per cent. of the average pay for the last ten years of service, multiplied by the total years of service, and this pension may be enjoyed at the age of 60 by any employee whose term of employment has been twenty years or more.

The company also pays a death benefit in certain cases where an employee has left a wholly dependent relative.

During 1918 no less than 2188 employees received sickness disability benefits, and the amount of anxiety and privation which was obviated by this provision on the part of the company is difficult to estimate.

An indirect benefit has also accrued to the employees through the company's supervision of health conditions, and there are already evidences that the general health of the staff has been improved, owing to the insistence of the benefit fund committee that in all cases of illness proper and adequate means must be taken to effect a permanent cure, and that no employee shall return to work until he has thoroughly convalesced.

The company considers that this expenditure will return a very handsome dividend, if, as is expected, it results in the building up of an experienced staff, trained in the particular business of the company and bound to it by the same ties of enlightened self-interest which induces the company to make the outlay.

PITY THE MAN WITH THE $25,000 SALARY

(By Frank Crane.)

The $25,000 a year man is more likely to be earning his salary than the $2,500 a year man. For he ought not only to earn his own wages, but help all under him to earn theirs. If he were not there, getting that $25,000 a year, you would not be earning your $2,500; there would be no profits with which to pay you.

Cut out the $25,000 a year man, and you'd have to cut the $10,000 a year man to $5,000, the $5,000 a year man to $2,500, and the $2,500 a year man would be pounding the sidewalk looking for a job.

There's just one reason why he gets $25,000 a year; it is because he brings in $50,000 a year or so to the man that pays him.

The $25,000 a year man does not leave his pick suspended in the air when the 6 o'clock whistle blows and go home. Whatever he is at he finishes.

He is not afraid to accept responsibilities. He does not want to be guaranteed an income. He does not belong to any organization whose purpose is to insure him a certain wage and certain working conditions. He does not talk much about his rights. He may not be a good looker, a good dresser, a good mixer, a good talker, or even a good man, but he gets things done.

The trouble with you, Archibald, is that you are all these nice things but you fall down on the job.

Don't envy the $25,000 a year man. His women folks are more apt to be fools and keep his nose to the grindstone than is the sign painter's wife or the bricklayer's. Because they forget they are in the working class and try to shine among the endowed idle. Hence all manner of woe.

Sometimes the $25,000 a year man is a fool, sometimes he's tyrannical, conceited and disagreeable. But he makes good, or he doesn't stay long.

Every concern keeps a lot of $5 a day men working that are not earning their wages and ought to be fired. No concern keeps a $25,000 a year man when he begins to soldier—except he be a nephew or something like that, and then he is not called an asset, but a liability.

There are more $25,000 a year openings today than there are $2,500 openings. Cheer up.

The $25,000 a year is all earned by the man from his chin up. It's the brain.

What are you doing with yours, while you're waiting to be appreciated?

Housing Situation In English University City Is Acute.

The housing difficulty is being felt at Cambridge, England, owing to the enormous influx of undergraduates. Rooms which have been unoccupied for years are being put into a habitable condition, though this is being effected under considerable difficulties, owing to a local strike in the building trade. Considerable additions were made to college buildings just before the war, notably at Emmanuel, Pembroke, King's Magdalene, and Sidney, but these are all proving inadequate. College officers have been touring the town to obtain rooms out of college, and are still conducting their canvass, with indifferent success.

The University Lodging House Syndicate have been appealed to for help and have consented to grant licenses for rooms in houses situated within two and a half miles of Great St. Mary's Church, measured in a direct line, provided that such houses comply with the general regulations as to suitability laid down by the senate. The effect of this concession will be to bring in wide areas which have hitherto been out of bounds for university lodging purposes. The collegiate authorities are now trying again what can be done, but it appears that even under these changed circumstances many hundreds of would-be Cambridge freshmen will be unable to obtain admission to the university this October.

A novel feature of the coming term is the number of married undergraduates. These require rooms for their wives and families. All the naval and military headquarters have been ejected from the rooms they occupied in the colleges, and have found accommodation in private houses. The increased laboratory and lecture-room space which will be needed next term is another difficulty with which the university is having to cope and is being met by the putting up of army huts as temporary accommodation, work which has also been impeded by the strike.

Antiquity of the Emerald.

The emerald has been known since early times both in Europe and in certain parts of the Orient, where its attractive color and rarity have endowed it with the highest rank. Its name may be traced back to an old word which appeared in Greek as smaragdos, mentioned in Greek by Theophrastus 300 B. C.

Australian Aborigines.

As a hunter the native Australian is marvelously adjusted to his environments. His success lies in an intimate knowledge of the habits of animals. Any animal which leaves a track, however dim, in sand, on rock, or in grass falls an easy prey to the black fellow. Children are taught to track lizards and snakes over bare rocks.

Ancient Elevator.

The earliest mention of a device in any way resembling the modern elevator may be read in Vitruvius, who describes a hoisting machine invented by Archimedes. The elevator of the second century B. C. was worked by ropes coiled upon a winding drum by a capstan and levers.

HISTORIC RELICS.

Believed to Be Remains of Edward the Confessor's Habitation.

What are believed to be the remains of Edward the Confessor's palace have been discovered in Windsor Great Park by Capt. Vaughan Williams.

His attention was first drawn to the spot by seeing two moats where rabbits had unearthed some tiles like Norman bricks. On searching he found flints, sandstone and tiles. Near this spot sixty years ago stood the remains of what was believed to have been a palace. These were pulled down by the direction of Queen Victoria. The walls were twelve feet thick and were built of flint and chalk. Archaeologists put this building down as an ancient tower which Edward the Confessor built to insure more safety.

There is also what looks like the foundation of a building, which is believed to have been either a chapel or a banqueting hall. A number of spaces covered with tiles have been discovered.

Capt. Williams cleared up one matter by visiting the Crown Attorney's office in Windsor Park. There he saw a brick dated 1752, which exactly corresponds with the brick composing the wall unearthed outside the outer moat. This wall was at first thought to have been one of the piers of a drawbridge, but now it seems that it formed part of an enclosure in which George IV. kept a number of bears. This enclosure was subsequently demolished and the locality has since been known as "Bear's Rails."

It is understood that before Windsor Castle was founded there existed a palace in Windsor Forest where certain notable events happened. It consisted of an irregular group of buildings, with a tower for the purposes of defence. In Harleian manuscripts there was an illustration in illumination, representing such a house, in which a lady was seen in the act of almsgiving and earning the title of "loaf giver."

The manor of Old Windsor belonged to the Saxon Kings, and it was certain that Edward the Confessor held court there. It was at Old Windsor that the abbot of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, was consecrated in 1061, and charters were signed there in 1065. Edward, who was prevented by his nobles from going to Rome, was instructed by the Pope to spend the amount he would have expended on the trip to build a monastery, hence Westminster was built, and Windsor was given to the monks. William the Conqueror revoked the gift because he found Windsor convenient for hunting in the forest, on account of its situation, so he gave other lands in lieu thereof.

Capt. Williams says that he feels almost certain that Saxon buildings once stood inside the double moats, and that he is on the eve of more important discoveries.

Try This Way.

If some one has been unkind to us be kind to others. The great law will bring him a harvest of what he has sown. If we undertake to pay him back, evil for evil, we overstep our authority, and we also make ourselves liable to judgment for the part we take in the affair. We could just as well do something that would bring us a reward.

Wedding Custom.

The custom of throwing an old shoe after a bride is quite misapplied when it is done by her companions for luck. According to the spirit of the ceremony which is of very ancient origin, it should be done by the parent or guardian of the bride as indicating a renunciation of all authority over her.

Wanted More "Bee Jelly."

When Howard was visiting grandma he was given his first taste of honey spread on bread and butter. He liked it so much that upon arriving for a second visit he rushed in exclaiming. "O, grandma, can I have a piece of bread and butter with bee jelly on it?"

Antiquity of Gloves.

Gloves are of great antiquity, having been worn in England as long ago as in Saxon times. Practically the only change which there has ever been in styles of gloves has been in their decoration. Sometimes they were richly adorned with jewels, £5 having been paid for a pair in the fourteenth century.—St. Petersburg Times.

Wedding Ring Is Changed.

The wedding ring was not always plain, as we see it today. It was frequently highly ornamented and wrought with various designs. But as other rings began to be worn the wedding ring was made conspicuously plain. The practice, however, was long in vogue of inscribing appropriate mottoes on rings. The ring may be said to be symbolic. It is of gold and typifies purity and refinement, whereas its rotundity signifies "the round flowing of mutual love and hearty affection."

As Nature Arranges Them.

If you want to color beautifully, color as best pleases you at quiet times, not so as to catch the eye, nor to look as if it was clever or difficult to color in that way, but so that the color may be pleasant to you when you are happy and thoughtful. Look much at the morning and the evening sky, and much at simple flowers—dog-rose, wood hyacinth, violets, poppies, thistles, heather and such-like—as nature arranges them in the woods and fields.—Ruskin.

Porcupine's Quills Not "Thrown."

The spine of a porcupine, in the usual position, lie nearly flat, with their points directed backward, but when the animal is excited they are capable of being raised. The quills are loosely inserted in the skin and may, on being violently shaken, become detached, a circumstance which probably gave rise to the purely fabulous statement that the animal possesses the power of actually ejecting its quills like arrows or darts at an enemy.

ABOUT BOOTS

(By Mme. Qui Vive.)

In the good old pre-war days, when the beskirted American tourist wenth to France, she came back gurgling with admiration for everything appertaining to French wearing apparel, except shoes. For the French boots she had sneers, if not well established contempt! Stubby, horrid things! Fussed up like fancy work — bows and buckles and beads and tinsels! Never for her!

French shoes toddle down George street. And what do you think? Women who are wearing the stubby, horrid things say they never travelled life's highways so comfortably shod. Which is the surprising, solemn truth.

This idea of crowding a 4 C foot into a 6 triple A is a silly notion that has been passed along to us by the shoe clerk. For many years I was led by the persuasive gentleman, but of late I have insisted upon shoes that fit. And my own experience is amazing enough to relate. At two fashionable shoe shops clerks have refused to even show me a C width. Their scorn of me was scorching.

Men who wore army shoes will tell you something worth while. It is that footwear should be broad and ample for comfort. You won't catch one of them going back to the toothpick contour. It is a highly idiotic idea that we can improve upon the outline and shape that nature herself provided for us. It cannot be done.

The narrow shoe is productive of every brand and kind of agony that help to support the chiropodists. It pushes the big toe inward, throwing the joint out of kilter, and thus creating bunions. By the same process of squeezing it turns in the small toe and on that litle pinky it places a corn, if not a few callositites. The present-day long pointed shoe is every mbit as absurd as the old wasp-waist corset and does almost as much harm. The feet form the base of support of the entire body, and if this base is distorted and full of pain you may be sure that the wearer wil not be eager for exercise which is so necessary for her well-being and health. Ill-fitting shoes weaken the muscles and ligaments, interfere with the circulation of the blood and cause pressure on delicate nerves. Heels that are too high transfer the weight of the body from the heels where it should be, and ofttimes produce curvature of the spine. The lovely slimps who parade pulchritudinously on our highways will laugh and scoff at this, but it is the truth. I am not against high heels, nor an advocate of no heels at all, but there is a sensible medium and betwixity. Malformation of the foot is not all the damage done by frivolous footwear; the narrow sole and the high heel do not permit the foot to gain steadiness on the ground, and twisted ankles and accidents are everyday affairs. Fancy tearing through a basketball game in high heels! The comfort of old, loose, heelless slippers tells the story. Every woman loves them.

There should be sufficient breadth to the shoe. This breadth should permit the natural spread of the toes. There should also be sufficient length. The snugness should be at the instep and heel, so the foot cannot slip forward.

LET "DANDERINE" SAVE YOUR HAIR

Check ugly dandruff! Stop hair coming out and double its beauty

A little "Danderine" cools, cleanses and makes the feverish, itchy scalp soft and pliable; then this stimulating tonic penetrates to the famished hair roots, revitalising and invigorating every hair in the head, thus stopping the hair falling out, or getting thin, dry or fading.

After a few applications of "Danderine" you seldom find a fallen hair or a particle of dandruff, besides every hair shows new life, vigor brightness, more color and thickness.

Secret Service Work.

"Secret Service" in its narrow sense is the name applied to that bureau in the treasury department the duties of which as defined by law are to detect counterfeiting and to protect the president. The term "secret service" in its broader sense includes all of those agencies which detect violations of federal laws and which keep the government informed as to international relationships. Military intelligence is the chief secret service agency in the broader sense and it co-ordinates and uses all the lesser detective agencies of the government.

Age of Cedars of Lebanon.

Several efforts to calculate the age of the famous cedars of Lebanon now standing have been made by counting the rings in the heart wood of those that have fallen. These estimates, according to Prof. A. Henry of the Royal College of Sciences for Ireland, in an article in Country Life, vary from 2,230 years to 2,500 years although it may be that they are of slower growth than the specimens tested in other countries. The largest of the cedars is 13 feet in diameter.

Love's Labor Lost.

A young and enthusiastic golfer at a dinner party started to enumerate to his partner the details of a golf match that he had been playing that day. It was not until dessert was brought in that he suddenly bethought himself that he had been talking all the time; indeed, the young lady at his side had not said a single word during the progress of the meal. "I am afraid I have been boring you with this talk," he said in half apology. "Oh, no—not at all!" was the polite response. "Only, what is golf?"

Tapestries Brought High Prices.

A collection of rare and costly tapestries and furniture belonging to the estates of Augustus Kountze, James Stillman and others, was sold at the American Art galleries in New York recently, and brought a total of $57,117.50. Charles, of London, paid $9,000, the top price, for a set of four allegorical tapestries, Italian, of the sixteenth century; $8,500 for an Italian Renaissance tapestry, "Harvesting," and $5,000 for an Italian Renaissance hunting tapestry.

Jelly Plant.

Comparatively few people know, says the American Forestry Magazine, that we are getting jelly from plants. The Roselle plant has high commercial value in the Philippines, Hawaii and other Pacific islands. The plant is an annual and attains a height of seven feet. It is probably the only plant in cultivation in which the part utilized for food is the calyx which has excellent qualities for the manufacture of jelly and allied products.

Pumpernickel.

Pumpernickel is the rye bread used by the Westphalian peasants which in some other parts of Germany is regarded as a great delicacy. The loaves are sometimes 60 pounds in weight. The name is said to have originated in the saying of a French cavalry soldier, who rejected the bread with disgust, saying it was only "Bon pour Nicholas" —that is, fit or good for Nicholas, his horse.

To Get Rid of Paint Stains.

Paint spilled on a doorstep is most unsightly, and is often rather difficult to remove. In that case make a strong solution of potash and wash the step, leaving the solution to soak in. In a short time the paint will become soft and can be washed off with soap and water. Then use cold water. Paint which has been left on for some time will yield to this treatment.

She Wanted Progress.

"No, sah. Ah doan't neber ride on dem things," said an old colored lady looking in on the merry-go-round. "Why, de other day I seen dat Rastus Johnson git on an' ride as much as a dollah's worth an' git off at the very same place he got on at, an' I sez to him: 'Rastus,' I sez, 'yo' spent yo' money, but whar yo' been?' "—Boston Transcript.

In 1873, on August 1, the first cable car in the world was put into operation at San Francisco. The inventor of the cable system was Andrew Hallidie. The cable cars were introduced into Chicago eight years after their appearance on the Pacific coast and in 1885 were adopted in New York, Washington and Philadelphia and afterward in London.

SLEEPING SICKNESS MENANCES ONTARIO

PROVINCIAL HEALTH OFFICERS MAIN DOCTORS TO BE ON THE ALERT

Ontario doctors have been asked by the Provincial Health Officer to be on the alert with regard to sleeping sickness. Cases have already appeared at Point Edward, Toronto and Fort William. Although the disease is not notifiable under the Act, Dr. McCullough has requested doctors throughout the Province to notify cases so that the outbreak may be controlled.

Persons suffering from sleeping sicknesss may be aroused, but are indifferent as a rule to what is going on about them. The face often has a mask-like expression, and some cases of the disease simulate meningitis or even a cerebral hemorrhage. There is generally a temperature of 101—102.5.

NO CHRISTMAS BOXES

Imperial Veterans Will Not Get Canadian Grant This Year.

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—It will be at least six weks before cheques will be forthcoming to Imperial veterans resident in Canada, who are to benefit by the policy of equalising British and Canadian gratuities. Verification of the claims by the British Records Office is necessary, and the first batch of claims are being mailed this wek. They have to be supported by statutory declarations.

In the case of a married man, for instance, who served at the front, the Canadian gratuity was $600, while the British gratuity was only $125, so men in this class will have $475 coming to them. Single men will get $295. The former includes the allowance for the wife. One-half will be paid first and the balance in two monthly instalments.

The department has rejected the suggestion of Imperial veterans to accept discharge certificates in lieu of searching overseas records, it being pointed out that many of the certificates have been lost or thrown away.

BAT AT HOME EVERYWHERE

As a group bats are of world-wide distribution except in the inhospitable polar regions. They are real mammals and present an extraordinary variation in size, from tiny little creatures, almost as small and fragile as butterflies, to the huge fruit bats, with a spread of wings like that of a wild goose.

The heads of bats are strangely sculptured, some being smoothly contoured and shaped like those of little foxes; others appear like miniature bulldogs; and still others have curious cartilaginous nose-leaves upright on the muzzle. Some have the entire face molded into a hideous mask repulsive to look upon.

Their habits are equally varied to meet special conditions: Some are eaters of fruit alone; others feed solely upon insects, while others bite other mammals, including man, for the purpose of drinking the oozing blood, upon which they subsist. All are nocturnal, but some appear late in the afternoon, before the sun sets. Most species, however, wait until the shades of night have covered the earth.

Throughout the world the majority of the species of bats feed upon insects, but there are many fruit eaters. The teeming insects and plant life of the tropics afford a never-failing food supply, and the center of abundance of these animals is found there. In some localities between 20 and 30 kinds of bats exist, with such vast numbers of individuals that the bat population far outnumbers all other kinds of mammals combined.

HAS DOUBLE STEERING WHEEL

Inventors Making Interesting Tests With Vessel That Makes Use of a Two-Blade Rudder.

Some interesting tests have been made recently with a dual rudder, illustrated in Popular Mechanics Magazine, in an attempt to demonstrate the possibility of eliminating the reversing turbines of ships. The action is described as follows:

"For normal cruising the plates are folded together. A double steering wheel is employed. When locked, the two members turn as one. At other times, when the two wheels are thrown in opposite directions, the leaves of the rudder are adjusted to desired angles. The equipment gives a boat a brake that is quick-acting; it enables reversement of direction with the engine running full speed ahead, and permits a craft to be turned in its own length. The demonstration boat is able to reverse direction from full speed ahead in nine seconds."

Seeing, Hearing and Tasting!

The resident minister of a very small Western town is quite an enthusiastic worker for Uncle Sam, and at a recent Red Cross benefit social was making a very patriotic speech while selling Thrift stamps.

An old gentleman in the crowd had just returned from a visit to a larger town where patriotism—and some other things—were more plentiful, and being in a very convivial mood, he was buying stamps with more abandon than the rest of the crowd. The preacher, not recognizing his condition, and feeling that such a show of patriotism ought to be commended, paused in the sale to remark: "Now just look at Brother J—. He has just returned from our neighboring town, and he saw and heard what they have over there."

A wag in the rear of the building called out, glibly: "You bet he did! And he not only seen it and heard it, but he's brought some of it back with him."—Indianapolis News.

Marshal Foch a Golfer.

"In the days before the war Marshal Foch was an enthusiastic golfer," says the London Express, "and took special lessons from a professional. He played a slow and cautious game, with a very useful handicap of 12. He had quite an amusing hatred of losing balls, and in the evening after dinner would stroll out with a bag and collect any he could find. Once he came in triumphantly after a long walk in the dusk with quite a collection found with the aid of an electric flashlight. He used to regret that his countrymen did not take to the game with any enthusiasm."

Why Prices Rise.

This is an actual occurrence in Columbus. A woman who had occasion to use a common drug in making a home preparation, bought a pound of it at a drug store. She had often bought it for seven cents a pound, but this time was charged 22 cents.

"How is that?" she asked the proprietor. "I never paid more than seven cents a pound for that anywhere before."

"But," expostulated the druggist, "prices have gone way up. Why, I have to pay seven cents a pound for that myself!"—Columbus Dispatch.

The Pest.

American soldiers speak of the louse as a "cootie." The French fighter calls it a "toto," and the British a "coddler." Among all the armies the pests are known as "trench rabbits" or "seam squirrels." The significant thing is that never are they called flee. The soldier has the same horror of vermin that he had in civilian life, and the very name "louse" carries the suggestion of degradation.

Col. M. A. Colquhoun, D. S. C., will rejoin the service of the Massey-Harris Company in Brantford after an absence of over five years.

Gave Life to Save Others

For most conspicuous bravery and self-sacrifice on the 11th October, 1918, northeast of Cambrai, when with attacking troops which came under heavy enfilade machine-gun fire from a neighboring village.

Rushing forward with nine volunteers he shot the crew of an enemy machine gun and turning it on the enemy, enabled his party to reach the village. He then rushed another machine gun, killed the crew, captured an officer and ten of the enemy and thereby cleared the end of the village.

Lieut. Algie, having established his party, went back for reinforcements, but was killed when leading them forward. His valor and personal initiative in the face of intense fire saved many lives and enabled the position to be held.—Official Record.

Cambral was occupied by the Canadians October 9, 1918. The German army fell back along the Escaut Canal towards Valenciennes, pursued by the British forces. The banks of the canal were heavily wooded and the advance of the Canadians along the eastern shore was stiffly contested.

The second division Canadians passed on the left of Naves during October 10. About three miles northeast of this village an old sugar refinery, strongly garrisoned, took heavy toll of the passing troops. The Canadians reached a point several miles further on, but at midnight, having been relieved on the right by Imperial troops, they returned to the position near the sugar refinery.

Early on the morning of the 11th orders came through that the 20th Battalion was to attack Iwuy at nine o'clock. While the Canadians were waiting the hour of attack the Germans poured a heavy enfilade fire on the lines, and many men were killed before leaving the trenches.

The enemy had seized all positions of advantage around Iwuy. The embankment of a railway running into the town was garrisoned by machine gunners. On the outskirts of the village a group of houses near the railway provided additional cover for the gunners, and another group of houses on the right were garrisoned strongly. Heavy enfilade fire was being directed on the advancing companies of the 20th.

Lieut. Algie was in command of "B" company. At the east end of the village he saw the enemy bringing up more guns to completely enfilade the Canadian position. He collected nine volunteers and charged the gun posts, shot the crew of one enemy machine gun with his revolver and turned the gun around on the enemy. This action permitted his men to cross the railway embankment into the eastern part of the town. Lieut. Algie then rushed another machine gun, killed the crew and cut off an officer and ten men, who surrendered to the Canadian. He then turned the guns on the enemy and cleared that part of the village.

Having established his men in the village and shown them how to use the enemy machine guns, Lieut. Algie went back to the battalion for reinforcements, returning to the attack in a short time. Running ahead of his men, he advanced towards another group of houses on the right of the position already taken. The German gunners in one of the houses watched the Canadian officer coming and waited until he was quite near, then turned the whole force of the gun on him, pouring the shot directly across his chest and heart. He fell, killed instantly.

The Canadian leader gone, the Boche counter-attacked. Four enemy tanks bore down on the remnant of the 20th, which fought heroically and were able to hold the posts already established, until the 27th Battalion, advancing on the left, occupied the village and relieved the situation. About three o'clock in the afternoon the body of Lieut. Algie was found, lying across the village street in front of the house from which the enemy had directed the fire upon him. The Victoria Cross was awarded posthumously for his heroism in face of intense fire and for his gallantry in protecting the lives of the men serving with him.

Wallace Lloyd Algie, only son of James Algie, M.D., Toronto, was born, at Alton, Ont., in 1891. His father is of Canadian Scottish descent; his mother was a native of Devonshire, England. Before enlistment Mr. Algie was in the service of the Bank of Toronto in Vancouver and later in Toronto. When he was able to do so he played in the 48th Highlanders band. Early in the war he took an officer's course and graduated as lieutenant, but on seeing that his services were not required in that capacity at the time, he enlisted as a private in April, 1916. He was granted his commission overseas in the 20th Battalion.

As a boy, tales of heroism and military exploits, especially stories of Claverhouse and British heroes of the Indian Mutiny and Crimean war, held great interest for Wallace Lloyd Algie, and on one of his leaves while overseas he visited the ancestral home of the Algies in Scotland and viewed the monument at the Cross of Paisley raised to the memory of James Algie and Thomas Park, of Covenanter fame and dating back to Bothwell Brig.—Carolyn Cornell in Toronto Star Weekly.

COMMUNITY HALLS NEEDED.

Athletic Fields Part of Plan for Rural District Development.

It is well recognised that social as well as economic conditions have much to do with community development and well being. While in many rural sections a very desirable condition socially exists, there has been noted for some time the need of proper meeting places or of desirable centres for community gatherings and for organising community effort.

Having these facts in mind the Legislature of Ontario at its last session passed an "Act respecting the establishment of community halls and athletic fields in rural districts." This act was introduced by the Provincial Minister of Agriculture and provides for giving financial assistance to rural communities for the purpose of erecting community halls, or for providing such accommodation in consolidated schools.

In order to safeguard against the possibility of these halls being unsuitable for the purposes intended, the act provides regulations, one of which specifies that the hall shall include an auditorium or assembly room with moveable seats, stage and other equipment; reading room, including library and kitchenette. The auditorium must have a level floor and be suitable for recitals, dramatic entertainments and the discussion of public questions, it being intended that such a building should be available for all meetings and gatherings of a community nature in the broadest sense of the meaning of these terms, and consistent with the regulations made under the act.

It is also provided that each community hall shall have in connection with it at least three acres of land—adjoining the building or in close proximity to it—this land to be used for sports, picnics and outdoor gatherings. The Ontario Department of Agriculture undertakes to offer assistance in the erection of these halls by offering prepared plans of buildings, and will make a grant to the municipality desiring to erect a community hall up to 25 per cent. of the cost of the building, the grant not to exceed the sum of $2,000. The cost of the building shall be exclusive of the cost of the land for the hall and adjoining grounds. These halls are to be erected and supervised by a board of management in each township or municipality.

The plans when not supplied by the department must be approved by it before building commences. Authority is given under the act for municipalities throughout Ontario to raise the necessary money for building these halls by the issue of debentures as provided by the Ontario municipal act. The provincial regulations state that every hall erected under the act shall be available for any public gathering of an educational, fraternal, religious or social nature, or for the discussion of any public question, and no organization shall be denied use of the building for religious, fraternal or political reasons. Subject to the regulations of the board as to hours and discipline, the reading room and library are to be open to all.

This act is designed as a measure for making rural life more attractive than it has been hitherto, and to fill what has been a long felt want among the residents of rural municipalities throughout Ontario.

It Worked.

McMackerel was defending a man in a murder case, according to an exchange. The case looked hopeless; the prosecution was soon done. Then McMackerel rose. In a quiet conversational tone McMackerel began to talk to the jury. He just described in vivid colors a pretty country cottage hung with honeysuckle, a young wife preparing supper, and the rosy youngsters waiting at the gate to greet their father on his return home for the evening meal. Suddenly McMackerel stopped. He drew himself up to his full height. Then striking the table with his fist, he cried, in a voice that thrilled every bosom: "Gentlemen, you must send him back home to them!" A red-faced juror choked and blurted out: "By George, sir, we'll do it!" McMackerel without another word, sat down, and ten minutes later the jury brought in a verdict of acquittal. The prisoner wept as he shook his counsel's hand. "No other man on earth could have saved me as you have done, Mr. McMackerel," he sobbed. "I ain't got no wife or family, sir."

The Powder He Wanted.

Sir Arthur Currie is fond of telling the following story:

In the early days of the war, says Sir Arthur, an old farmer, living way back on the far Western prairies, was feeling rather out of sorts, and sent his eighteen-year-old son, George, to the nearest settlement, ten miles distant, for a seidlitz powder.

Arrived there, George promptly enlisted. He fought right through the war, was twice wounded, rose to commissioned rank, and returned recently to the farm, his breast covered with medals and decorations, including the V.C. and the French Croix de Guerre.

Then the old man replied:—

"George," he said, "wot have ye done with my seidlitz powder?"

What About It?

While polling one of the Toronto wards during the recent election campaign a canvasser, after enquiring for the man of the house and learning that he was not at home, asked the following question of the woman who had answered his knock: "What party does your husband belong to?" This was the reply: "I'm the party my husband belongs to. What about it?"

PLANS FOR HART HOUSE

WILL INTRODUCE NEW ERA AT TORONTO UNIVERSITY.

Important New Buildings Have Just Been Opened Where Students Can Get Together and Acquire That Culture Which Can Only Be Found In Community Life and Which Is Quite Distinct From the Influences of Academic Teaching.

The story of the University of Toronto is a part of the history of Upper Canada. In 1791 Sir John Simcoe before leaving England for the unbroken wilderness wrote to Sir Joseph Banks, the president of the Royal Society, suggesting that "a college of the higher class would be eminently useful in Upper Canada, and would give a tone of principles and manners that would be of infinite support to Government." The arms of Governor Simcoe with those of eight other famous founders of education in Ontario, appear grouped about the arms of the University of Toronto in the south window of the dining hall of Hart House, which was formally opened on November 12. Grouped with Sir John Simcoe are Sir Charles Bagot, Sir John Colborne, Sir Peregrine Maitland, the Earl of Elgin, Bishop Strachan, the Hon. Edward Blake, the Hon. Robert Baldwin, and Dr. Egerton Ryerson. The arms of the university are placed between those of Ryerson and Colborne, while the arms of John Strachan appear between those of Blake and Baldwin. The historical importance of the names selected and their grouping may well stimulate thought among future generations of students who will dine in this magnificent hall. What is really significant is that the new institution is to be connected in the minds of its founders with the history of the Canadian people and is to realize the ideals of the great statesman of the past.

Hart House is a gift from the Estate of Hart A. Massey to the University of Toronto. The original scheme was conceived in 1910, and was at first intended to be a building containing a Students' Union, a hall and a Y.M.C.A. This conception has since been extended in all directions, and the beautiful building presented to the university includes gymnasia of all kinds, one of the largest swimming pools on the continent, a dining hall which will seat about three hundred, a theatre to seat five hundred, a small chapel, a library, music room, billiard room, club and committee rooms of all kinds—in a word, accommodation for every form of student life and activity apart from the strictly academic work of the class-rooms. The opening of this wonderful building synchronizes happily with the termination of the war and with a new era in the history of the University of Toronto. It will be possible to give to the students returning from military life and to the younger generation who are coming up in so great numbers, a social and a communal life which has not hitherto existed at Toronto. The old era is ended when students drifted through college entirely unsupervised and exposed to the temptations of life in a large city, never coming in contact with their professors except in the class-room and learning little there except the matter required for examinations. Hart House is designed to bring students and staff together upon common ground; it teaches very definitely by the silent symbolism of its walls that life is more than learning and personality more precious than mind.

And so the whole university will gradually be compelled to alter its attitude towards the student. He is neither raw material in the commercial sense nor an employe as the employer understands the term, nor a private as the militarist uses that word, nor is he any longer a mere pupil or a child; he is a man and not yet a grown man, and the full duty of the professor will be performed only when in addition to forming the student's mind he binds him to himself as a friend. Life in the University of Toronto in the years before the war was often very barren and very desolate for many students who came up young and unformed and received unhappily more scorn than sympathy. Hart House has set itself a great and noble task.

One lingers longest in the Great Hall with its magnificent windows and soaring roof. A noble quotation from Milton's "Areopagitica" runs around the wainscot, singularly appropriate to the room and to the experiences of the recent war. Although the ends of the hall are adorned with the arms of various universities richly painted in heraldic colors on the panels of the wainscot, it is upon the severe effect of line that the beauty of the hall depends. The oak ceiling is to be left to weather to a natural color, unstained by paint. In the windows, however, there is much of imagination, for there have been inserted at irregular intervals quarrels of the greatest diversity of design and suggestion. Indeed, in every part of the building there is evidence of the most careful thought and personal supervision. The idea which was in the minds of the donors has been woven into the fabric of the whole. Infinite pains have been spent upon details, and as in the old Main Building the architect succeeded in expressing and making articulate a beautiful academic spirit, so in the domestic beauty of Tudor Gothic the very spirit which it is hoped will be fostered among the students.

With all the appliances of a luxurious club Hart House is not a club; it is a community to which the whole body of male students will belong.

Handy Regulator.

An attachment invented in Europe enables a person in any seat in an automobile to regulate its speed without the knowledge of the driver.

Harriston utilizes between 200 and 300 horsepower of hydro, and have been notified to reduce it to 130, because of the scarcity of power.

WAR PROFITEER IN HOLLAND

He Has Grown to Surprisingly Large Numbers and Is Always an Object of Contempt.

Though he has lined his pockets with gold the Dutch war profiteer is a marked man, Isaac F. Marcosson writes in the Saturday Evening Post. I was walking down the Hoogstraat—the leading retail business street in Rotterdam—one day last June, when my companion, a widely known Dutchman, tugged at my sleeve, pointed to a man driving in a smart new dog cart and said: "He's an 'ower.'"

"What is that?" I asked.

"A war profiteer," he replied.

I then discovered that the Dutch have coined this phrase to indicate the despised type. It is a combination of the first letters of the two Dutch words Oorlog winst, which means war profits. When pronounced it sounds like "ower."

Holland "has the number" of these gentry. They are spotted wherever they go, and by an interesting system. It was explained to me by a Dutchman in this fashion: "Whenever you see a man with a new motor car or a new carriage you can put him down as a profiteer. No self-respecting Dutchman will buy a new vehicle these days. Besides—as far as the motor is concerned—petrol is scarce and too high for the ordinary man. Some profiteers try to disguise their cars by buying low motor car numbers."

The profiteers have grown to such numbers in The Hague alone they occupy a whole residential district. By a fitting irony it is located near the peace palace. Here they have taken possession of scores of imposing residences, whose owners have not been able to maintain them under war conditions. It is the domain of the Dutch new rich. Holland imposes a tax of 30 per cent on war profits. Since 1915 it has yielded the government nearly $100,000,000, which would mean a gross total of nearly $300,000,000. But these actual taxes are about as fair an index to real figures as the inheritance tax in America is to real inheritances. Besides, there is the huge pool of untraceable profits garnered by the farmers, who have been among the principal profiteers.

LEARN BEST FARM METHODS

Modern Principles of Agriculture Being Instilled Into the Youth of Our Ally Italy.

The use of scientific farming methods is spreading and developing in Italy; the eliminating of waste and the replacing of the old-fashioned devices is becoming a fact in the fertile land south of the Alps. One of the most useful agencies for popularising these modern methods are agricultural institutions where boys are taught the principles of modern farming.

The department of civil affairs of the American Red Cross has recently given material assistance to one of these schools of agriculture established by the Salesian Fathers in the fields just outside the Porta Furba, one of the historic gateways of Rome. This assistance has been conveyed through an Italian organization, engaged in work similar to that carried on by the A. R. C. and known as the "Comitate pe gli Orfani de Constadini Morti in Guerra." The boys of the school, all orphans of peasant soldiers, are given training in scientific and practical farming, the object being to strengthen their attachment to the soil, also to convert them into good and intelligent farmers. Lectures and classroom instruction are accompanied by field work with modern tools, under the direct supervision of the younger fathers of the institution, who work side by side with the boys in the fields, teaching and demonstrating.

WHEN THE ANNAMITES FEAST

Their Camp Cooks Prepare Meals Which Are Unlike Any Served Up to the Other Allies.

During a day of repose I took occasion to visit an Annamite camp, writes Le Roy Baldridge in Asia Magazine. A bit of French landscape has been turned into Annam. Here one finds neither "Adrian" barracks nor old stone farmhouses with roofs of red tile. Instead are the pagodas of the Orient, artistically fashioned of trees, bamboos, branches and straw. As we pass the kitchen we see at once that the dejeuner being prepared is not for Frenchmen. Most prominent is a kettle three feet in diameter containing rice. Which is the one thing a Poilu cannot be forced to eat! Before the cook clamps back the lid we notice in the center of the white steaming mass a bowl of onions for flavoring. Squatted near by, the assistant cook with his couteau—a broad-ended, curved Chinese blade two feet in length—chops up meat into little squares as he chants something with an appropriate rhythm the while. A driver comes for his meal. The cook drops a ladleful of rice on one side of the extended plate and on the other a little cube of boiled meat and in the center a splash of sauce. The sauce is the mystery. No Frenchman could explain it to me except in terms of violent gesticulation. Then instead of taking out a "couteau d'Apache" as all the rest of us do, and starting by slicing off a hunk of dark army bread from the loaf which every Poilu keeps concealed somewhere about his person, our yellow comrade produces two sure-enough chop sticks from an inner pocket, and, sitting down on the running board of his truck, enters upon that fascinating feat of dining against the laws of gravity.

AFTER "ZEMPSHUN" MONEY

Darky Had Somewhat Misunderstood the Situation, But He Was Used to Disappointment.

Trailed by his wife and 11 children, ranging from stout cornfield hands to bow-legged toddlers, an old darky made his way from office to office in the federal building at Asheville, N. C., seeking his "zempshun."

Finally reaching the city exemption board, he said: "Boss, I done come for my zempshun money." The clerk did not understand him. "You mean your pension money, don't you?" queried the clerk. The old man shook his head. "No, sir, boss; I mean de $2,000 de gubment 'lows married folks."

Further inquiry disclosed that the old man had heard some one say the government allowed the head of a family $2,000 exemption under the income tax law, and he understood this to mean that the government would pay him $2,000.

He accepted the news that there was nothing coming to him philosophically.

"Jest like after tuther wah," he remarked. "Dey say den us darkies gwine for to git a mule apiece and we ain't nebber got none."

Watch the Exhaust.

A government bulletin is authority for the statement that the greatest single factor in the operation of the steam plant is the way in which the exhaust steam problem is handled.

THOUSAND WINNERS RODE BY WOODBURN

FAMOUS ENGLISH FLAT-RACER DIES AFTER 40 YEARS OF TURF LIFE

London, Dec. 12.—All followers of English flat-racing will regret to learn that James Woodburn, the well known jockey, is dead from cancer. He gave 40 years of his life to the turf, and during that period rode over 1,000 winners. He won two Lincolnshire Handicaps, four Liverpool Cups, two Manchester Cups, The Oaks, One Thousand Guineas, Royal Hunt Cup and the Grand Prix de Paris. In 1893 he rode the late Sir John Blundell Maple's Dame President in the One Thousand Guineas, in which the same owner had Stiffleuse, ridden by T. Loats. Before the race the two jockeys had a bet of a suit of clothes that one would beat the other, and although Stiffleuse was favorite, Woodburn managed to win by a head on his mount, which started at 33 to 1. In 1892 at the Liverpool spring meeting, Woodburn accomplished the "hat trick," winning the Union Jack Stakes, Prince of Wales Plate and the Molyneux Stakes.

A Fair-Minded Women.

"I forgot myself and spoke angrily to my wife," remarked Mr. Meekton.

WILDE CLAIMS A VICTORY OVER SHARKEY

SAYS HIS BLOWS WERE CLEANER AND THAT HE FORCED THE FIGHTING

Syas Jimmy Wilde of his recent bout with Sharkey at Milwaukee:

"I understand that all the decisions have gone against me," said Wilde. "Bit I am positive, nay, certain, that had the bout been held in England I would have won easily. I did not think there was any doubt about it, even though I did not box as good as usual. Let me ask you a few questions.

"Wh loanded the cleaner blows? Who did all the forcing of the bout? Who was it that did the clinching and sought the clinches?"

"I know I was not in the best of condition for the battle. But even so I think I won, and won handily. Sharkey's blows were mostly on my elbows and around my head and shoulders. He crossed and shook me once in the third round, but I was never in danger, and was never bothered by his blows."

DENOUNCE HOME RULE

Dublin, Dec. 12.—At the meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland, held in Dublin, the Grand Master, Sir James Stronge, who presided, said that Home Rule in any shape or form would be repudiated. The contention that Ireland ever was a nation was denied emphatically. The treason and treachery of the Sinn Feiners was strongly denounced, and Orangemen were called upon to perfect their organization so as to be prepared for any emergency.

BAN JOHNSTON WINS FIVE TO THREE

FAITHFUL FIVE VOTE WITH HIM ON EVERY QUESTION

Nwe York, Dec. 12.—The first blood is to President Ban Johnston in the American League batle. His faithful five—Washington, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit and St. Louis—lined up behind him on every question at the annual meeting yesterday against New York, Boston and Chicago.

The sesion was a merry row and it broke up with the three insurgents beaten on every point, but threatening legal proceedings all down the line.

Points of Attack

A resolution to elect a new president in place of Johnston was defeated by five votes to three, and the new board of directors, consisting of Frank Navin, Detroit; Ben Minor, Washington; Thomas Shibe, Philadelphia, and P. D. Ball, St. Louis, were elected by the same vote. Navin was elected as vice-president in like manner. A resolution to play a schedule of 154 games in 1920 was virtually all the baseball business transacted.

HIS DAY OF FATE

Mickie Will Remember Incident as Great Victory.

After All, Fear is as Tough an Enemy for Some Boys as the Boches—Encouragement Will Work Wonders.

I cut down the woods road lined by dugouts and emplacements to see the boys before they started on their raid. I went to the very end of the woods, but I was too late. There, far down the white road, I could see the little khaki figures swinging along, Maude Radford Warren writes in the Saturday Evening Post. One, at the end, seemed much larger than the others. Then I could see that it was coming back. I waited. Soon I saw that the figure was Mickie. He came toward me, his head lowered.

"What's the trouble, Mickie?" I asked.

"Forgot my gas mask," he mumbled, "and the lieutenant sent me back."

He didn't meet my eyes; poor little Mickie, only nineteen, hating rats and jumping at a loud noise, lazy and soft and fond of an easy bed! I put my hand on his arm.

"Oh, Mickie," I said, "last time you were chosen for a party—the first time you were put on a real job—you had cramps. A boy with an Irish name shouldn't act this way. Don't you know that the boys already suspect you, and that the lieutenant is only giving you the benefit of the doubt? The next time anything like this happens to you be'll be certain, and then he'll put you in all the dangerous places. If you run away then he'll have you shot for cowardice. If you would just face it once you'd feel different. Nothing is ever so bad when we are going through it as we thought it would be before we got to it. Please, Mickie, take my gas mask and go back."

All honor to the poor shaky lad that he did not try to excuse himself on the score that I should need the gas mask myself. He let me fasten it on him. Then I lent him my lucky four leaf clover to wear as a mascot, and without speaking at all he started back down the white road.

I returned through the woods, and anyone can know my thoughts: What if anything should happen to Mickie? What would his mother feel if she knew the responsibility I had taken? And why, if one came to that, had any woman the right to pray: "Not death to my son, O. God; some other woman's son?"

If I had a son of soldier age I hope I'd have the courage not to pray for him except deep down. And I'm glad the mothers and wives and sweethearts of all these soldier lads are thousands of miles away from the battlefields. It's sort of wearing to see a man you care for put on his weapons and turn his back to you and walk down a camouflaged road. The real comfort is that after all the danger is very much less than it seems. We have to remember always that a small percentage of men are badly wounded; a smaller still killed, and the huge majority of shells and bullets never harm anything except earth and trees.

Mickie was chattering of his adventures with his chin up when I next saw him. It was not the same Mickie. Only he would not meet my eyes. I found my gas mask later on the Y counter. To this hour Mickie has avoided me; he cannot forgive me because I saw his greatest shame and the beginning of his conquering. Some day he will.

Life of Concrete Ship.

A false impression seems to have been taken from some remarks of R. J. Wig, chief engineer of the concrete ship division of the Emergency Fleet corporation, relative to the short life of a concrete ship. He says, in correcting this error, "that experiments and investigations have shown that concrete ships will last a minimum of several years without any protection whatever. The application of protective coatings are certain to extend their life several years, and with the further developments of protective means upon which we are now working, I believe the concrete ship can be made as permanent as steel, if not more so. He further stated that if the concrete ship is built of the new concrete mixture developed by the Emergency Fleet corporation, the ship will be 20 per cent lighter than the wooden ship.

No Place for "Slacker."

Late-comers, drifters-in who are given to offering apologies for "half-done" work, and all other representatives of the make-believe element are so many discordant notes wherever one finds them, and if such people delude themselves with the idea that their code of thinking and doing will make life's ways any easier, a gigantic disappointment is in store for them.

The world is large and offers opportunities to the man or woman who proves his or her worth, but for the slacker it has absolutely no use, nor for the individual who, unthinkingly, perhaps, is prone to play a slacker's part.

Complete Rout.

"Have you lost control over them?"

"Absolutely, all highest. We can't even get them to stop long enough to poison the wells as they beat it for home."

Chatham Water Works by-law for the raising of $600,000 to bring water from Lake Erie was defeated on its third reading on the City Council.

KILLING THE WALRUS.

Will This Mammal Follow the Buffalo to Oblivion?

The killing off of the walrus had far more than anything else to do with the peril of starvation which menaced the very existence of the Eskimos only a few years ago. Reindeer, imported from Siberia, have saved them, but to them the loss of the gigantic marine mammal is a really dreadful misfortune.

The walrus is one of the most useful creatures provided by a bountiful providence for the benefit of mankind, and since time immemorial it has been the main dependence of the Eskimos.

There are to-day comparatively few walrus left alive, and the prospect is that before long this valuable species will be virtually exterminated. Persistent slaughter has reduced its numbers to such a point that there is no longer much profit in hunting it for commercial purposes—wherein lies the only hope for its survival.

Hunters seek the beast for its tusks, which are of very fine ivory; for its hide, which makes first-rate leather, and even for its whiskers, which furnish picks for opium pipes. To the Eskimo it is (or was) food, clothing, house, utensils (from bones and tusks) and most other necessaries of life.

More than half a century ago the whalers, responding to a commercial demand for ivory, turned their attention to the walrus and proceeded to wipe them out systematically. Sometimes as many as 2,000 of the animals were slaughtered on a single cake of ice merely for their tusks. Thus to-day a walrus is hardly to be found in waters where the creatures used to be so numerous that their bellowings were heard above the roar of the waves and the grinding of the ice floes.

The poor animals had no chance at all. Usually the method adopted was to approach a herd of walrus on the ice, and after picking off the most alert bulls from a safe distance with rifles slaughter the rest at leisure.

A Pearl Diver.

He was just out of the army. His thoughts were on the future. His old clerking job had no appeal for him. He wanted no more prosaic counter-jumping. The war had given him a new point of view. His new work must be in the great outdoors and touched with romance and adventure.

Pondering his problem as he walked the street, his eyes fell upon a building, the front of which was covered with placards. It was an employment agency. He glanced with casual interest over the assortment of odd jobs offered. He thrilled with sudden excitement as he encountered a sign which read:

Wanted—Three pearl divers; $15 and board.

There was the job for him. He immediately thought of the romance of the South Seas, of diving into crystal ocean depths and bringing up lustrous pearls destined to gleam on the ivory throats of beautiful women in the palaces of the rich and noble.

"I'd like to try one of those pearl diving jobs," he sputtered.

"Have you had any experience as a pearl diver?" asked the agent.

"Not exactly, but I'm a darned good swimmer."

"What are you trying to do, kid somebody?"

"No, that's a fact. I'm a good diver, too. I've held my breath under water 45 seconds. Where is this pearl diving job. Samoa or the coast of Ceyon?"

"It's down King street, in a restaurant. A 'pearl diver,' silly, is slang for 'dishwasher.'"

The war veteran in quest of romance fled.

Historical Knowledge Important.

A man ignorant of the past of his nation is not qualified to have anything to do with its present or future. To work understandingly we must know what this nation of ours is for—what is the plan and purpose.—Myron W. Reed.

Ring Up the Gods.

In China many temples are provided with a bell at the entrance, and when a worshiper enters he gives the rope a pull to ring the bell in order that the gods may be notified of his coming and be at hand to attend to his prayers.

Atrocious.

H. G. Wells brought back with him from the Balkans—he explored the Balkans before the war—a pair of Bulgarian boots, which he sometimes wears in the privacy of his Sussex home.

Joseph Conrad visited Mr. Wells recently and found him attired in these boots.

Mr. Conrad studied the boots a long time, for they were remarkable—of soft red leather, the toes pointed and curled up, the fronts embroidered with gold thread and strips of white fur about the tops.

"In heaven's name, Wells," said Mr. Conrad, "where did you get those boots?"

Mr Wells, coloring a little, thrust his feet beneath his chair.

"I bought them," he confessed, "in Bulgaria."

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Conrad, "I've heard a lot about Bulgarian atrocities, but I never expected to come across a pair of them in Sussex."

All He Wanted to Do.

When David Jackson, negro, of Brooklyn, was arrested for failing to register in the draft, he resented the remarks of officials who were convinced he was trying to avoid service. At indictment having been returned, he was arraigned before the United States district court. "Ah can fight any ten Germans you pick out. Just hold up the first ten Huns that come along here, and Ah'll show you what Ah can do. Ah'll lick them one at a time or all together, and not even use a gun."

"Do you want to go into the army?" asked Judge Garvin.

"Ah sure do," replied Jackson.

"Why didn't you register?"

"Oh, Ah know nothin' about your funny old laws," said the negro. "All Ah want to do is fight."

LOST SCULPTURE OF REIMS

Works of Art of Unfortunate City That Rivaled Those of the Greek School.

Four years ago the sculpture of Reims was one of the three great, original groups in France, the others being Chartres and Amiens. How they escaped, heaven knows, but they did. Saint Denis, Senlis and Laon, equal in beauty and in quality, fell easy prey to one set of sodden savages or another until only a few precious fragments are left, mutilated almost beyond recognition. Paris has been further degraded by barbarous restoration, and therefore Chartres remains as the exemplar of the high hieratic school of the twelfth century, Amiens of the supreme fulfillment of the thirteenth; for the great gray cliffs of Reims, with their matchless flowering of inconceivable, incredible statues have been blasted by shell and calcined by fire, and the exquisite sculpture of all the craftsmen of France has crackled, crumbled and fallen into indistinguishable dust.

I think it was the greatest sculpture of the middle ages; greater than Chartres, for this was merely a triumphant detail of architecture; greater than Amiens, since it was less cleverly naturalistic, more Greek in its proportion and line, and more vital and varied in its vivid characterization, writes Ralph Adams Cram in the Yale Review. Medieval sculpture is often dealt with as inferiority, patronizingly commended as all very well, considering the time. I regard it as a school of sculpture that stands on the same level with that of Greece. Here at Reims were many schools, many masters and each following had its own personal qualities. In all, however, we find a truly Greek quality of line and composition, a sense of dignity and power that is unique, vivid and convincing characterization, and an indwelling devotion and religious passion that find their match neither before nor since.

FROWNED ON ALL LUXURIES

At Many Times in Different Periods an Effort Has Been Made to Enforce Simplicity.

Luxury taxation is by no means a new idea. In Rome, more than 2,000 years ago the Oppian law enacted that "no woman should possess more than half an ounce of gold, or wear a dress of different colors, or ride in a carriage in the city or within a mile of it except on occasions of public religious ceremonies." In 187 B. C. a law was passed to limit the number of guests at entertainments.

A limit was set on the cost of funerals and of funeral monuments. And there would certainly be some outcry in this country against the methods of Julius Caesar, who had officers stationed in the market place to seize provisions forbidden by law, and sent soldiers to feasts to remove illegal eatables!

In our own country, the fourteenth century found extravagance in dress rampant, and during the reign of Edward III laws were made to restrain it. Food, also, has been regulated by old English laws. In the reign of Edward II a proclamation was issued against extravagant catering in the castles of "great men."—London Tit-Bits.

Everything Was All Right.

One of the policemen who took part in the bandit fight on Montgall avenue the other day called his home immediately after hostilities ceased, to assure his wife that he was not injured. His wife was in the apartment upstairs, but his mother-in-law was there and answered the telephone. She took the message and then went upstairs to reassure her daughter. "Now, don't get excited," she said, "for there's nothing serious. Now, everything will be all right, but you know the police have had a big fight with some train robbers out by the Belt line, and your husband—"

The wife slowly, softly, slipped from her chair in a dead faint. Ten minutes later she was revived. Then she said: "Well, go on, tell me the rest."

"—And he called up to say he was all right, and will tell you about it at supper time."—Kansas City Star.

Electric Cast Iron.

A development of war conditions in the steel industry of the United States has been the demonstration of the possibility of making pig iron and iron castings direct from steel scrap in an electric furnace—something never accomplished before. It has been claimed that such iron, cast in the form of castings, is far superior to the same castings made from ordinary pig iron, melted and cast. Tests of this new iron recently made at Columbia university demonstrate its high quality. Its tensile strength was shown to be 40,730 to 45,030 pounds per square inch, much higher than that of ordinary cast iron.—Scientific American.

Rice Culture Progress.

The culture of rice is alluded to in the Talmud, and there is evidence that it was grown in the valley of the Euphrates before 400 B. C. It was taken into Persia from India, and later into Spain by the Arabs. Thence its culture was introduced into Italy about A. D. 1468.

HIS COSTLY DERBY

Abundant Reasons Why Owner Clings to Headpiece.

Merely as an Investment It Must Be Conceded as Deserving Care, and is Worthy of Respect as Thing of Value.

"It is only a plain derby, beginning to have the permanent duskiness of a peach, in spite of frequent trips to the hat specialist for rehabilitation. It has no claim whatever to any individualism, outside of the initials, which are inside and don't show anyway. It does not do me justice, either. And at any angle I place it, it gives me a topheavy appearance.

So why do I cling to it? Why?

Because anything that costs as much money as that derby, deserves not only care as an investment, but respect as a thing of value. People don't laugh at the Kohinoor diamond, do they? They never poke fun at the Great Ruby? Then why should they be amused at my derby?

It cost a great deal of money. The first time I bought it, I mean, when I selected it in the hat shop and paid for it, supposing that it was wholly mine, the price was four dollars. The paying over of four of my dollars to the hat man gave me, at least to my simple, one-track mind, sole right and title against all pretenders until the end of the world. But only a simple mind could believe a thing like that.

Alas, like many other things in this surprising world, it was not my derby. It never has been and probably never will be. For I have been buying it ever since the first sale in the shop, almost like one does on the instalment plan. Only the instalment plan entails a set expenditure each week or month; you know just what it is going to be and can be prepared for it.

But when you get your derby from a hat boy or hat girl in hotel, restaurant, theater or wherever the grafters are permitted, you do not know what it will cost you. It all depends on the hauteur of the hat boy or girl in charge. Some of them have the appearance that anything tendered less than fifty cents would be faux pas beyond thought. Then the surroundings play such an important part in gauging the amount of blood money, or hat money, just as you desire to designate it. A mass of towering palms, much marble and occasional rugs, means a ransom. Less marble and only one or two palms mean less indemnity. And simple mahogany and no palm mean ten cents.

Why do men ever select such a piece of headgear in the first place? I know why they hang onto it after they get it, but what can be the reason for wanting one in the beginning? They are not beautiful on or off the head. They are hard to keep clean. Also they dent very easily and grow shabby without an effort. It is a mystery.

There is no sentiment in my case toward my derby. I respect it, the same as I respect anything that costs a lot of money, but I don't love it. I don't gaze at it with the tenderness I bestow on my tulip bed, nor do I look at it with the fondness which my old briar pipe inspires. These I would not part with.

But anyone who will advance to me one-tenth the sum which I have paid out may become the owner of one black derby, a trifle fuzzy perhaps, but still capable of exciting the envious eyes of hat boys and hat girls.—Harry Irving Shumway, in Judge.

Snails in Aquariums.

A large glass tank is not necessary for a house aquarium, says Boys' Life. Small, inexpensive glass boxes that make desirable indoor aquaria, as well as glass tubs and jars, may be obtained from dealers.

Do not buy a glass globe for an aquarium. These give a distorted view of the contents and are evidently uncomfortable for their animal inmates.

Goldfish are pretty and interesting, but they are common in such globes and not enough can be learned from them by the average student of nature. Fit up the aquarium as if you intended it for goldfish, then get something else.

You can catch many things, but do not put too many into one aquarium. One of the most interesting aquatic animals is the common water snail.

These are ordinarily kept in goldfish aquaria as scavengers, to clean up the debris and take off the green material that grows on the sides of the glass. Most people think of snails as aids in keeping the aquarium clean, but they are in themselves real objects of interest.

Always a Silver Lining.

He looks as if he might be a member of the diplomatic corps, but he isn't—being a salesman in a time-honored department house on Seventh street, which in one respect anyhow, is something equally as good.

Also, he has a wife who must be a cheerful robin type of little woman, for when she peeped in on her husband the morning the order went forth that stores were not to be opened until ten o'clock she accepted the news cloud with the buoyancy of one who knows a silver lining when it comes her way:

"Why, James"—James is the diplomatic-looking husband—"now you can help me with the breakfast dishes, can't you?"

Oh, yes, the silver linings are there, all right—provided we don't concentrate too morbidly on the cloud side of a situation.—Washington Star.

An Open Letter To A County Judge

One of the most insistent pleas why women should have a voice in public affairs was that whereas men placed the welfare of property before human beings, women would better look after the latter, especially women and children.

A week ago there appeared in the Toronto papers an item telling of a one-year sentence for a hideous offence of the guardian of a fourteen-year-old girl.

Pro stealing a motor car two boys yesterday were given two years. „

These contrasts weekly appear in our courts. Yet this is the first protest to be received in months. Women now outnumber men as voters.

What about their zeal for the protection of their own sex and the young?

The following open letter from Mrs. A. L. Hamilton and Mrs. Jessie MacIver has just been addressed to Judge Cooksworth, of Toronto:

As women deeply interested in the welfare of women and young girls, we would like some explanation of the following astounding case reported in the Toronto papers: One Alex. Ferguson, described as a middle-aged man, was sentenced to one year's imprisonment at the Jail Farm for the offence of seducing his ward, fourteen-year-old Emma Berwick.

Now, if a man robs me straight he is liable to five years' imprisonment at a harsher prison than the Jail Farm, but if he turns to his own use funds I have entrusted to his care, he can get seven years, as we rightly think that to betray a confidence makes a man a lower criminal than he who just steals from a stranger.

Our laws are strange enough in their rating of property higher than personal injury—a man seducing a young girl is only liable to two years instead of the five he would get if he broke into her house and stole her money. But it is incredible that seducing a girl-child left in a man's trust is legally punished with only half the penalty he would receive for seducing a stranger.

Someone—the girl's dead parents or a decree of a local court—chose this Alex. Ferguson as a fit guardian for a girl-child, and entrusted him with the charge of young Emma Berwick. He betrayed his trust, wronging the child whom he was bound in honor to protect, for life, and a Canadian judge gives him only half the penalty he would have received had he wronged a stranger child.

We call upon Judge Coatsworth, the pronouncer of this sentence, to tell us why he dared thus to interpret the law of our land, and we solemnly warn him that it is such mocking of justice in our law courts that does more to breed Bolshevism among us than any imported Russian hysterics, in Massey Hall or elsewhere.

GOOD ROADS MOVE STARTS

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—The good roads policy initiated by the Government this year, in the form of an appropriation of $20,000,000 extending over a term of five years, is taking definite form and the spring and summer will see construction work actively in progress.

The provinces will initiate and carry on the works the Federal Government approving the plans and contributing 40 per cent. of the cost. Ontario so far has filed plans for a provincial highway from Windsor to the uQebec boundary by way of Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston, Brockville and Prescott, with a branch road from Prescott to Ottawa.

Health and Happiness

Women of today seem to listen to every call of duty except the supreme one that tells them to guard their health. Home duties, church duties, war activities, and the hundred-and-one calls for charitable enterprises soon lead women to overdo. Nervousness, headaches, backaches and female troubles are the inevitable result.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which, added to my weak condition, kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness. Health and happiness? Yes, I have both now."—Mrs. J. Worthline, 2842 North Taylor Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The majority of women nowadays overdo; there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. Avoid them by taking in time

HOW ESKIMOS LIVE.

Material Used for Homes Costs Nothing.

It takes only about six hours to build a first-class winter residence in Eskimo Land. The material, which is snow, costs nothing.

But the snow must be carefully selected. The bank that serves as a quarry must have been formed by a single storm, to be sufficiently solid and homogeneous. It must yield blocks of fine grain, yet soft enough to be easily cut with saw or snow knife.

Two men do the work, one cutting while the other builds. It is best, if practicable, to attack the side of a steep drift, making parallel cuts and lifting out the blocks as fast as detached. The blocks are three or four feet long, two feet high and six to eight inches thick.

Instead of laying them in parallel course like bricks, the blocks are so placed as to form a spiral, inclined inward to form a dome-shaped structure, with the culmination of the spiral in the middle of the top, where two or three triangular pieces are put in to close the hole. This is a highly ingenious method of building a dome without the aid of a scaffold.

In order to reach high enough, the builder makes a snow bench inside, on which he steps while finishing the upper part of the structure. Finally the joints are made tight by pressing snow-mortar into them, the idea being to prevent warm air inside the house from escaping.

When finished the house is ten or twelve feet high and twelve to fifteen feet in diameter, and has the appearance of a hemisphere of snow set on its flat side. A sort of entrance hall is added outside, with a passage big enough to crawl through, and on either side of it cubbyholes for the storage of harness, spare food, etc.

A window is cut in the wall of the building and covered with seals' intestines sewed together. Being translucent, they admit daylight or, as an alternative, a slab of clear, fresh-water ice may be set in the wall. This affords an excellent substitute for glass, and can be counted on not to melt in that frigid latitude.

The house is lined with the skins which form the covering of the summer Eskimo dwelling, the object of this arrangement being to prevent the warm air inside from melting the snow roof; for between the skins and the wall there is always a layer of cold air. At the top, for ventilation and to provide a draft for the family lamp, a small hole is cut.

On the side of the house opposite the entrance (within) a broad snow bench is built, with a long pole for an edge. This is the family bed. For a mattress a thick layer of shrubs is spread upon it and over these many deerskins. Clothes, when taken off, are rolled up and put under the skins for pillows. One blanket of skins serves to cover the whole family.

It is very warm inside, for, in effect, the snowhouse is an inhabited oven. A shallow semicircular dish of soapstone, with a wick of fat-saturated moss, serves as a lamp, deriving its oil from the drips of a piece of seal blubber suspended near the flame. Above the lamp is hung a pot for cooking, and aloft, over the pot, is a network of thongs containing articles of clothing, put there to dry in the ascending warm air.

The lamp gives a brilliant and beautiful light; it cooks the food, it dries the clothes, it heats the house and, not least important, it melts the snow for drinking water. Water, and lots of it (for drinking, not for bathing) is to the Eskimo the greatest of luxuries, for he lives in a country where, through most of the year, the normal condition of H2O is that of a rock.

All the life of the Eskimos may be said to revolve about the family lamp, which makes it possible for them to dwell in an otherwise uninhabitable region. They depend for their very existence upon this household utensil. The lamp is the recognised property of the woman head of the family, and when she dies it is buried with her.

Too Much Rush in Life.

Today, as never before, the world is brimming over, palpitant with the fullness. And yet so many of us fail to sense it, to so many of us a primrose is but a primrose, a fallen leaf but a dead thing. In the rush of modern life, with its insistent demands upon our time and attention, driving ourselves from one self-made duty to another, we have missed the glory of the sunshine, the fragrance of the flowers, the beauty and charm and joy that are all about us.—Exchange.

Chinese Music Unwritten.

Chinese music is not written. The words of some of the famous songs have been preserved, but the music has been handed down from father to son for generations that go far back before the day of the troubadours. When music is played it is played according to the memory of the musician and his ideas of interpretation. A musician varies the performance as his best judgement dictates, and the strings, reeds or brass may break in at almost any time.

Great Irish Sportsman Again Challenges for The America Cup Race

"I'D give my last shilling to win the America's Cup."

These words were spoken in 1914 by that host of geniality, the saltiest of gay sea dogs, Sir Thomas Johnstone Lipton.

Picture a rather tall gentleman, whose skin has been whipped brown by the winds, whose flowing moustache, tinged with grey, cannot dim the lustre of an Irish smile, who walks with just the hint of a sailor's roll, and whose eyes carry the half-roguish twinkle of eternal youth and that is Sir Thomas.

At the time he spoke of his last shilling the Shamrock IV. was in mid-Atlantic, being convoyed hither by the Lipton steam yacht Erin, where in September it was to have competed against the Resolute, a little bundle of nautical invincibility, off Sandy Hook.

It was to have been the fourth Liptonian attempt to take back to the tight little island the most celebrated international yachting trophy. In 1899, again in 1901, and in 1903 Sir Thomas and his especially constructed Shamrocks, with their natty skippers, had failed to "bring home the bacon."

War came. Like a peal of thunder it rumbled across Europe and echoed to England. The Briton dropped his sports and tea to don khaki and shoulder a gun. Yacht racing and other affable diversions were sent in to limbo to await that day when a nation that had never learned to love sports or to play them as England and America did should have been taught an indispensable lesson.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON.

After the armistice the Irish baronet again challenged. But it was too soon, the New York Yacht Club thought, and the challenge was temporarily rejected, with the promise that in 1920 a similar overture would no doubt be given not unfavorable consideration.

That time has arrived. The New York Yacht Club is in receipt of Sir Thomas Lipton's latest challenge, and in due course arrangements will have been completed again to defend the cup which the America won off Cowes, England, in the historic race against the English in 1855. There will be no deviation from the usual provisions for the race, which means that the two yachts will race under the rules laid down in the deed of gift rather than the universal rules which have been rather assiduously espoused by Sir Thomas.

With nothing to interfere, Sir Thomas Lipton's fourth attempt to lift the America's Cup should be sailed next summer, probably in June, with Shamrock IV.—which the Irish sportsman already has designated as his yacht — competing against the Resolute, which was completed in 1914 to defend the cup.

Sir Thomas Lipton is in his sixty-eighth year. Born in 1851 of poor Irish parents, pursuing a nomadic career in his youth which brought him over the seas and into America, where, as he said, he learned the value of "shrewd enterprise," before reaching the age of fifty he had amassed a tremendous fortune.

It is an epic task he has chosen, that of building a yacht in England, bringing it to America under its own sail, creating it swift, yet seaworthy, and competing against the leanest and fastest creations brought out of the drafting rooms of American designers. Three times a Shamrock has been sent over the seas, and three times a Columbia or a Reliance has turned her back—the last time in 1903 — but these repetitive disappointments have served only as a stimulus to Sir Thomas' ambition.

This dominating impulse has become so much a part of Sir Thomas' interesting career that once, in 1901, when business troubles pyramided and stockholders of the tea companies complained, one of them after a stormy meeting shouted:

"Never mind the company. Bring back the cup!"

A love of the sea is always inborn. It is man's harkback to the atavistic or the amphibious Early in life, when he was a messenger boy for a stationer in Glasgow, Tommy Lipton exhibited this surpassing love of the sea and spent such time as he could conveniently spare among the piers and wharves where boats that sailed the seven seas come to port.

He said then and he declared often thereafter that some day he would own "the finest, fastest sailing yacht afloat," and certainly since his finances have warranted an effort he has spared neither pains nor money in the attempt to consummate his ambition.

Swift Locomotion.

Men can run about 32 feet a second, that being the world's record for a hundred yard sprint. Contrary to common supposition, skaters are no swifter than runners, the world's records for both being precisely the same —9 2-5 seconds for a hundred yards. Runners on skis have, however, made as much as 72 feet a second, and in leaping on skis more than 100 feet a second is attained.

Snakes Numerous in Idaho.

Pennsylvania, one of the most prolific sections for rattlers, has at least one large snakeskin tannery and keeps bouts of people slaughtering rattlesnakes. Idaho, however, is the banner rattlesnake section of the country. Idaho has great ridges of rocks, in which are deep bowls, cracks and caves. Herein rattlers breed by the eternal thousands and offer a vast industry for rattler harvesters.

Ascertaining Mountain Heights.

The height of mountains is ascertained by barometric observation, showing the pressure of atmosphere at the lower and higher levels. An instrument called the mountain barometer is graded especially for this purpose. It can also be done with a leveling instrument and theodolite, but either way requires technical knowledge.

Origin of "White Elephant."

The king of Siam in years gone by would send a white elephant to a courtier whom he disliked and whose fortune he wished to destroy. The man could not sell the elephant and the expense of keeping it eventually "broke him up." From that custom was handed down our present day saying, "He's got a white elephant on his hands."

Artesian Wells.

The Chinese have obtained water through means of artesian wells for over 1,000 years. One of the most famous wells in existence is that at Grenelle, in the outskirts of Paris, where the water is brought [illegible] a depth of [illegible] It yields 516½ gallons of water a minute. Many years ago a well in Petah was sunk to the depth of 8,100 feet.

Effect Not Appreciated.

Instead of candles, Lucille's mother placed six large marshmallows on top of her birthday cake. When little Doris returned from the party her mother said: "Well, did you all have a jolly good time?" and she replied: "Yes, all but the cake. Oh, mother, that cake looked so bad, just like a cemetery. It had little tombstones on it."

Vast British Empire.

Including all her possessions, the British empire has the largest territory. It had at the beginning of the war a total area of 13,123,712 square miles, of which 121,512 are in Europe, 2,187,550 in Asia, 3,618,245 in North America, 8,600 in Central America, 12,300 in the West Indies, 97,800 in South America and 3,214,686 in Australasia.

First Printed Book.

According to Petigrew, the first book printed in type was the Latin Bible. It was printed by John Gutenberg at Mayence, about 1455. There are only 20 copies of this edition known to exist, and the workmanship in type, ink, and paper, were better than in any subsequent edition for two hundred years.

Ups and Downs.

Tourist—"Anything remarkable about this hill, driver?" Driver—"There's nothing peculiar about the hill itself, but there's a queer story connected with it. A young lady and gentleman went for a walk up here; they ascended higher and higher and never came back." Tourist—"Dear, dear me! What, then became of the unhappy pair?" Driver—"It is supposed that they went down on the other side, sir!"

EDITOR'S MAIL

FAVORS PROPOSED PURCHASE.

Editor Review: Mr. J. M. Greene is so obviously seeking to influence the people against the proposed Riverside Park it is only fair that a protest against his views should have equal publicity.

In the humble opinion of many impartial, sincere people the City Council acted wisely in submitting this question to the people and they exercised good judgment in checkmating a legal claim for damages.

Mr. Greene knows and admits that the city must pay these damages and he knows and should admit that the people would get absolutely no benefit from such outlay. He should also see that this park will as a consequence, actually cost the people but $16,500 or thereabout. If Mr. Greene, as an individual, were confronted with a similar situation he would, in sheer self-preservation, buy the property if he had to borrow the money. Why should not the city be as prudent as the business man?

Mr. Greene talks of sinking a lot of money—putting it into the melting pot— as if this little item was of serious consequence compared with the colossal sums called—for this year reaching almost a million dollars, if the disposal plant be added. That is something to protest against, but the item to buy this little park for the use of our whole people will cost no more than one-tenth of one per cent. of the assessed valuation of the city; besides will be paid for out of a sinking fund which, with interest, will not exceed $2,000 a year. In truth, we shall hardly feel it.

Peterborough is far more attractive to industries and much more beautiful than any of the cities Mr. Greene praises and holds up as examples of enterprise. It may be that some of us do not know these things. But we have substantial reasons for being proud of our city.

Money invested in parks adds to the city's assets, to its business and labor attractiveness and there is no doubt money invested in this particular case will be well spent money.

Our larger parks are all in the north end. Each was the gift of Mrs. Nichols. This is, I believe, the first time in the history of Peterborough the city has proposed to buy land for a park. This will make a real central park worthy of Peterborough. It will be our peoples' great playground.

Mr. Greene's vote and influence may be against the by-law. Mine will be for it. I hope the outcome will not be influenced by private opinions publicly expressed, but by the serious thought and common sense of all of us together. The people themselves are to decide this question on New Year's Day, and if they purchase this land, Peterborough will have the best New Year's gift in its whole history.

DR. GARFIELD GIVES UP HIS POSITION

U. S. FUEL CONTROLLER OPPOSES TERMS OF SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

Washington, Dec. 12.—Fuel Administrator Garfield's resignation in the hands of President Wilson, given because he disagrees on principle with the coal strike settlement proposal arrangement by the Government and Mine Workers' Union.

Dr. Garfield himself refused to confirm, deny or discuss the report, but at the White House it was said that a personal letter from him had been transmitted to the President.

Men close to the Fuel Administrator understand that he believes that the work of the Commission authorized under the settlement, to be made up of one coal mine operator, a coal miner and a third person named to represent the public, will result in an increased price of coal to the consuming public. Against this form of settlement Dr. Garfield has been unalterably opposed. It has been learned on good authority that he took no part in the negotiations with the Mine Workers' Union chiefs during the last week though he was consulted.

Fire broke out in Petrolea town hall, but was extinguished before much damage was done.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston

It has been said of Lord Curzon, the new British Foreign Minister, that very early in his career he conceived two great ambitions, to be president of the Oxford Union, and to be Viceroy of India. It is a matter of history that he has achieved both, and achieved them with distinction. For, indeed, if one were searching the English language for a single word in which to estimate Lord Curzon of Kedleston it would be the word "distinguished," in its most exact meaning. He was, for instance, undoubtedly distinguished at Oxford. True, he missed his first in "Greats," but he terribly revenged the indignity some months later when, after a period of furious work in Egypt and a fortnight's whirlwind campaign in the British Museum, he carried off the Lowthian prize and, later on, the Arnold prize.

Then when he had left Oxford, the presidency of the Union duly to his credit, and was well embarked on a parliamentary career, the word "distinguished" must, again and again, be requisitioned to describe the situation. The young Conservative member for the Southport division was distinguished from the first; whilst, almost from the first, it is possible to see the great Indian scheme rising above the horizon of practical possibilities. It was not that young Curzon, like a certain politician in a famous play, "got to India." India and everything eastern seemed to come inevitably his way, and, whenever they did not come his way, he sought them with his whole heart. Never was there such a remarkable traveller. Other men have travelled more extensively, devoted themselves to the work of exploration more exclusively, but few have been able to combine so much excursion abroad with so much activity at home as Lord Curzon. Central Asia, Persia, Afghanistan, the Pamirs, Siam, Indo China, and Korea, to mention only the most important, were investigated with a consuming interest and insatiable desire for facts, which overflowed later on, in a series of books, most of them still standard works on the subjects dealt with.

Meanwhile, the member for the Southport division was steadily climbing the political ladder. For a short time, 1891-92, he was Under-Secretary of State for India, and, from 1895 to 1898, held the position of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The next year saw the consummation of his second great ambition. He was appointed Governor-General of India. Now, it is one of the great unwritten laws concerning this appointment that the Governor-General of India must be a peer, and the Hon. George Nathaniel Curzon was already the eldest son of a peer. The difficulty, however, was overcome by his having an Irish peerage conferred upon him, and as Curzon of Kedleston he embarked for India.

Few achievements have received more varied criticism than Lord Curzon's administration in India. By some he has been hailed as the greatest Viceroy India ever had; whilst by others his rule has been characterized as a failure. The course of the just estimate probably lies, as is generally the case, between the two extremes. If his partition of Bengal still causes the name of Curzon to be anathema in certain quarters, it is in others regarded as a wise and even inevitable reform; whilst in his disagreement with Lord Kitchener, which, ultimately, occasioned his resignation, after he had been Viceroy for five years, he at any rate stood for the time-honored British tradition, the civil control of the army.

And so Lord Curzon returned home, secured election as an Irish representative peer, and "retired" to the House of Lords. Since then he has stood forth very prominently in English politics as a most staunch Conservative, as a great defender of the rights and privileges of the hereditary chamber, and a strong opponent of Home Rule for Ireland. During the last five years, however, all party politics put aside, Lord Curzon has indeed deserved well of his fellow countrymen. For since he joined the Coalition Cabinet in 1916, Curzon of Kedleston has devoted himself whole-heartedly to the great task before his country, bringing to bear upon it all that tremendous energy which, in the days of his pro-consulship, was wont to be the despair of Government officials in Calcutta and Simla.

Hens Incubate Fish Spawn.

The Chinese have a novel way of propagating fish. The spawn is carefully collected from the surface of the water, and when a sufficient quantity has been obtained they take a number of hens' eggs, the contents of which have been carefully emptied through a small aperture, and refill the shells with spawn. The holes are sealed up and the eggs put under the broody hens. The hens are allowed to incubate the eggs for a certain number of days, when they are again broken and their contents put into water that has been previously warmed by the sun. In a very short time the spawn hatches, and the young fry are then kept in pure fresh water until a sufficient size to be put into the ponds. At one time a considerable business was done in this style of spawn hatching. — Family Herald.

Scarcity of Cork.

Owing to the scarcity of true cork in Sweden, wooden corks are being used in that country, the substitutes being made from quick-growing pine. This wood has wide annual rings, and one of its characteristics is its tendency to swell somewhat after it has been fashioned into stoppers.

The Corsican brought sixty officers and other ranks to St. John, the first party of soldiers to reach this port this season.

NOSKE AS A STRONG MAN.

A Strange Contrast to the Prussian Junker Caste.

Who is Noske? It is safe to say he is the best hated member of the present German Government; best hated, that is, in Germany. In allied countries Scheidemann still stands forth as the arch-hypocrite, the symbol of that "political resignation of the German Social-Democratic party" which, according to the late Rosa Luxemburg, took place on August 2, 1914. But for the German masses Noske personifies that junker-militaristic reaction which to-day poses in the garb of Social Democracy and republicanism.

Still, it is probably an exaggeration to say for the German masses. It would be more accurate to classify opinion according to the color of the German national flag which is your particular color, if you have the misfortune of being a German. It works like this: If you are (which God forbid!) a Red, a Spartacist, Communist, Bolshevik or even a mere Independent Socialist, a follower of Hasse, then, indeed, you hate Noske as the devil incarnate, a dark assassin, a mass murderer and things to that effect. Then your opinion of him can be summed up in the exclamation, "To — with Noske!"

On the other hand, if your favorite color is white—that is, if you happen to be a Democrat, a Liberal, a Republican, a supporter of Ebert—then Noske is your chief hope in these days, when hope is about the scarcest of all commodities between the Rhine and the Vistula. Then you call Noske the "strong man," the man who "saved the republic," the backbone of Ebert's Government, the German Gambetta, if you please. Then you will adopt for your slogan the modern German equivalent of "Let George do it," and will clamor enthusiastically, "Let Noske do it!"

But if you—still assuming, merely for argument's sake and without the slightest intention to offend, that you are a German — if you are a Black, a Royalist, a pan-German, a junker, an Imperialist, then you will be apt to dispose of Noske with a contemptuous upward and outward sweep of your hand, accompanied by the sigh: "Ach ja, der Noske!"

Now, this behooves an explanation. First of all, you have to know that Gustav Noske, as the German "Who's Who" for 1914 (the latest available) testifies, was not only born at Brandenburg-on-the-Havel on July 9, 1868, but was born the son of a common weaver; that he has only a public school education; that he started out on his career as a cabinetmaker's apprentice; that later he drifted into journalism and worked on different Socialist organs till he became editor of the Chemnitz Volkstimme, one of the most important Socialist publications in that Saxon stronghold of Social Democracy. And this weaver's son, this "Sozi," this scribbler, this upstart, this nobody, presumes now to occupy the office of a Scharnhorst and a Roon and calls himself Minister of War of Germany.

From the Prussian junker point of view the tragedy of it all is overwhelming. And yet you have to be a German, or to know the German language and German people thoroughly, in order to appreciate the supreme funniness of the name Noske. It is the hyperbole of Philistinism, of low caste, of social non-existence.

Lancers Used to Capture Flotilla.

The Llanero of South America lives on horseback. He trades, buys and sells on horseback, and in the war with Spain with Llaneros contributed much toward achieving the independence of Venezuela and New Granada, says the Detroit News.

There is related a story of an occasion when it was necessary for Bolivar's army to cross the Apure to engage Morillo. But Bolivar had no boats and the Apure at this point was wide and deep.

The Spanish flotilla was guarding the river opposite the patriot forces. Bolivar was in despair. Turning to Paez, he said: "I would give the world to have the Spanish flotilla. Without it I can never cross the river."

"It shall be yours in an hour," replied Paez.

Selecting 300 of his Llanero lancers, all distinguished for strength and bravery, he said, pointing to the gunboats: "We must have these flecheras or die. Let those follow who please."

Spurring his horse he dashed into the river and swam toward the flotilla. The Llaneros followed with their lances in their hands, now encouraging their horses by swimming beside them and patting their necks, now shouting to scare away crocodiles, of which there were hundreds. At last they reached the other side and sprang from their horses' backs on board the boats, headed by their leader. To the astonishment of everyone they actually captured the entire flotilla.

The Forgetful Parson.

Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson tells an amusing story of an old west country parson who had to hold two services, one in his own church and one in the church over the moor.

On arriving at the latter church he got into the pulpit and said he was awful sorry, but he had forgotten to bring a most admirable sermon which he had written.

"Luckily," he continued, "as I came across the moor, I remembered a beautiful story, which I will tell you in place of the sermon. Er-er-well, dash it, I've forgotten that, too!"

Cures Deafness.

Hearing has been restored to more than two-thirds of his accidentally deafened patients by a French physician, who massages their ears with sound waves.

To Name Locomotives.

In New Zealand it is proposed that the railway locomotives shall each receive a patriotic name to perpetuate some of the great events of the world war.

Engineers have submitted their final report on the reconstruction of the Brantford water system, which will cost $450,000.

WOMEN TEACHERS ASK FOR HIGHER SALARIES

HAMILTON SCHOOL BOARD REFERS MATTER BACK TO THE COMMITTEE

Hamilton, Dec. 12.—The Board of Education has not broken to the request of the Women Teachers' Association for salary increase over that recommended by the special Salary Committee, but has at least bent to it. Representatives of the association appeared before the board with a request that, instead of an increase of $100, starting January 1, the increase be $200, as requested in the first place by the teachers. There was some discussion, the upshot of which was that the clause in the salary report regarding the salaries of women teachers was referred back to the committee for further consideration. The teachers were supported by Rev. Dr. Renison, Rev. P. W. Philpott and others, who spoke in favor of a large increase for the women teachers. Trustee Park moved that the clause regarding women teachers be referred back.

Trustee Carr said some of the male teachers had got more in the report of the committee than they asked or deserved, and wanted the whole matter sent back for consideration. This was defeated. He then moved that Bruce Carey's salary matter be sent back for reconsideration, but this also was defeated. Dr. Park's motion was then put and carried.

PREPARATORY SERVICE IN ST. PAUL'S TONIGHT

REV. DR. CHAFER WILL BE THE SPEAKER—INTEREST IN ADDRESSES

Rev. Dr. Chafer will speak this evening at the preparatory service in St. Paul's church. Great interest is being shown in the addresses of this remarkable teacher. The subject of his address last evening was "The Eternal Security of the Believer." It was a message of great comfort to those who were already Christians and it offered great encouragement to those who were not to commit themselves to the keeping power of Christ. He based his message specially on Paul's great passage in the 8th chapter of the epistle to the Romans.

In answer to the question of verse 34: "Who is He that Condemeth?" he pointed out four reasons as given in that same verse why no power in either heaven or hell can lay a charge against God's elect. The first of these is the death of Christ. "It is Jesus Christ that died," says the apostle. Christs death was not the death of a man or an angel, it was the atoning death of the Christ of God. Christ died that the sinner should not be condemned. and when he accepts what Christ has done there is no condemnation for him.

But Christ has not only died. he has risen again. and this is the second reason for the eternal security of the saved sinner. The moment one believes in Christ he is incorporated into Christ, he becomes a member of his body. As such he was identified with Christ in His resurrection life The words of Paul, "if Ye then be risen with Christ," prove the identification of the saved with Christ in His resurrection.

The third reason for the eternal security of the believer is that he has an advocate in Christ at the Father's right hand, who presents constantly before the Father the merit of His own saving work. Satan is the great accuser of the brethren and it would seem that he is permitted to appear in the presence of God in that capacity. But when he brings the accusation against any of God's children Christ is there as the advocate of such and to point to His own wounds as the evidence of His having died for the very guilt of which the evil one accuses him.

The last reason for his eternal security is that he has an Intercessor "who also maketh intercession for us." No child of God will ever know before reaching heaven from what dangers and testings he has been saved by the faithful and never-failing intercesson of his Lord. Peter's case is typical of all the children of God. And the Lord said: "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he might sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Satan has desired to sift everyone who trusts in Christ. He never ceases to attempt and to get into his power the one who through faith in Christ, has been delivered out of his hands. But through the continued intercession of Christ he is never permitted to get into his power again a soul who has believed in Christ.

The last of Dr. Chafer's addresses on the subject of Grace will be given on Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock He will preach at both services on the Lord's Day. The minister of the church makes a personal appeal to the members to turn out in large numbers to the preparatory service thihs evening as well as to the two services on the Lord's day.

SCHOOL EXAMS. TO BE HELD IN JUNE

LONG WISHED FOR CHANGE HAS BEEN PROMISED BY MINISTER OF EDUCATION

Representatives which for years past have been made to the Department of Education that the midsummer examinations should be held in June instead of July, when the heat is more intense, have at last brought results. The official calendar of the department, as announced yesterday by Hon. R. H. Grant, Minister of Education, fixes the dates for the examinations in June.

It is provided that senior high school entrance and senior public school graduation diploma examinations, and the examination for entrance into the Model Schools shall begin on June 8. The day following the lower school examination for entrance into the Normal Schools and into the Faculties of Education, as well as the upper school examination for entrance into the Faculties of Education and pass, honor and scholarship matriculation examinations, will begin.

On June 16 the Normal School final examination. Group II., will begin. On June 18 the middle school examination for entrance to the Normal Schools will begin. English-French entrance examinations will begin on June 23, junior public school graduation diploma examinations will begin on June 24, and junior high school entrance examinations will begin on June 28. This it will be seen that all examinations will be completed before July.

The calendar fixes the number of teaching days for 1920 in the public schools at 199, and in the high schools at 196. Following the Christmas vacation this year the schools will reopen on January 5, 1920. Easter holidays will be from April 2 to April 11, both inclusive. Midsummer holidays will be from June 30 to August 31 in the public schools and until September 6 in the high schools.

GRAND JURY INSPECT COUNTY PROPERTY

FOUND ALL INSTITUTIONS IN GOOD SHAPE AND INMATES CARED FOR

The attached is the report of the grand jury on the conditions surrounding the various public institutions here as presented to His Honor Judge Huyrke:

To His Honor E. C. S. Huycke, Judge of the County of Peterborough:

The grand jury beg to present as follows:

In accordance with your honor's instructions we have visited the different public institutions and found all in first-class condition, scrupuously clean, and sanitary arrangements all that could be desired.

There are at present eleven women and twenty-six men inmates at the House of Refuge, seventeen at the Children Shelter, sixty-two at the House of Providence, fourty-seven at St. Vincent's Orphanage and six at the Baernardo Home.

In our inspection we paid particular attention to fire protection and fire escapes and take pleasure in stating that all plants are well equipped and particularly well protected with the exception at the shelter, where, owing to the nature of the building, a fire escape would not be of much benefit, but we emphatically recommend the placing of two if not three chemical fire extinguishers in the building, feeling confident they would be of great service and benefit in case of fire.

In the institutions where people are confined there was not a single complaint from any patient or inmate, on the contrary nothing but deep satfaction and thanks for the benefits received and attention given. In our opinion the County of Peterborough has something to be proud of, both in conditions of the several buildings and in their splendid management by the individual superintendents, and second to none in the Province of Ontario.

F. C. ARBITT, Foreman.

KAISER BILL WAS CRAZY

Before the War Broke Out, German Papers Say.

Berlin, Dec. 12.—Commenting on a four-volume compilation of documentary pre-war history, the Vorwaerts says: "Whoever reads the former emperor's marginal remarks will have no doubt that Germany before the war was ruled by next to a madman." The newspaer characterizes the books as "four stones on the tomb of the German monarchy."

Umbrellas For Gifts

We were enthusiastic about these umbrellas when we bought them, and we are yet, only more so, for they look much better than the samples. There is a wide range of handles, and those with the colored Bakelite rings are the favorites; such colored rings as mauve, amber, red, green, etc.

Others have silken cords in loop styles, and others are merely plain and straight with a silver cap. The handles are mostly dark finished woods, and the tops are a good quality silk and wool. A good range of good qualities can be had at $5.65, $6.50, $8.50 and $9.50. Others commencing at $2.50.

HOLD CONVENTION IN CHICAGO JUNE 8

REPUBLICANS MAKE FINAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR SELECTION OF CANDIDATE

GEN. WOOD APPEARS TO LEAD

BUT FORCES ARE AT WORK TO HEAD OFF HIS BOOM FOR NOMINATION

Washington, Dec. 12.—Selection of Chicago as the place and June 8 as the date for the Republican national convention.

A movement among the leaders to bring about the election of uninstructed and uncommitted delegates from those States without candidates of their own for the purpose of combatting the present lead of General Leonard Wood for the nomination for President.

A programme of speeches attacking the administration of President Wilson for extravagance and inefficiency and making "Americanism" the keynote of the Republican campaign.

The announcement of Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, that he would not be a candidate for President, but would seek re-election as Senator, thus preventing a factional quarrel in that State and leaving Governor James P. Goodrich as its "favorite son." 5

These were the principal developments at the meeting of the Republican National Committee, at which there was a display of complete party harmony and a disposition to avoid all matters which might lead to difference of opinion, such as the peace treaty and the League of Nations.

Root for State Convention Chairman.

Of particular interest to New York was the announcement of George A. Glynn, New York State Chairman, that he had invited Elihu Root to be chairman of the unofficial State Convention to be held in New York city on February 18 or 19, and that Mr. Root, who had arrived in Washington during the day, had accepted. It also was learned that Mr. Root was certain to be one of New York's four delegates-at-large, if he did not head the delegation.

In view of the fact that Mr. Root was Secretary of War when General Wood was Governor General of Cuba, and is known to entertain a high regard for the general, Mr. Root's presence was viewed with interest. It was stated, however, that Mr. Root had not come to Washington to attend he meeting, but on business before the Supreme Court.

The movement for the selection of uninstructed delegates, following the "favorite son" boom of Tuesday, was adopted by party leaders as the best method of putting a check on the increasing strength of General Wood. This was satisfactory to the friends of most of the candidates, each of whom sees hope in a deadlocked convention.

The theory upon which the opponents of General Wood were working was that any method which would prevent his nomination on an early ballot would be effective in blocking him. In their belief, the nominee would then be selected by a combination at the convention, either on a man already mentioned or upon one who had not been an avowed candidate.

EDITOR'S MAIL

A PLEA FOR MUSKRATS.

Editor Review: Would you give a small space in your paper, in which I may say something in favor of the muskrats?

This is the time of the year that the water on the lakes should be attended to, to keep it level with the ice, and to keep it that way until the latter end of March when the ice begins to melt.

By keeping the water level with the ice all winter it would mean the saving of thousands of lives of muskrats each year. The muskrats in the marshes, where there are no banks, have to build their homes in about two feet of water, and if the water is lowered during the winter, the ice falls on the mud, and then the muskrats are smothered.

We have often found dead rats in the spring floating in the water. Rats need lots of water, the more water they have the better they live. At the present time the muskrats are one of the most important fur-bearing animals. It has had the greatest advance in price of all furs rising from 25c to about $3.00. This all goes to show that muskrats are well worth looking after.

SAYS DEPORTATION WILL MEAN DEATH

COUNSEL FOR EMMA GOLDMAN MAKES FINAL PLEA FOR CLIENT

Washington, D.C., Dec. 12.—Deportation of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman to "White Guard" Russia would be equivalent to pronouncing death sentence upon them, Harry Weinberger, counsel for the two radical leaders, asserted in a brief filed with the Supreme Court in a final effort to prevent their removal from the United States.

The court was asked to receive an appeal from the action of Federal Judge Mayer in New York, which dismissed an application for habeas corpus writs. Counsel both for the accused and the government were permitted to submit briefs.

Weinberger admitted that his clients were anarchists, but contended there was insufficient evidence to warrant deportation, and charged that the Secretary of Labor "exceeded his jurisdiction and discretion" in issuing the deportation order. Constitutionality of the statutes under which it was issued also was attacked.

"As a matter of fact," said the counsel, "these Russian aliens, harried and bullied and jailed, are willing to go back to Russia at once if the inhuman blockade against Russia is raised or even if the doors are opened to allow them to go at their own expense to their own country."

Any action which would delay deportation was opposed in the government's brief, which declared the defendants a menace to society should the appeal be granted. The government asked that bail be refused pending final determination.

RATE OF EXCHANGE.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Dec. 12.—Foreign exchange rates, which had been declining steadily for several days, showed slight improvement at the opening of today's market. Demand bills on the pound sterling rose two cents above yesterday's close to $3.69¼. Franc and lire cheques also stiffened slightly.

BILLION AND A HALF WILL CHANGE HANDS

ENOMOUSLY HEAVY MOVEMENT OF MONEY IN NEW YORK NEXT MONDAY.

New York, Dec. 12.—Extraordinarily heavy movements of money are to be made on Monday next. It is estimated that almost $1,500,000,000 will change hands on that date because of the large payments then falling due.

The most important maturity is the fourth instalment of income taxes for the current year. These alone will reach a total throughout the country of about a billion dollars, bankers estimated yesterday.

On December 15 also the government will redeem a large volume of certificates of indebtedness. The Federal Reserve Bank yesterday issued notice of this redemption to banks, trust companies, corporations and investment bankers that on and after next Monday the government will redeem in cash before January 2, 1920, at the holder's option treasury certificates of Series A maturing on that date. This issue totals approximately $600,000,000.

As income taxes fall due on Monday, it is assumed that the majority of holders of these certificates will elect to cash their certificates on that day to raise funds for meeting their tax obligations.

Interest payments on Liberty bonds and Victory notes also fall due on December 15. The amount of these payments will be about $135,000,00.

The squeeze in money this week is due both to withdrawals on the part of the government to meet its Liberty bond interest obligations next Monday and to preparations by the banks to pay income taxes.

The figures show that the maturities next week will balance each other to a large extent. The income tax instalment of upward of one billion dollars will be offset by about $735,000,000 which the government will pay out to the banks. A large percentage of these operations will be done through bookkeeping credits and debts without any actual transfer of cash. By this means any undue disturbance of the money market probably will be averted.

LIBERALS PREPARING FOR THE ELECTION

BUT EARLY DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT IS NOT LOOKED FOR (Special Correspondence)

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—The advice given by Mackenzie King to his party to place candidates in the field at an early date wehrever possible is not taken even in Liberal circles here as indicating an early disolution of Parliament and a general election.

It is regarded merely as a preliminary statement of the policy to be followed by the Liberals preceding the inauguration of a plan calling for more activity in preparation for the Federal contest whenever it may be held.

THEATRICAL

AT THE GRAND

Last night the Gallo English Opera Company's bill at the Grand was the "Chimes of Normandy," and as in their two preceding productions their rendition of this famous comic opera was a treat to the music lovers who were fortunate enough to be present to hear them. It is to be regretted that a larger attendance had not greeted these excellent players, because it will no doubt be some time before Peterborouhg has another opportunity of hearing an organization such as the Gallo English Opera Co.

Last night's performance was conceded by many to be the best of the series produced by the company at the local playhouse. The singing of the principals left nothing to be desired, and the ensemble work of the large chorus was a delight to all.

Mr. Albert Parr as the Marquis of Corneville was given a better chance to display his ability than he had in "The Mikado," and his representation of this difficult character was perfect. His splendid voice was heard to excellent advantage in the many solos assigned to his part.

Jefferson De Angelis, who had scored such a success as Koko in "The Mikado," was cast for the part of Gaspard, the miser. Mr. De Angelis is an actor of great versatility as he proved by his work in this highly dramatic character.

Miss Rosamond Whiteside as Serpolette scored another success, her sweet voice and manner on the stage capturing the hearts of the audience.

Daniel Dellion as Jean Grenicheaux and Louis Casavant as the Baillie were letter perfect in their parts, as was Frank Ridsdale as the notary and Miss Ada Louise Armstrong as Germaine, Gaspard's niece.

The company left this morning for Montreal, where they open a month's engagement at His Majesty's Theatre. Before leaving Peterborough almost the entire company were vaccinated in order to comply with the Montreal health requirements.

"A FIGHT FOR LOVE" AT EMPIRE THEATRE

THRILLING PICTURE STORY BY HARRY CAREY IS BILL TONIGHT

Every lover of camp life and the great outdoors will be thrilled to the core over "A Fight for Love," which played at the Empire Theatre last night. Added to a red and white drama of Indians, whiskey, love, murder and fighting, there are glorious bits of scenery in the Canadian woods that command your instant admiration. You can almost smell the giant pines and hear the weird note of the hoot owl and the crackle of the Indian camp fires. Your blood will feel that chill like your forefathers felt when the silent Indian, who neither forgets nor forgives, stalks past on the scene.

This picture is quite a change from the general run of Harry Carey pictures. It is a big, compelling drama with a very simple setting and few characters (only four, in fact). There are no cowboys in it. But there is illicit whiskey trading and a ripping fight between a white man and a half-breed, and a strong thread of love running through it all.

Cheyenne Harry rushes fiercely from cattle rustling to a hotbed of unlicensed whiskey trading, and after blood-curdling experiences among the Indians finally ends up in the arms of love. The big three who support Harry Carey in this tremendously well-acted drama are Joe Harris, Neva Gerber and Neola May.

Alex. Reid, returned soldier, of Sidney township, was killed, and P. Blade perhaps fatally injured when they fell 50 feet down an elevator shaft at the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Co's distillery at Corbyville.

First Dolls.

The first dolls of which there is any knowledge were found among the treasures unearthed from the ruins of Babylon. They were small figures in terra cotta and ivory, beautifully carved and must have been fascinating playthings for little Assyrian children. The little girls of Syria had mechanical dolls. The dolls the classic children played with were made of wax and clay, decorated with bright colors. As these children married very young, they played with their dolls until just before their wedding day.

Interesting Old Bible.

One of the original owners of the Treacle Bible, living in the eighteenth century, had made notations on the fly leaf concerning "John, who was born on Friday the 10th of February, 1769, at a quarter after eight at night, was baptized at Crossgate church on March 16 following, by the Reverend Mr. Wheeler, who died of smallpox, 12th Aprile, 1769, and was buried the next day at Crossgate church, aged eight weeks and five days." Other deaths, marriages and births were dated as far back as 1701-1702.

Commonwealths and States.

Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Kentucky are officially styled commonwealths, although there seems to be no particular reason except custom, as it has practically the same meaning as state. A commonwealth is a democratic form of government, such as that of each state of the Union, the four using the name commonwealth not differing from the others. As far back as 1686 the Massachusetts colony was spoken of as the commonwealth.

Legend of Origin of Flowers.

In Sussex, England, the lily of the valley is said to be a memorial of the battle St. Leonard fought with a dragon. The holy man encountered the monster in the forest and battled with it for three days. At last the saint was victorious though wounded seriously, and wherever his blood dripped upon the ground there sprang up lilies of the valley in profusion. In France the lily of the valley is said to have sprung from the Virgin's tears.

A Whale Worth $15,000.

A full-grown bowhead whale is today worth $15,000 merely for the whalebone it carries in its mouth.

This is the species that furnishes the bulk of the commercial supply of whalebone, which is now worth $7.50 a pound. It is a denizen of Arctic seas.

The bowhead, like other whalebone whales, has no teeth. Instead its jaws are furnished with a series of long, tapering slabs of a horny substance fringed with hair. Of these slabs, which are the whalebone of commerce, there may be as many as 600.

The biggest of them are ten or twelve feet long and they are inserted in the gum of the upper jaw, from which they hang. They serve as a sieve to strain out the whale's food. Swimming along, it takes huge mouthfuls of squids and other pelagic small fry. Then the huge trap is closed and, the slabs entering and fitting into grooves in the lower jaw, the water is expelled.

A Tout.

A benevolent old lady in one of the streets which still retain the red-brick houses of old-time Toronto looked out of her parlor window the other day and saw a man walking along the sidewalk, apparently in great dejection. There was something so pathetic and appealing in his manner that she took a dollar bill, put it in an envelope, and wrote on the envelope, "Never Say Die!" She slipped out of the house in the most casual manner and handed the envelope to the man as they passed. Next day the melancholy man called at her house and presented her with $10. "It's funny," he said; "you're the only one that backed that horse called Never Say Die."

Willing to Oblige.

Magistrate (to talkative prisoner) —Now, what have you got to say?

Prisoner—I've got a good deal to say, guv'nor, if you'll only give me time to say it.

Magistrate—Certainly, six months.

Hard on the Plumber.

"Conscription has, maybe, saved the country," growled the Tommie, "but what I object to is the company it drives a man into. I'm a plumber by trade and an honest workman, yet I'm compelled to suffer the society of such professionals as a lawyer, a minister and an auctioneer." "Not a bad selection at that, Bill," remarked his friends. "Oh, maybe not in a way; but when the minister and the lawyer start an argument on Egyptian law in the middle of the night across half a dozen beds, what chance has even a plumber of stopping the gas leak?"

Short and Stormy Annals Of Bela Kun, the Despot, Hungary's Red Leader

BELA KUN'S "downfall" is considered by some observers to indicate the gradual break-up of Bolshevism in Hungary, but Bolshevik sympathizers, or the Communist element, as they officially desire to be recognized, see in the reported overthrow of Hungary's Red leader nothing more than one step farther forward on the path of Communist progress. The first despatches giving word of the new turn of affairs in Hungary spoke of the general demoralization of Bela Kun's army, which was straggling back from the different fronts in utter lack of discipline. The break-down in the spirit of the troops was attributed to the cessation of fighting against the Czechs and the Roumanians, and also to the hasty increase of the well-drilled loyal army of 60,000 to 125,000. From Budapest reports indicate that Bolshevism in Hungary is confined almost exclusively to the capital, and that the peasants have made the Bolshewiki unpopular by obstructing shipments of food to the city, which is rapidly reaching a desperate state.

The "terror troops" are masters of the capital. They stormed the garrison, disarmed the troops of the Bela Kun Government, and distributed arms to the "ragged proletariat." The new leaders in control are the People's Commissaries Varga and Szamuely and Vice-Commissary of Foreign Affairs Moses Alpary. The Tageblatt correspondent smuggled out of Budapest parts of a speech of Bela Kun before the Executive Council of the Soviet, in which the one-time leader stated that Hungary was facing a triple crisis — in power, economics, and morale. The crisis in power was evidenced by the counter-revolution, in economics in the unbelievable prices of food, and in morale, in corruption, which had attained undreamed-of limits. According to Bela Kun, all officials in Hungary were susceptible to bribery. They were making out passes for persons to flee from Hungary, charging for them from 50,000 to 300,000 crowns, and they were also buying illicitly in the provinces. Every one, he declared, was swindling and willing to take any criminal steps to live well. Bela Kun assumed the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Hungarian Soviet Government in March, 1919. The Hungarian Soviet Government succeeded the Republican Government of Count Karolyi, and immediately he took office Bela Kun got in touch with the heads of the Russian Soviet Government. He was considered the founder of the Communist party in Hungary.

BELA KUN.

As to the Communist view of Bela Kun's retirement, we learn from the editor of the New York Elore, a radical Magyar daily, that it is immaterial to the Council-Republic of Hungary whether Bela Kun or some other person is in power so long as the instructions of the Workers' and Peasants' Councils are faithfully carried out. It is pointed out that there was great dissatisfaction with Bela Kun because he was not strong enough as a leader. A counter-revolution was springing up and the great bloodshed inevitably involved in such a movement could only be avoided by the firm arm of repression. The men named as new officials of the Communist Government in Hungary are said to possess the force and resolution necessary for such repression. But we are assured that whatever the change of personnel, the system of government remains the same, which is one "built upon industrial democracy, an industrial government system for the workers, and of the workers. It may be overthrown by a force that is superior to the force of the proletariat, but at present no such superior force exists in Hungary."

Warts Are Contagious.

Warts are contagious, as is proved by experiments on their own fingers made by Drs. Udo J. Wile and Lyle B. Kingery, of the University of Michigan Medical School. These physicians seem to have proved that the warts are caused by some sort of a virus that passes easily through a filter and therefore through the sound human skin.

MONTREAL.

Old Days Compared With City That Prince of Wales Visited.

Reign on, majestic Ville-Marie!
Spread wide thy ample robes of state;
The heralds cry that thou art great,
And proud are thy young sons of thee.
Mistress of half a continent.
Thou risest from thy girlhood's rest;
We see thee conscious heave thy breast
And feel thy rank and thy descent.

Sprung of the saint and chevalier!
And with the Scarlet Tunic wed;
Mount Royal's crown upon thy head;
And past thy footstool, broad and clear,
St. Lawrence sweeping to the sea;
Reign on, majestic Ville-Marie!

The city of a million!

That is what Montreal is reaching out to be — not, perhaps, through reasoned purpose so much as by the natural and inevitable factors in the case.

When the grandfather of the present Prince of Wales visited Montreal, points out the Gazette, the population was 70,000 people. All was country above St. Catharine street or thereabouts. In 1860 the then prince worshipped in Christ Church Cathedral; and that sacred edifice bad been built upon ground over which the boys used to shoot snipe.

A lady of the time, remonstrating with her husband for having bought a house west of McGill College avenue, said that she was not going to live in the country.

McGill University was the outstanding feature of the West End of the city at the time of the visit of the Prince of Wales.

The grounds originally went down to St. Catherine street. Few, indeed, were the buildings; but Sir William Dawson used to say of it, even in the primitive and restricted days, that it was "a beam in darkness"; adding—"let it grow."

None of the great buildings which now dot the campus were in evidence at the time of the prince's visit; but, nevertheless, the city was finding its soul.

Education, which had been neglected, was beginning to be systematized; the fame of McGill was spreading; music was cultivated in intimate and charming circles—small, indeed, but select, and which, removed from the clamors of trade, was a means of grace in the residential sections. The great competitive enterprises made possible by Confederation, which came to pass later, had still to be born; and leisure was possible in a small world and an easy day.

The citizens struggled home at night by the fitful glimmer of the gas lamp, situated at widely separated intervals on the narrow streets. If one were at all under the weather he ran the risk of imminent death. People, indeed, who knew they would be out late provided themselves with lanterns; and it was a common thing to wear these lanterns at the side when one got out of the theatre and had some distance to go. The quivering lights seemed to add to the Cimmerian gloom, while the condition of the streets was beyond description.

An "old residenter" remarked to the Gazette recently that it was as much as your life was worth to slip off the sidewalk and be engulfed in the mud of the streets. This especially applied to Craig street, off which Cote street went northward — that dismal old street where the Theatre Royal held forth and witnessed the triumph of a Siddons, a Sothern (Sen.), a Booth, and the leading lights of Themis, in the palmy days of the old playhouse, when Shakespeare and the legitimate drama occupied the boards, when the "gods" were critical, and the general pabulum was the classics.

When the theatre was over the people, if it happened to be a dark night, trimmed and lighted their lanterns and wended their way homewards; but the younger element loved to stay behind and pay a visit to the old historic beer garden at the corner of Cote and Craig streets. There the artists mingled with the common herd and imbibed porter and beer and sausages, told stories, danced and played and proved that

The best of all ways to lengthen your days
Is to steal a few hours from the night, my dear.

Had a powerful tramway company then threatened a rise in price of tickets it would not have mattered to the people, who lived in what we would now call the centre of the city.

They could and would walk. There was no distance then in a city in respect of whose dimensions the Hotel Dieu was deemed to be out of civic bounds.

To-day the threat of a rise in the price of tickets occasions something like a panic. The city has been made over. It is new and adventurous. It has pushed out and out, and to-day many thousands of people travel from five to forty miles every day to and from their work.

Ste. Anne's is considered at the elbow. Hudson, fifty miles distance, is no hardship. St. Eustache is even considered a suburb. Great populations east and west and north live in what was the country a few years ago, and are dependent on the cars. —W. B. Lighthall.

To Save Charred Documents.

Documents that have been charred by fire are rendered readable if collodion is poured over the charred paper. In a few minutes this dries and a tough, transparent coating is produced through which the printing can be seen. Bank notes and other papers thus charred have been treated in this way with success.

I Am Not Poor.

Pray hold me not in scorn. I am not poor. Poor rather is the man who desires many things. Where shall I take my place? Where in a little time from henceforth you shall know. Do you answer for yourself! From henceforth in a little time.—Leonardo da Vinci (translated by Edward McCurdy).

British Supremacy.

F. W. Wile, formerly Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail, addressed the Halifax Rotary Club recently. He said he was preaching the doctrine of an Anglo-Saxon entente, and he did it strongly, but in the course of his speech he alienated the regard of two British seamen who were in the company, by saying that the financial supremacy was passing from London to New York, and that the supremacy of Great Britain in the merchant marine was moving in the same direction. The captain of the British steamer Wabana, cried out, "no," to the first assertion, and to the second he shouted "not on your life"; the chief officer of the Sachem doing the same thing. The crowd then took up the protest in regard to the shipping and there were cries of "no, no," from all over the dining room, more than half the company joining in the protest. Mr. Wile did not persist in his assertion, but turned it off with a laugh by saying that the objectors to what he had stated must have "inside information."

The Pond Skater.

Insects that walk on the water by means of pneumatic floats are the familiar spider and the pond skater. The pond skater really walks on pneumatic floats. There are tiny hairs on the feet of this insect, so fine that they cannot be seen, that are arranged to collect air. The amount collected in and about these hairs is sufficient to allow the insects to walk or float on the surface of the water. As each foot is put down it forms a cuplike depression, or tiny pit, in the water. The foot does not sink because the air bubble that has been formed is too light to let it. A fine covering of hair protects the water spider, too, and even if it is submerged in the water it is never really wet; the hair keeps a layer of air between its body and the water. It looks like a white pearl when below the surface.

Population of Galt.

The report of the city assessment department shows a falling off of 124 in Galt's population, which is given as 12,434. It is felt that soldiers returning more than make this up. The assessment now reaches $10,805,612, an increase of $57,701. There is a slight decrease on income assessed.

The Wonderful Congo.

The Congo is the most wonderful system of waterway on the face of the globe. It has twice the extent of the navigable waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries and three times its population. Professor Dupont, once director of the Museum of Natural History at Brussels, said that its fertile valleys were destined to be the granary of the world.

Unworthy American Soldier.

In 1812, on the sixth of August, Detroit was surrendered by Gen. William Hull to the British, under General Brock. After Hull was released by the British he was court-martialed by the Americans, found guilty of cowardice and condemned to be shot. President Madison modified the sentence to dishonorable discharge from the army and allowed Hull to go free.

Oh, Be Careful, Girls!

Girl wooed by villain. He looks all right, but he is forty, wears evening dress and his hair is thinning. Oh, can nothing be done to warn our innocent girls that an unmarried man more than thirty-five who wears evening dress and has thin hair is a moral leper? Not while picture directors have anything to say about it. Harry Leon Wilson in the Saturday Evening Post.

Turtle Unsteps Sewer.

To open a stopped up sewer pipe Frank Ward of Richmond, Mo., caught a small turtle and cut a small hole in its shell. Then he tied a string in the hole and started the turtle through the sewer pipe. Whenever the turtle stopped a pull on the string started it clawing its way forward again until the pipe was clear.

Of French Origin.

The prefix Fitz (the son of), so common in England, is supposed to have originated in Flanders. It is remarkable that it is now unknown in France but it occurs in the ancient documents and chronicles of that country. It was brought to England by the Normans under William the Conqueror.

Solo Most Frequently Used.

Music may be joined to words in many ways: in church music, opera, oratorio, madigrals, part songs, and so on. But experience shows that the most frequently used type is the solo, ranging in its manifestations from primitive folk song up to the richest complexities of the art.

Eliminated.

Marie and Helen were playing house one day, when Ruth joined them. They were not particularly anxious to see her that day, and finally said "Well you can be the maid and this is your day out."—Nebraska Awgwan.

Money in Blueberries.

The average profit from an acre of Maine blueberry land is said to be about $100, and as no fertilizer or cultivation is necessary these berries are a quick and profitable crop. This is one of Washington county's big industries. For instance, the whole section from Porcupine mountain to the east Machias line is practically all blueberry land. Several factories are devoted to the canning of the berries.

Increase of English.

In the year 1600 there were about six million persons who spoke English—a much smaller number than spoke French, German, Italian or Spanish. Today Englishspeaking people number about one hundred and twenty millions, or about double the aggregate of those who speak French, Italian or Spanish and half as many again as speak German or Russian.

WAR AFFECTED MANY BOXERS

SOME CLAIM IT MADE THEM NERVOUS WHILE OTHERS ARE MORE CALM.

JEFFERIES WAS COOL IN RING

CORBETT GREW EXCITED WHILE SULLIVAN FRIGHTENED OPPONENTS

Many boxers who served with the Allied forces in France say that they get nervous before entering the ring. They claim that this is due to the fact that they were put to a severe physical test while under fire. Other athletes, however, claim that the experience had as soldiers made them all the more courageous and that they do not know what fear means. Several of the gladiators of the prize ring become nervous before battle, while others remain calm. Jim Corbett was one of the excitable kind, while Jeffries was as cool as an icehouse.

Sullivan never quaked before anything that walked, and he defeated most of his opponents by instilling fear before they entered the ring. His very name at one time made prospective rivals cower, and when they went into the ring he had them half licked.

A former backer of the ex-champion said recently that all that Sullivan had to do in a fight was to look at his antagonist to make him shiver.

Sullivan never knew what nervousness was. The night before a fight he would fall asleep as easily as on any other night.

Probably no pugilist in the ring today is more indifferent to the termination of a fight in which he is to be the principal than Sullivan used to be in the best days of his ring career.

On the other hand, the slightest thing caused Corbett to worry.

Corbett says he was not always of this nature. His nervousness developed, strange to say, after he became the champion. Then he fretted more than when he was struggling for fame in the roped arena.

Corbett was very figety before a contest. The least trifle seemed to bother him. All his thoughts were on the fight, and he could not seem to banish the prospective fight from his mind. He carried his nervousness into the ring, and to watch him while he was sitting in his chair waiting for the first gong, one who did not know his temperament would very naturally think he was sitting on pins and needles.

Many of the great fighters plan their course of battle days ahead. They map out their line of action even in their sleep. This increases their nervous tension, and often undoes weeks of faithful training.

Even at that, when they get inside the ropes they forget all about their planning and fight by instinct alone. So all their worrying and fretting is for naught.

When Jeffries entered the Coney Island Athletic Club to fight Bob Fitzsimmons for the championship in 1899 one would have thought he was out for a drive instead of facing the best man in the world up to that time. He came through the box office of the club wearing a flaring red sweater and a golf cap. He was as indifferent to everything and everybody as if he were present to witness the fight. When asked that night as to what he thought of his chances he carelessly replied:

"I think I'll win. If I don't I won't make a holler; that's all."

Nothing seemed to disturb him, and the vast crowd marvelled at his self-control and lack of emotion.

Asked one time how he could control his feeling so well before a fight, Jeffries said:

"I can't exactly explain it, but it is my nature.

"I have been that way since a kid. I was never afraid of anybody or anything. I don't know what it is to be nervous or rattled, even if a fellow placed the muzzle of a gun before my nose, and a few have been pointed there."

Sullivan and Miller also passed the 500 mark for the Centrals. Villenuve was high man with 603. Ritchie next with 590. Heaslip also passed the 500 mark

Burmese Marriages.

A curious idea among the Burmese is that people born on the same day of the week must not marry. Hence each girl carries a record of her birthday in her name, each day having a letter belonging to it, and all children are called by a name that begins with that letter.

Fine for Company.

I had given a friend a recipe for a pudding. One day I was at her house with several others and at dinner the pudding was served. The woman next to me remarked how nice it was and I said, "Yes, and it is so cheap." Every one at the table smiled.—Exchange.

Accommodating Lily.

South America is not the only country that can boast of large leaves. In India the Victoria Regia grows leaves several feet across, and with a buoyancy sufficient to sustain the weight of a child. The edges turn up and form a sort of bowl.

Fish of Lake Erie.

Lake Erie produces more fish to the square mile than any other body of water in the world.

DON'T LIKE CROWN PRINCE

"Little Willie" Tries to Win Friendship of the Island People.

The German ex-Crown Prince, it seems, is still at Wieringen. But if a referendum were held among the inhabitants of Wieringen the island would soon be rid of him. Even the feeling of the humblest peasant is decidedly against a prolonged stay of the uninvited guest.

"Little Willie" caused a small commotion in the island in the beginning; but now each man goes his way without taking any notice of the illustrious personage. It is true that he walks in "klompen," or wooden shoes, and that he "sets up" to the villagers; but these things he must do, otherwise he would be miserable beyond belief. That is the consensus of opinion among the Wieringers.

But, says one of the island notables, he is as hypocritical as ever. His handling of the plough and his work at the village blacksmith's are a make-believe—another manifestation of his old craving for popularity. And the village belles of Wieringerland will have none of his haughtiness, none of his philandering.

But wily Willie is scattering bounties broadcast, giving sweets to the little children and occasional presents to their parents.

The only cab owner on the island has done well, by driving him and his small retinue and their occasional visitors about. He has been able to buy a motor car, and shows you with some pride the fur coat he has got from "the prince," with the gold tie-pin with its gold "W" and the imperial crown.

Yes, sturdy Japp Bruul, the proprietor of the Wieringen stage coach, the only public means of conveyance, would be loath to see his best client depart. But even Bruul's man betrays a spirit of independence towards the majesty of the ex-potentate. "I just treat him as I do you, mynheer," the cabby said to me, "not as they did in Potsdam, and if he doesn't like it he can lump it."

But the happiest man on the island, should Willie quit, would be the village parson, who in deference to the wishes of the Dutch Government, gave up his manse for six weeks, which have grown to long over six months, and who fervently hopes that his house need not shelter young William for six years.

How to Bathe.

Sea-bathing rules seem to be limited to—Don't bathe just after a meal; don't stop in the water when you shiver; don't get out of your depth. But—well, here's the science of the thing.

Undress, put on your costume, fling something over your shoulders, and sit on the beach for ten minutes. When half the ten has passed throw off the "something" and sit without it. That is to establish, in two stages, the acclimatization of your body to the air temperature. The run from the bathing machine and plunge into the water—dubbed correct—is quite wrong!

Wrong, also, after that ten-minute adjustment to bury yourself beneath the waves. Paddle for a couple of minutes. Then in up to your knees. Then thigh-deep, waist-deep, and, finally, immerse yourself. You won't say "Ouch! It's cold!" because you won't feel cold. Cold is but a contrast to heat, and if you have by stages adjusted your body to the lower air and water temperature—well, the contrast has gone!

And when in the water keep wet! Drying, you see, means evaporation, and that abstracts heat. Keep wet! That is why swimmers, as distinct from bathers, are much warmer. It's not the exercise; it's the water covering.

Then there's the shivery feeling. Out, says the rule. Yes, out; but only for three minutes. Don't—with a horrid feeling that your bathe has been horribly short—go and dress. Sit on the beach, and put a thick towel around your body. Cast it off after two minutes, wait another two, and then return to the sea. No shivers then!

Oriental Crowds.

To occidental travellers the most vivid impression produced by a first contact with the Near East is the surprise of being in a country where the human element increases instead of diminishes the delight of the eye, says Edith Wharton in the Yale Review. After all, then, the ultimate harmony between nature and architecture and the human body that is revealed in Greek art was not an artist's counsel of perfection, but an honest rendering of reality; there were, there still are, privileged scenes where the fall of a green-grocer's draperies or a milkman's cloak or a beggar's rags are part of the composition, distinctly related to it in line and color, and where the natural, unstudied attitudes of the human body are correspondingly harmonious, however humdrum the acts it is engaged in. The discovery, to the traveller returning from the East, robs the most romantic scenes of western Europe of half their charm: in the Piazza of San Marco, in the market-place of Siena, where at least the robes of the procurators or the gay tights of Pinturicchio's striplings once justified, man's presence among his works, one can see, at first, only the outrage inflicted on beauty by the "plentiful strutting manikins" of the modern world. Morocean crowds are always a feast to the eye. The instinct of skilful drapery, the sense of color subdued by custom, but breaking out in subtle glimpses under the universal ashy tints, make the humblest assemblage of donkey-men and water-carriers an ever-renewed delight.

Jade.

The world's principal jade mine is in Burma, where the privilege of mining the stone has been in the possession of one tribe for many generations.

Rev. Alex. Martin, superannuated Methodist Minister, who had occupied sixteen charges during his ministry, died at Belleville.

LOCAL TRADE IN FURS SHOWS INCREASE

Barrie's are Doing Brisk Business at Home and by Mail, Some of the Popular Styles.

Dame Fashion is not at all restrictive with regard to material and make this season, when it comes to a question of fur—and if you have a fur question, take it to Barries. They will solve the difficulty on small notice. Almost every variety, from the snowy white ermine to the jet black fox, appears in some form or other on the costume of the stylishly clad woman of today. Beautiful mink stoles, exclusively designed are on display, while the unique cape effect is much in evidence. These with muff to match and there is noticeable an absence of the elaborate trimmings of the last few years.

Black fox is specially favored and those beautiful furs are particularly desirable as such a set can be worn with almost any colored costume, without spoiling the effect. Then there is the white ermine, designed along different lines to suit the various fancies, and these furs are perhaps the most desirable of all as they add a certain touch of refined beauty to a woman's apparel, and are becoming to almost any face, even the decided brunette.

Perhaps there is nothing nicer for the debutante, or the society bud or even the young lady who uses an evening gown just once in a while, than a costume of clinging crepe-de-chine in shell pink, edged with white fur, and this mode of trimming is much-worn this season.

The sales in furs at Barries so far have shown a steadily increasing volume of business on previous years not alone in Peterborough but with the branches out in Regina, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, a result undoubtably influenced by the policy of the house is deciding not to avail itself of any undue advantage in price with its clients. A particularly pleasing feature is the numerous mail orders that have been received even from distances as far away as the eastern coast, thus proving that quality, together with style, always spells success.

It is quite certain that if a comparison be made with the prices quoted in the various catalougues it will at once be obvious that the company can and does supply its customers with not only furs, but ready-to-wear as well, at prices that actually do compare advantageously with any of its competition in Canada.

FEW JOBS FOR VETERANS.

Saskatoon, Dec. 12.—That the labor market for returned soldiers is at a low ebb is indicated from replies to questionnaires recently sent out to local employers by local organizations acting in the interests of the veterans. Out of eighty-five answers received, only two employers had positions open for returned men. There are about two hundred and fifty workless veterans in the city.

NO DANCING IN THE "Y."

London Directors Set Their Faces Against the Proposition.

London, Ont., Dec. 12. Dancing in the Y. M. C. A. building will be frowned upon by the directors here, in the belief of several who offered opinions on the proposal. They claim that dancing at its best develops "only the legs" of the devotees, and the aim of the "Y." is to improve general physical and moral standards as well. In these respects, they will probably rule at their next meeting that there be no dancing.

STEAMER SINKING IN ATLANTIC

GERMANY REFUSES TO SIGN PROTOCOL BUT TONE OF REPLY IS COCILIATORY

Believed at Paris That Peace Negotiations Will be Satisfacory Disposed of by Christmas.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Dec. 13.—Germany's reply to the Entente notes relative to signing the protocol of the peace treaty does not constitute an acceptance, although couched in conciliatory terms, according to The Echo De Paris. It is said the Allies will have to send a new note, but the belief is expressed that the Berlin Government will yield and that the protocol will be signed about Christmas.

NOT BOTHERING ABOUT U. S.

Reports declare that there is no intimation in the German reply that the Berlin Government has taken a position that failure to ratify the treaty by the United States has created an altered situation, and it is hinted, it is said, that treaty action by the United States Senate is a purely internal American affair that does not absolve the other powers from the obligation of exchanging ratifications.

The belief is expressed here that the reply attempts to temporise in an effort to obtain a modification of the demand for indemnity for vessels sunk at Scapa Flow. It is said, also, that the reply seeks to persuade the Entente that demands for the extradition of German officers and others accused of violations of the laws of war are fraught with serious internal aspects.

HORSE AND BUGGY RECOVERED HERE

LINDSAY PROPERTY STOLEN BROUGHT TO THIS CITY AND SOLD

For the second time in the last couple of months the Peterborough police have located a horse and buggy stolen from Lindsay. This time the alleged thief is G. A. Shire.

Shire drove the horse and buggy to this city and offered it for sale. He sold the buggy for $90 and accepted a cheque for that amount on the Royal Bank. About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon he cashed the cheque, and apparently made his escape, as he has not yet been located. The horse was found in the Windsor hotel stable yesterday.

The owners from Lindsay came to the city last night and recovered the horse and buggy, so that the person who has suffered the loss is the one who paid the $90 for the vehicle Until the capture of the thief, which is expected at any time, he will be short that amount.

A letter was received from Chief Short of Lindsay this morning, accompanied by a warrant for Shire's arrest, and complimenting the Peterborough police for their efficient work in making those last two captures of stolen property from Scugogville.

CARMANIA REACHES HALIFAX

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Dec. 13.—The "Carmania" docked at eight-thrity this morning.

HEALTH OFFICER McPHERSON'S REPORT

To the chairman and members of the Peterborough Board of Health.

Gentlemen:—I beg to submit for your consideration the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health.

Infectious Diseases

The following communicable diseases have been present during the year: Diptheria, Scarlet Fever, Measles, Smallpox, Whooping Cough Chickenpox, Typhoid Fever and Infantile Paralysis. Of these the following have been reported:

Smallpox	26
Diptheria	21
Scarlet Fever	19
Measles	3
Typhoid Fever	1
Infantile Paralysis ...	1

The most serious has been diptheria from which there have been four deaths, and in this connection I would like to draw attention to the following points:

The importance of early recognition by the doctors of all such cases and the necessity of taking steps to clear up all doubtful cases by a laboratory examination.

The importance of early treatment by antitoxin of those affected and those who have been exposed, both young and old;.

The necessity for inspection of the school children for any sign of inflamed nose or throat.

The need of a laboratory in the city where microscopic examinations can be made and an early diagnosis given.

With regard to the smallpox that prevails at the present time, I would say that a great many of the cases are very mild in type and for that reason in some cases they have been treated as Chickenpox. On this account the disease is difficult to control and is found in all parts of the city, and will in all probability continue through the winter unless the citizens co-operate by insisting on vaccination in the family and in their business concerns. Recent vaccination is an absolute preventative and the only known preventative. Those who will not avail themselves of the protection must put up with the consequences if they chance to be unfortunate enough to develop it or be exposed to it.

The Isolation Hospital

Owing to the fact that the more severe infectious diseases have been present throughout the year the hospital has seldom been closed and on account of two frequently occurring together it has necessitated the employment of an extra nurse.

The use of the shacks for smallpox has further increased the expenditure, as they have been in almost constant use since June.

The matter of painting and repairs on the main building and the altering and equipping of the shacks so as to make them more serviceable for hot and cold weather and from other standpoints should be taken up at an early date. Also the advisability of securing another assistant in nursing work might be considered.

The Sanitary Work

For various reasons this work is not being carired on as thoroughly as I hope it will be in the coming season. The magnitude of the work is not realized by any except those who are actively engaged in it. It means the examination of all residential premises with enquiries and reports regarding the general sanitary condition of the buildings and grounds, the sewage disposal, water supply, habitable condition of the house number of occupants, sickness during past year, animals kept and condition of their quarters. This means a systematic house to house visit by the Sanitary Inspector so that the health authorities will have a first hand knowledge of the actual condition in all the various details that prevail in every part of the city.

Then comes the systematic examination of the public quarters for the protection of the patrons and employees. This means the hotels, restaurants, boarding and lodging houses, the stores where food or refreshments are manufactured or sold. This includes the bake shops, butcher shops, fish stores, confectionery stores, ice cream booths, milk dairies, the market, etc., to see that food is produced, handled, kept and deliver-

Famous Pastors At Murray Street

There are two names in connection with the Baptist denomination in Canada that will insure full houses wherever they are announced: One of these is Dr. T. T. Shields of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, and the other that of Dr. John MacNeill of Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto.

On the evening of Thursday next, Dec. 8th, both of these distinguished speakers will be heard in Murray Street Baptist Church on the subject of the Forward Movement. The public will be welcomed at this service, but as the church will accomodate only eight hundred persons, it will be advisable that those desiring seats should be present in good time.

Dr. Shields will be remembered by his lecture on "The Fall of Lucifer," delivered twice in our city, and his sermons in Murray Street on the occasion of the 70th anniversary.

Dr. John MacNeill is the president of the Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec and an orator of more than continental reputation.

JURY ALLOWS RUSSELL WHATMAN $300 DAMAGES FOR DEATH OF HIS CHILD

Bring in Verdict After Lengthy Deliberation That the Drowning of Frederick Whatman Was Due to the Negligence of Mrs. Duprau in Not Shutting Door.

The County Court adjourned for its fall session last evening about 8.45 when the jury brought in a verdict in favor of Russell Whatman in his suit against Mrs. Margaret Duprau to the extent of $300.

Defendant's Plea.

Mr. Kerr, pleading for the defendant in his address to the jury, laid special emphases upon the evidence of the defendant when she swore that she had supplied lumber for the tennant to fix the floor over the cistern through which the boy fell. He also laid stress upon the fact that the defendant did not know before the accident the very dangerous condition of the floor to the building. She knew the whole building needed repairs and had asked Whatman to leave the premises a considerable time before the accident occurred.

In the matter of opening the door and not shutting it behind her Mr. Kerr submitted the defendant had not shown any negligence. She stated that she had often seen it open and more than that there was no latch on the door by which to fasten it after she had passed through.

Mr. Wearing's Address.

In Mr. Wearing's address to the jury on behalf of the plaintiff, he urged them to believe the story of the little girl and her mother. The little girl gave her evidence clearly and accurately, he stated, and under cross-examination stuck firmly to her story.

According to this evidence, Mrs. Duprau had broken a wooden, bolt to go through that door and in her in jetnous anxiety to get to where Mrs. Whatman was, had left that door, which at other times was always kept closed, open. He submitted that that was negligence on the part of the defendant which directly caused the drowning of the child.

As for the matter of damages he submitted that the little fellow was already making himself useful about the house. Mrs. Whatman gave evidence to that effect. After he went to school as the son of a working man, he would most likely work on Saturdays and turn his earnings over to meet the expenses of the home Then from the ages of 14 to 21 he would remain at home adding materially to its upkeep.

Warned Against Sympathy.

In his charge to the jury the judge warned them not to take into consideration any sympathy they might have for the bereaved parents. The law takes the stand, explained His Honor, that the loss of a child to a parent cannot be made up by any amount of money. The money to be assessed, if any, must be based upon the financial loss to the parents by the death of the child.

But before they assessed any damages, he explained, they must assure themselves that the death of the child was the direct result of the negligence of the defendant.

The judge explained that Mrs. Duprau did not stand in the position of landlady to the plaintiff as it was not from her that he had rented the house.

He submitted questions to the jury that he requested them to answer in bringing in their verdict.

After a retirement of about two hours the jury brought in the following answer to the questions:

1.—Was the death by drowning of the child, Frederick Leonard Whatman, caused by negligence on the part of the defendant? Answer, yes.

2.—If so, wherein did this negligence lie? Answer, by not shutting the door as she found it.

3.—Could the plaintiff have taken precautions that would have avoided the accident. On this question the jury were not agreed.

4.—Could the wife of the plaintiff have taken precautions that would have avoided the accident. Answer, no.

5.—Could and should the defendant have taken precautions that would have avoided the accident. Answer, yes.

In answer to the question regarding the amount assessed for the defendent to pay the plaintiff, they considered $300 a fair allowance.

The judge stated that he was very anxious the jury should agree on question No. 3, and they retired again. About fifteen minutes to 4 o'clock they returned with a negative answer, declaring it was on account of no negligence on the part of the plaintiff that the accident took place. There were two dissenting jurymen to this decision, but as ten agreeing is sufficient on a civil case, the answer was in the negative.

ANOTHER DECLINE IN EXCHANGE TODAY

STOCK MARKET IN NEW YORK SHOWS RESULT, AND MONEY TIGHT.

CALL LOANS RISE 15 PER CENT

SHARP REDUCTION IN EXPORTS OF UNITED STATES IS NOW LOOKED FOR.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Dec. 13.—Another allround decline in foreign exchange, especially on London, and a renewed stringency in the domestic money market, due primarly to the conservative action of the Federal Reserve Bank, were the outstanding features of this week's stock market. Further unsettlement was created by the revival of liquidation from foreign sources, heavy selling of high-grade issues, especially rails.

Accompanying the demoralization in exchange, call loans rose to fifteen per cent. in the local money market, and time funds were scarcer than at any time since last month's violent decline, out-of-town banks using most of their reserves for the purchase of mercantile paper.

Although foreign exchange has shown steady depreciation for many months not until this week that situation gave rise to general apprehension. The announcement by the British Government that it would not resort to artificial means to stabilize the market caused bills on London to drop to a new discount of $3.65¼. This represents a discount of fully 25 or more than one quarter of its normal value.

Bankers and leaders of commerce are agreed that unless steps to readjust the British rate are speedily taken a sharp reduction of this country's exports must ensue. Reports received during the week indicate a new record thus far this year for American foreign trade, but much of the increase is due to the higher commodity price.

ALL-IMPORTANT PROBLEMS OF FUTURE TO BE SETTLED BY PREMIERS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 13.—The Inter-Allied conference was resumed this morning in Downing street with Premiers Lloyd George and Clemenceau, Foreign Minister Scialoia of Italy, and other officials of the British, French and Italian governments present. The British confreres included Earl Curzon, A. J. Balfour and Andrew Bonar Law. Jules Cambon attended with Premier Clemenceau.

Concessions to United States.

Paris, Dec. 13.—As a result of the conferences being held in London by Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George, the United States will be notified that in order to facilitate a compromise between the adverse parties in the American Senate the Allies are willing to accept, to as great an extent as possible, some of the reservations to the treaty made by the Foreign Relations Committee, according to the Matin. It is said that the Allies will do everything in order that America may participate in future conferences.

Important problems, the newspaper says, shall henceforth be settled by a council of the premiers of Great Britain, France and Italy to meet sometimes in Paris and sometimes in London, and will examine principally Russian and Turkish problems.

DISTRICT DAIRYMEN MEET AND AGAIN ELECT G. A. GILLESPIE THEIR DIRECTOR

Dairymen are Urged to Take Precautions That Will Aid Greatly in Production—Quantity and Quality Count, and Not Price Alone is Emphasized to Farmers.

At the district meeting of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association at Keene last night Mr. G. A. Gillespie was re-elected director to represent this district on the board of directors of the association.

An interesting address was delivered by Mr. G. G. Publow of Kingston, chief dairy instructor for Eastern Ontario. He emphasized the necessity for dairymen to do everything in their power to build up their herds and increase production. He urged them not to narrow themselves down to considering prices altogether. The markets of the world can buy up all that can be produced for years to come, and pay good prices for them, he declared.

The speaker laid emphasis on the necessity of good breeding. High bred sires may not always be of high testing lineage. Dairymen should use careful judgment in choosing high red sires of high testing qualities. This precaution, if properly taken, would greatly benefit the herds of Ontario.

The average cow produces approximately 3,000 pounds of milk, while 6,000 pounds could just as easily be the average with proper care. Then, if the farmer received only 15 cents a pound instead of 30 cents, he would be better off and conditions in the world would be improved.

Dairy Instructor Ward submitted a lengthy report, which will be published in full in Monday's issue.

GREEKS MEET TURKS AND STRIFE RENEWED

NUMBER ARE REPORTED KILLED AND THE TURKS ARE DRIVEN BACK.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Saloniki, Dec. 13.—Greek soldiers and Turkish irregular troops are engaged in scattering skirmishes during the last couple of days in Western Asia Minor, according to an official statement issued at army headquarters here. Turkish forces, numbering 150 men, attacked Greek position about nine miles northwest of Soma yesterday and three hundred other irregulars made an attack on the Greek positions on the road from Kinik to Soma.

After three hours' fighting, the Turks withdrew, leaving in the hands of the Greeks a large amount of war material. One Greek soldier was killed and three wounded, while the bodies of four Turks were found on the field.

A Greek detachment has ousted a party of Turks which had occupied the heights north of [illegible] and which had for a couple of days maintained an artillery fire upon the city. When the Greeks advanced the Turks retired in disorder. Greek losses were limited to three wounded soldiers while the Turks lost several men and, in adition, were forced to leave their war material behind.

CITIZEN'S LIBERTY LEAGUE FORM AN INDEPENDENT POLITICAL PARTY

Lt. Col. H. A. C. Machin, the Leader, Announces Motto Will be "Truth and Plain Speaking"—Aim to Contest all Electinos Provincial and Dominion.

As a direct outcome of the two-day convention of the Citizens' Liberty League, the announcement has gone out that the league will now become an independent political party, to enter candidates for the municipal, provincial and Federal elections, with the declared policy of "averting the narrow-mindedness of those who would oppress us, and to avoid at the same time the license of those who would go to extremes." On top of that, their motto, as announced by Lieut.-Col. H. A. C. Machin, president, is to be "Plain-speaking and Truth." and, the colonel added in the course of an address last evening, "If we can root out the deceit and hypocrisy with which we have been opposed in the past, we will have gone a long way towards accomplishing our aims." In referring to his recent defeat at the polls, Col. Machin had no regrets for his "political assassination," and added that he was satisfied, since he had been able to do his share towards bringing down the old Government of Ontario. The success of the prohibition referendum he regarded as but a temporary setback to the Liberty League on one of their policies. "As a result of this convention the Liberty League has been reinvigorated" he declared, "and we will come back as a political party on broad, decent, democratic lines. We are trying desperately to rid Ontario of its hypocrisy and deceit, for that, in our opinion, is the great enemy with which we have to contend."

Objects to Mr. Raney.

Col. Machin evidently objected to the appointment of the Hon. W. E. Raney as Attorney-General, for regarding Mr. Raney he said: "He is entitled to his personal views, but it does not argue well for the democracy of Ontario to have for an Attorney-General a man who is bigoted along certain lines. If ever there was an added reason for the activity of the Liberty League, it was the appointment of Mr. Raney as Attorney-General, for we will need to guard our liberties from narrow oppression."

The Colonel's message to Hon. E. C. Drury Prime Minister, was that if he wishes to be fair regarding the temperance question, he should provide another vote for Ontario on the bone-dry problem at the same time as the Federal Government gives Ontario the plebiscite on the question of liquor importation from other Provinces. Many of the Liberty Leaguers, he declared, feel they were tricked on the late ballot, so he puts it up to the Premier to give them another vote, on one straight question, yes or no for total prohibition in Ontario. The speaker read an extract from a church paper in which a prominent minister of the city was quoted as saying, with regard to the Liberty League: "We have no other programme but to make them hate us the more."

"When we hear super-Christians talking like that," he continued, "isn't it about time for we ordinary sinful mortals to get together and defend our liberties? We did expect a little humanity, decency charity and kindness from the Christians, but instead, we are tyrannized over, and now they go about knocking us by calling us names."

Finds "Dope" Increase.

HEALTH OFFICER McPHERSON'S REPORT.

EVERY CITIZEN who is interested in the welfare of Peterborough should read carefully the annual report of Health Officer McPherson as published in another column of this issue. The document contains in detail a plan for building up the health department, a plan which is warranted by the size and importance of the city. Dr. McPherson's idea is that the department should be reorganized, with a medical officer of health in charge to devote his entire time to the work, and with the necessary assistance. This matter has for years been before the Board of Health, and it seems that the question of expense alone has prevented it adoption. Dr. Amys, while acting officer of health made practically the same recommendation to the Board

The Provincial Health Act is wide in its scope and it gives the different municipalities wide powers in the matter of enforcement. No one familiar with local conditions will claim for a moment that the law is observed in this city. For this, none of the officials in the employe of the Board of Health are responsible. No one man can in justice be required to do a work which would tax the energies of three or four. No physician can be expected to devote his entire time to the duties of Health Officer on the pittance that has hitherto been allowed him for his service.

The health of the public is more and more enlisting the attention of legislatures. The Dominion Parliament has recently taken an interest in the question and has organised a Federal department of health. The physical well-being of a community is essential to prosperity. The sickly individual is, if not an actual menace to the public, a burden to himself and a trial to his friends

Peterborough has an efficient and conscientious sanitary inspector, but it is impossible for him, unaided, to look after all the details of his office. In spite of his best endeavors, the Health Act is to a great extent a dead letter in this city. Matters locally would be indefinitely worse but for the volunteer work of non-official organisations that have to depend upon public charity for their financial resources. The work of all of these societies could be taken over by a health department organised along the lines suggested by Dr. McPherson Even the medical inspection in schools, that most important branch of the educational system of the city could pass under the control of the department. There is a wide field for endeavor, as Dr. McPherson so clearly shows. This is a matter, too, which cannot much longer be delayed if the provincial health authorities are to be spared the necessity of seeing that the Health Act is properly enforced in Peterborough.

TARIFF COMMISSION NEEDED.

THE UNITED STATES has appointed a tariff commission, a proposition that has been before the Canadian people for some time, and which has been settled by the Dominion Government authorising the Board of Commerce to investigate the operations of the tariff especially as it affects the necessities of life.

If a Dominion Railway Board is necessary as an administrative adjunct, why not a tariff commission upon the same general principles? The former body has since its inception justified its existence. It has meant public control of the transportation problem of the country. In the operation of the tariff, sectional hardships are certain to arise. To investigate all complaints of injustice and to provide a remedy would be the duty of the new commission.

Let the Board of Commerce get busy at once on their specific tariff mission. The supporters of that policy have nothing to fear. It is not likely that it can be shown that the tariff is to any degree responsible for the present high cost of living, when the markets in Europe set the standard for the world. The United States has had practically absolute free trade in foodstuffs and natural products ever since the present American tariff law took effect in 1913. The cost of living did not fall under the operations of that law, and the Americans think so little of the system that there is to be a reversion to the old policy of protection, a policy to which that country owes its industrial prosperity.

HAMILTON AMENDS THE PETITION.

WHEN THE CITY COUNCIL decided to petition the Legislature to amend the law placing the control of the police department under a new board to be composed of the Mayor, ex-officio, and two elected members, notice of this action was sent to other municipalities in Ontario with a request for co-operation. So far as heard from, Hamilton is the only city that has acted on the petition. The board of control there amended the proposition so as to provide that the police magistrate of every municipality shall remain a member of the board, the other two to be the Mayor and an elected citizen. The county judge is alone barred from membership.

It is certainly hard to understand the process of reasoning by which the board of control reached its conclusion. It appears, however, from the report of the proceedings in a Hamilton paper, that the Labor members of the board of control in that city are opposed to independent boards on principle, and are in favor of direct management by the council of all civic departments. For that reason they found it impossible to endorse the Peterborough idea, but compromised with an amendment.

The Hamilton controllers could have furthered the object in view if they had eliminated the police magistrate rather than the county judge from membership. The idea is to safeguard the independence of the police force instead of having them under the control of an official with whom they come in almost daily contact. The constables appear as witnesses before the magistrate at frequent intervals and rarely before the county judge. Hamilton has retarded rather than helped on the proposed reform by action that appears both unwarrantde and illogical. They might better have rejected the idea altogether than amend it so as to kill its very purpose.

RIGHTEOUSNESS THROUGH FEAR.

A GIRL OF NINE YEARS was called as a witness in a case heard in the County Court the other day, and it was necessary, according to legal jurisprudence, to ascertain if she had any idea of the solemnity of an oath taken to tell the truth. Asked if she knew what would happen to her if she told a lie, the little creature naively answered, amid the smiles of the assembled lawyers, that "she would go to the bad place."

Is there no higher motive for telling the truth than the fear of punishment? Are the growing children to be constantly impressed with the dread of the consequences of sin? It is at the best only superficial righteousness that is born of such an inspiration. Better an appeal to the higher nature that every child possesses and lead them to do good through sheer love of the right. The child who conducts himself at school with outward propriety under threat of the teacher's rod is apt to run to evil extremes once that menace is removed.

STICKING TO THE GUNS.

THE CONSERVATIVE party conceived the National Policy in the early seventies of the last century, at a time when they were in opposition, and when the industries of the country were struggling for an existence. Work was scarce and wages were low. The cost of living, it is true, was low compared to the existing rate today, but it avails nothing how cheap bread may be if there is no money to buy it.

It was in 1878 that the Conservative party was triumphantly returned to power with protection the main plank in their platform, and from that date the industrial growth of Canada can be dated. Time after time they won the general elections with the trade question the main issue. There never has been any doubt as to the sentiments of the majority of the electorate on the fiscal policy as given effect by the Conservatives.

In 1896 the old party was weakened by the irreparable loss of its revered chieftain, Sir John Macdonald, and by frequent changes of those chosen as his successors. In the elections of that year another question other than the trade policy was before the people, and all these causes contributed to acomplish the defeat of the Government.

During the fifteen years that they were in power the Liberals adhered to the policy of their predecessors by maintainig a protective tariff in spite of their pre-election clamor for free trade. All through those years, too the Conservatives stood to their guns. In 1911 the trade question came before the people again in a new form the principles of the party that fathered protection were again vindicated, and the Government was swept away If there had been any compromise in the days of opposition, any surrender to trimmers, sharp practice in handling the main issue, the success of the Conservative party eight years ago would have been impossible. Is the party now to ignore the lesson taught by experience?

The trade question is the real living issue in Canada today. It has been revived and made the slogan of what is in effect a new party. The urban and rural residents are arrayed against each other as they have never been before. There are men sitting as private members of Parliament and in the Cabinet who are avowed advocates of fre trade—free trade in the very essence of that idea, not the much vaunted cry of protection for revenue only. What can the Conservative party expect to accomplish, what hope can they entertain for future success, until they purge their ranks of this element? What confidence can the people be asked to place in such a combination? What stability is there about a Government which numbers among its nominal adherents men who are in a position to encompass its defeat at any time on the issue that is of most moment to the industrial life of Canada, and such life is the very soul of national existence?

Reminiscences of an Editor

(By A. McG.)

Thirty-four years of active newspaper life seems like a transition from yesterday on casual thought, but when the changes in the affairs of the world are taken into account and the progress made in human events is considered, the years referred to certainly appear like a chapter from the history of a century that has been filled with the story of development. There has been evolution from small to greater things since those days away back in 1885, when I first started as the all night reporter on a morning paper in Detroit. The world has actually been made over since that time. Nothing save human nature is the same. Methods of industry, of transacting every form of commercial business, are different.

The newspaper business has developed wonderfully in the past thirty-four years. There was comparative restriction of its scope in the days referred to, and even the daily paper catered to a small section of the community. The evil that men did, the crimes that were of so frequent occurrence, were featured, rather than the virtues of mankind. But times have changed.

In the early eighties the woman's page was just beginning to make a modest appearance in the large morning papers of the United States. Now consider how essential a feature that department has become. There were no recognized sports then except baseball, horse racing, prize fighting and professional wrestling matches. There is not a pastime now from carpet bowls to yacht racing that does not figure in the daily chronicles of the newspapers.

Back in 1885 the leading labor organization was known as the Knights of Labor with T. V. Powderly as Master Workman. Men were banded together without regard to occupation, and membership was open to all classes except lawyers and kindred professionals. It was the idea of the one big union in embryo, but the organization died a natural death when the workingmen of America began to form unions along trade lines.

In the early stages of its history unionism among the workingmen was regarded as a public menace, and if any notice was taken of it by the newspapers, all references were in the nature of a protest or caustic criticism. But this is a branch of journalism that has been developed with other departments of human endeavor. I lived to see every newspaper of standing in Detroit devote columns of space to the labor movement, with a special reporter or editor in charge of the department. No higher grade of journalistic service was recognized in the profession. The work was difficult, requiring as it did consummate tact, a knowledge of human nature, and a talent for winning the confidence of Labor and Capital alike. The man who can achieve success in such a task has certainly shown himself fitted for the duties of his profession.

I have never belonged to a Labor union, not being eligible for membership in any so far organized. I have never in thirty-four years asked for an increase in salary or for promotion, and I have held every position in the service. Some of the pleasantest recollections of my life are the memories of the men for whom I have worked all these years. Experience has convinced me that the majority of employers are gifted with a sense of justice and are not above material appreciation of faithful service. The world might be better. Then, again, it might be infinitely worse. Right always triumphs, although victory, final and complete, may be delayed. There is nothing in the way of surprises left humanity. Anything is likely to happen in the future in a world in which so much progress has been made in the past.

I flatter myself that in my attempts to faithfuly chronicle current happenings end to forecast coming events, I have never been regarded as an agitator, that is until a change of location brought me of recent years into new environments. With some people the idea seems to prevail that the newspaper man should be held responsible for all the evil that he records in the line of his duties, that he encourages crime, bolshevism included, by any reference to it. I do most sincerely hope that in the finality reckoning I will not be held in any degree morally accountable for the murders, the forgeries, the thefts and other crimes that I have placed in the archives of newspaper history. I am convinced in my own conscience that in this regard I am guiltless.

And now, by way of illustration—I was the first newspaper man in America, unless I am greatly mistaken, who first wrote and printed a story to the effect that an attempt was to be made to transmit power developed at Niagara Falls all over the surrounding district to turn the wheels of industry. I stumbled upon the story by sheer lack. I was at a church social one night in Detroit, when a motherly old lady, seeing that I was a stranger, took me in hand, and, with ineffable tact, tried to make me feel at home. During her conversation she referred with motherly pride to one of her sons who was operating a small manufacturing plant in the city and who, she told me, was working on a plan to develop the idea to which I have referred.

I must confess that the project first struck me as chimerical. But at that time electricity as the motive power for street cars was coming into general use. If, I reflected, it is possible to operate a street car five or ten limes away with an engine located in the centre of the city, why not carry out the same principle with the cataract at Niagara furnishing the power? The story was printed in the Detroit paper with which I was connected, and carried all over the country by the Associated Press, thus enjoying a circulation among millions of readers. Of course, there were skeptics and doubting Thomases, but subsequent events proved that the young inventive genius in Detroit, even if he did not profit by his enterprise, was neither a lunatic nor a dreamer.

I have never been held responsible for giving America the priceless boon of electric energy from Niagara Falls and never felt that I was entitled to any credit for that innovation. I simply did my duty as a newspaper worker as I saw it.

Two years or so ago I had an article on the first page of The Review announcing that the Labor men of the city proposed forming an Independent political party and putting up candidates for city, legislative and federal offices. I was blamed by some for encouraging a radical movement, and accused by others of springing a mere sensational fake

What is the present situation? Union Labor has four representatives in the City Council, has captured the seat in the Legislature, and is out after the mayoralty and other civic offices. These conditions would have been brought about if no newspaper had ever referred to the events which led up to them. The duty of a newspaper is not only to record happenings from day to day but to prepare its readers for what is likely to happen in the future. Forewarned is forearmed. It is a sapless journal indeed that contents itself with the supine policy of waiting and watching for the direction to be taken by the jumping feline.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN

(Kingston Standard.)

The people of Canada will learn with profound regret that the health of Sir Robert Borden, Canada's great war premier, has not improved as much as had been hoped when he went away on his recent Southern trip, and that he may again be obliged to take another trip South in the hope that thereby he may be fully restored to health and strength.

Working under the greatest strain that has been put upon any Canadian premier, and burdened down by the cares and responsibilities which fell to his lot at Canada's leader through all the stormy and vexatious years of the Great War, it is not to be wondered at that his strength has given way under the strain of it all. President Wilson of the United States, whose load was certainly much less burdensome and severe than the premier's—for Canada was in the war from the very beginning, whereas President Wilson had the benefit of three yeras of watchful waiting before his country was driven into the maelstrom—has himself been overcome with his burdens and has been for weeks a very sick man, though fortunately now on the high road to recovery. It is not surprising, therefore, that Sir Robert should have suffered also; and the whole country will offer up a fervent prayer for his speedy restoration to health and that he may long be spared to "carry on" the glorious work he so nobly undertook and which a loyal Canada has so splendidly supplemented.

If, however, he should not regain his health, then surely it would not be fair—great though the loss to Canada and the Empire would be—to ask him to sacrifice himself further and mayhap irreparably ruin his health. The country needs him and needs him badly. His counsel, advice and inspiration at this time are invaluable, for the problems of reconstruction in these days of great unrest are far-reaching and serious—almost as much so as when the war was on.

Nevertheless, we must face the very grave possibility that the limit of his powers of endurance has been reached and that despite the needs of his country, he may be obliged to drop out. If that is so, which heaven forbid, then the choice must be made of a new leader; though we trust that that time may be far, far distant. But if by chance it come soon, then we know no man in the Cabinet today better fitted to succeed to the leadership of the party than Hon. Arthur Meighen, the brilliant Minister of the Interior, a man of sound judgment, of clear, analytical mind, a man richly endowed with all those qualities of mind and heart which go to make up a successful leader. No man in the Cabinet has been closer to Sir Robert Borden than Mr. Meighen, and no man better understands and sympathises with the premier's lofty ideals and purposes than Mr. Meighen. He would be, therefore, the natural successor of Sir Robert, as well as the ablest and best.

We can only hope and pray, however, that such a contingency as the choice of a successor to Sir Robert will not soon arise and that for a long time to come he will lead Canada and see the full fruition of his splendid work. But be the time soon or late when the choice of his successor is made, we may rest assured that Hon. Arthur Meighen will not be overlooked.

"TO SELL COFFEE, SERVE IT," SAYS PHINNEY

"Another cup all around."

That is what everybody wants at Fred S. Phinney's. And when you have had a cup of coffee there you know the reason, because there is coffee—and Fred Phinney's coffee—and the two are as widely different as though they did not belong to the same family.

It was some years ago that Phinney decided that to produce a perfect cup of coffee was as worthy a deed as to produce a perfect picture, each being an expression of an unusual art. With this in view he set out to study coffee. If you stand just inside the doorway of his little store at 1450 St. Nicholas avenue, New York city, and watch the continuous stream of people who come in to buy it you need no other assurance that he has succeeded. If Phinney is there he will clinch the assurance by making you a cup of what has come to be known as "Phinney's brew." After that all other coffee seems tame.

It all came about after this fashion:

Mr. Phinney decided that if he was to be a coffee merchant he would be the best in town, and he studied the subject of coffee as thoroughly as if he expected to be examined for a degree.

One day he had a big idea.

His shop was small, but he would put in a roasting machine and give his customers the fresh, crisp kernels just as they slipped out of the big revolving drum. More than that, he would carry it one step farther and show them how to make perfect coffee after he had furnished a perfect coffee bean.

This decided on, he began to furnish up his store. In the back corner he installed a gas and electric roaster, just opposite the front door, where the delicious aroma of the browning berries would slip out and tempt the passers-by. They call this "the psychology of advertising" in Professor Hollingworth's class at Columbia University, but Fred S. Phinney calls it "just a teaser."

In the center of his store, directly in front of his big show window, he placed a large round revolving table, surrounded by nice comfortable chairs. In a handy corner nearby he put an attractive little stove and on it a nice big shiny brass kettle. The stove is heated by gas, and from the moment the store is unlocked in the morning until the key turns in its casing at night, that kettle hums merrily and invites you to the most unique little festivity you ever saw in a coffe shop.

In making this cup of coffee he gives it an individuality difficult to excel. Instead of making it in a pot of some kind, each cup is made especially for you. Over the cup that is to be yours is spread a small wire frame in which is placed an immaculate circle of muslin. Within this circle is placed "one teaspoonful" (not a tablespoonful) of pulverized coffee. Over this is poured the boiling water from the cherry brass kettle, the frame is removed in a moment, and you are served. Could anything be simpler or more attractive? Sometimes, if you are a connoisseur (or want to be) there are three or four cups placed on the rim of this hospitable table and they are gently revolved around to you in turn. Each cupful is made in its own particular percolator and is a different blend. You feel like the Khedive of Egypt.

The impression one gains from entering Mr. Phinney's shop and through conversation with him and his assistant, Gordon Lucas, is that this is a business run with the highest regard for maximum efficiency and with a desire to serve the public and aid it in the most generous manner to put to the best use the products he sells.

TEMPTING THE PUBLIC HELPS HARDWARE SALES

In Eugene, Ore., is a hardware salesman who believes in taking infinite pains with his window-displays in order to put his displays over. He is W. W. Cummings, of the Griffin-Babb Hardware Co., who has won nine first prizes in window display contests, three of the prizes being cups.

One evening Mr. Cummings put in a window that showed sporting goods. Painting a woodland scene as a back ground, he built it up with stones, moss and vegetation such as one finds in the forests of the west. He placed a stuffed bear at one side apparently walking towards a bear trap that was set toward the opposite side of the window. The setting was so realistic that it stopped passersby. The bookkeeper of the store planned to do a bit of work that evening and expected to stay until 8 or 9 o'clock. But when 8 o'clock came there was such a throng before the window that he could not get through. He had to remain on the job until after 10 o'clock, and then left by the rear entrance.

"The idea is the important thing in the window man's message," said Mr. Cummings. "Too many men get an excessive quantity of merchandise into their displays, while the aim should be to tempt the people to want the things suggested by what the window shows them."

"GYP" STORES NOW BARRED IN LOUISVILLE

Effective action against "gyp" dealers in various lines, who masquerade as private householders when they use classified advertisements in newspapers, has resulted from a recent conference of the advertising managers of the daily newspapers of Louisville, Ky., acting upon the suggestion of the Better Business Bureau.

The "gyp" dealer has been a nuisance in most communities, reports the national vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, especially because his work has a tendency to undermine public confidence in advertising. Moreover, experience of local vigilance committees indicates that the "gyp" dealer often defrauds his customers. He has little at stake. To obtain an entirely new set of victims, he only needs to move to a new location.

$50,000 TO ADVERTISE BETHLEHEM, PA.

If it pays private corporations to spend millions for publicity, why should not cities advertise? asked members of the Bethlehem Pa., Chamber of Commerce in explaining their decision to raise $56,660 to spread the name of the Steel City throughout the world.

E. H. Schwab, president of the Silvex Co., started the movement by giving $10,000 to start the fund, which is to be raised in a hurry if the attitude of other business men here can be taken as any indication.

Manufacturers will help, as well as merchants, in "telling the world" just what Bethlehem has to offer as a place in which to live and in which to establish industries. The plan followed at Dayton, O., with such success will be followed to a certain extent, although altered to suit local conditions.

NEW GOVIRMENT TO FIGHT THE LFAGUERS

ATTORNEY-GENERAL RANEY DISCUSSES SOME PUBLIC QUESTIONS AT WESTON

West, Dec. 12. Hon. W. E. Raney K.C., addressed a meeting of the Young People's Society of the Old Presbyterian Church here on "Public Questions of the Day," in the course of which he asserted that the new Government aimed at the removal of injustice not at class legislation, and in this aim was in advance of other groups of the community.

Mr. Raney said that he expected to find himself fighting against the Citizens' Liberty League and the supporters of racetrack gambling, well supplied with money, when he stood for election in January.

"The platform upon which the present Government stands was not new fifteen years ago, it was not new when Columbus discovered North America," declared the speaker. Its basis was justice, which was the central theme of the Old Testament. Referring to a statement by Viscount Bryce to the University of Toronto students, that the aim of education was to teach the difference between right and wrong, he said that it might be better expressed as to know justice and to do justly.

There had been injustice in the drink traffic, in legalised gambling, and there was injustice in the control of wealth, which could be removed to a great extent by legislation, said the speaker. He referred to planks in the I. L. P. and U. F. O. platforms, which, he said, did not indicate class legislation. These two parties had got together to serve the good of the whole, he declared. If Labor and Farmer could get together, why could not Labor, Farmer and Capital? It was no accident that the Farmers led the way in this matter. Cromwell's Ironsides were farmers, he said.

"The farmers more than any other class have gained the education, as stated by Viscount Bryce," he declared. "But the bankers, lawyers, manufacturers and college professors are only a lap or so behind, and will soon catch up when they get started."

What do you want your Christmas gift to say!

The things we feel most deeply never put themselves into words.

But our feelings have a language of their own—music. You can say your Christmas message with music. That is why the New Edison is a Christmas gift of deepest meaning.

Give a New Edison and you give not only the most human musical instrument, not only an exquisite piece of furniture, but you give also the very soul of music.

You can hear for yourself how faithfully, how completely the New Edison expresses that which you want to say for Christmas. Come in and let us play some of the beautiful Christmas songs for you, such as "Silent Night, Holy Night," by Frieda Hempel. Listen to the soulful appeal that falls on the ear like a gentle caress. HAD SUFFERED FOR 25 YEARS

FERGUSON FEELS LIKE HE HAS NEW LEASE ON LIFE SINCE TANLAC BUILT HIM UP.

"No, sir, I don't believe there has been a day during the past twenty-five years that my stomach hasn't bothered me, but now since I have taken Tanlac my troubles have been overcome entirely and I feel like I have a new lease on life," said Robert Ferguson, who lives at 87 Willow St., Halifax, N. S.

Continuing Mr. Ferguson said, "From morning till night I had a dull aching pain right in the pit of my stomach, and many a time just had to leave my job and go lie down before I could get relief. Nearly everything I ate disagreed with me and I was in misery just about all the time with gas or indigestion, and a great deal of the time I suffered from a chronic case of constipation and had to be taking laxatives every few days. I could hardly retain anything on my stomach, and all day long I went around with such a heavy dizzy feeling that I could not half do my work, and when I went home at night I would be so utterly exhausted I would have to lie down as quick as I got there. Now, this was my condition for just the last few years, why, fifteen years ago my stomach was in such an awful fix that I had to give up my trade as a blacksmith and as far back as twenty-five years ago I suffered no end of misery. I finally got so weak I would actually stagger when I walked and as I am [illegible] years old I was beginning to think my age had about gotten the best of me, and I became so discouraged with my condition that at times I felt life was a burden.

"I had tried so many treatments and medicines and got no relief that when I first heard of Tanlac I wouldn't try it for I thought it would be just like the other things I had taken and would do me no good. But finally I made up my mind to try Tanlac. I felt so much better after I had finished my first bottle—and now since I have taken six I want to tell you that I am actually astonished at the remarkable change that has come over me. My stomach is in such fine condition that it never gives me one particle of trouble. I eat three square meals every day and I don't have a sign of indigestion or gas and the pains in the pit of my stomach have left me completely. My constipated condition has been relieved and I don't have that tired, draggy feeling any more. When I get up in the mornings I just simply feel fine, and I can't remember the time when I felt better than I do now. Tanlac came to my rescue after everything else had failed and I feel so greatful for what it has done for me that I want to tell the world how it has restored me to full health."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in West-

HEALTH OFFICER

ed in such a way as not to be a menace to health. This means a thorough inspection to ensure the health and cleanliness of those who handle the food, the cleanliness of the premises, the freedom from everything that would tend to communicate disease to the consumer.

Then there are the factories, the offices and stores, to see that the employees are working under such hygienic conditions that will be most conductive to good health.

To this is added the following up of complaints of all kinds, the abatement of nuisances, the supervision of the work of scavvagers or night soil men, of the garbage collection and the incinerator.

To anyone who is in the slighest conversant with such work it will be evident that this work cannot be carried on by one sanitary inspector who has other multigenerous duties.

This part of the work is drawn to your attention in order to secure your co-operation in the proper organization of a health department with sufficient help and funds to do it properly.

This year practically all that has been possible was the following up of complaints and the inspection of small sections in connection with such complaints.

The danger of the filthy, improperly kept outside closet, and of the uncovered manure piles and the unsanitary surroundings in connection with the keeping of horses, cows, pigs chickens and other animals has been recognized for a long time and it is the intention to see that the innocent are protected from the careless owner by insisting in a very firm manner that the city by-law and the health act be complied with.

The Milk Supply

One of the most important problems on this Board is to see that pure milk is being supplied to children of the city. This is the most common article in a child's diet list and as it is the best medium for the growth and development of disease producing germs, it therefore results that unless proper precautions are taken it may become a great menace to the health of the children of the community. On this account the premises of the milk producers are being regularly visited in order to ensure that the milk by-law is being complied with. However, on account of the number of farms from which milk is obtained it has become a big task to inspect them sufficiently often to secure proper results. We are further handicapped by the fact that in some cases the milk producers are on a rented farm and it is impossible to secure all the conditions deemed necessary.

In my opinion therefore, the only safe procedure to take is to insist on the pasteurizing and bottling of all milk sold in the city, and I would advise the this Board recommend to the Council a by-law to this effect.

Before closing I would like to draw your attention very forcibly to the duties and powers given this Board by the Provincial Health Act and the city by-laws. The health of the citizens of Peterborough is in our hands and all ways and means by which this may be maintained and improved should receive our careful consideration and whole hearted support.

Every illens is a financial loss to the family and to the community and every death is a serious financial loss to the community and, to the family, a loss that cannot be estimated in the coin of the realm. Every time a sickness or death occurs it would be quite fitting that the Board of Health should individually ask himself the question "have I any responsibility in this loss — could this have been prevented by the adoption of proper health measures

The importance of these preventative measures is being recognized by those who have been studying health problems, and already a great deal of progress has been made. This was forcibly demonstrated during the late war by the absence of typhoid, paratyphoid, smallpox, tetanus, as a result of the preventative measures that had been taken by the military authorities.

Throughout the country boards of health are organizing their forces for the prevention of disease. Some of the main points that are being considered are:

Greater attention to the sanitation of the community in general and the individual premises in particular;

Pure water supply;

Proper sewage disposal plant;

Thorough supervision of the food supply;

Pure air supply by (1) prevention of pollution by dust, smoke and fowl odor; (2) creation of openair spaces, parks, playgrounds, etc.;

Encouariging healthy exercises—summer and winter—and providing facilities for same for all ages and children;

Dissemination of knowledge of the loss of health to all and especially to those having the care of children;

Instruction to expectant mothers;

Care of the babes;

Inspection of children under school age;

Medical inspection of schools;

Segregation of those who are infected with communicable diseases or who are mentally defective, and the application of proper treatment to them and contacts;

Taking active measures to remedy any defects found in those who are inspected;

Active support of all organizations whose aim is the improvement of the

In this connection, we should begin next year an active campaign for a clean city. Support the water commissioners in their endeavor for the installation of a proper purification plant, and support the Council in their efforts to secure a proper sewage disposal plant. We should further support the Council in the line of action they are taking for the securing of grounds for recreation and sports, for the securing of playgrounds, and facilities for swimming and skating. We should encourage the Health Association in their endeavors to care for those who would otherwise receive no help, and we should lend a hand to the new organization which is planning to care for the babies and children.

In conclusion, I would like to recommend that the city should take steps to organizte the health department on a different basis. The time has come when there should be a full time health officer with an assistant. Under his supervision could be carried on all the work that is being carried on by the various organizations in the city. By this means, both economy and efficiency can be secured.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) A. W. McPHERSON.
Medical Officer of Health

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble.

Meat forms uric-acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a table-spoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

$50 SUITS TO COST $60 BY NEXT SPRING

SECRETARY OF NATIONAL RETAILERS PREDICTS EARLY INCREASE IN PRICES

Chicago, Dec. 13.—Clothing prices will continue upward next spring, Charles E. Wry, secretary of the National Association of Retail Clothiers announced, explaining steps taken by the association to assist Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer in combatting the high cost of wearing apparel.

The causes of high prices are beyond the control of the retail dealers, Mr. Wry declared, but members of the association are preparing to hold further price advances to the minimum, at the sacrifice of their own profits.

Popular price suits, which sold before the war at $25 and now retail at $50 will bring $60 or more next spring, said Mr. Wry.

Demoralization of the industry incident to the army demands for uniforms during the war greatly increased labor costs, and shortage of labor, due to the stoppage of wholesale immigration, are responsible. Mr. Wry added. Piece workers in Chicago clothing factories are earning as high as $135 weekly, he said. From one of the poorest paid industries, employing largely immigrant workers before the war, the needle trades have become one of the best paid.

Wage increases since 1914 average 175 per cent, Mr. Wry said, while government reports fix the increase in the cost of living during the same period at 131 per cent.

NOT FOR WARDEN'S POST

Ottawa Thinks Unlikely Currie Will Get Appointment.

Ottawa, Ont., Dec. 13.—The rumor that Col. J. A. Currie, M.P., for North Simcoe, may be appointed to the position of warden of the Kingston Penitentiary is generally discredited here. In the first place under the new re-classification a knowledge and experience of penitentiary conditions and administration are required; Col. Currie has had no such experience. The position commands a salary of $2,800 a year with free house, but Col. Currie has been assiduously attached to his own business for the past year or so, and it is not believed here that the position would be any attraction to him. The vacancy will be filled in the usual manner after advertising by the Civil Servants Commission.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the alimentary canal before eating more food.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside bathing.

ALL COAL MINES ARE IN OPERATION AGAIN

STRIKERS GOING BACK TO WORK PRODUCTION NORMAL SOON

Indianapolis, Dec. 13.—Members of the United States Mine Workers of America are urged to return to work with the least possible delay in order that the public need for coal may be promptly met, in a circular prepared by the international officials of the organization and which will be sent to the four thousand local unions as soon as it can be printed.

The circular was issued to supplement instructions sent out last night by wire and contains an explanation of the action of the General Committee in voting to accept the President's proposal for settlement of the strike.

Acting on the directions contained in the telegrams, many miners reported for work yesterday and indications were that practically all mines which have been idle since the walkout, on October 31, will resume operation at once. Reports from several mines told of hoisting of coal as early as soon today, and operators here stated that coal will be moving rapidly by noon Monday.

It was stated that the Government intended to proceed with the Grand Jury investigation of charges of violation of the Lever act and anti-trust laws through conspiracy to limit the production of coal. These charges involve both miners and operators. On the other hand, it was indicated that charges of contempt made against eighty-four officials of the mine workers for alleged violation of the federal court injunction against the strike probably would be dropped.

John L. Lewis, acting president of the United Mine Workers, has left for Washington to attend a conference of national and international union heads, called by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Prior to his departure he received a message from President Wilson, commending the miners' officials for their action yesterday and replied in a telegram which carired assurance of further co-operation.

SPEAKS OF TORONTO

Prince of Wales Says He Has More Interest in Agriculture.

London, Dec. 13.—The Prince of Wales, speaking at the Islington Cattle Show, said: "I have had a wonderful three months in Canada. I visited the Agricultural Exhibition at Toronto, but, like anyone who wanted really to see the agriculture and farming of the Dominion, I went west. While I was there I purchased a small ranch in Alberta. My visit to Canada has increased my interest in agriculture and has convinced me of the necessity of closer intercourse between farmers and agriculturists throughout the Empire."

Mayor L. E. Weaver, Hespeler, has announced his intention to again seek re-election.

FROM AMERICAN EXCHANGES

The Broken Medal.

(From America.)

Thinking that Mrs. Wilson might also be in the audience, the Pope gave orders for the preparation of two gifts. One intended for Mrs. Wilson was to be a valuable mosaic of St. Peter, made in the Vatican studies. The other, for the President, was to be a costly and rarely beautiful peace medal. The medal would be of solid gold and of exquisite workmanship. On one side there would be carven the figure of the Redeemer, the Prince of Peace, and certain suggestive symbols. On the reverse side there would be an inscription in honor of President Wilson and of his success in bringing peace to the world.

December days were declining as the medal slowly neared completion. Expert craftsmen and artists delicately shaped and carved the heavy piece of glistening gold. The moment for polishing the metal came. It was placed in an appropriate machine. The mechanical operation started. Almost immediately there was a sharp sound. The still unfinished medal had cracked in two.

The time was late. The President and the Pope would meet in a day or two. It was impossible, quite impossible to prepare a new medal and the broken one was beyond repair. What could be done?

The Fourth Wise Man never reached the Manger. He lost the path of the Star.

Mrs. Wilson did not see the Pope; Mr. Wilson did. As a souvenir of the occasion the President carried away a lovely mosaic of St. Peter.

Zutoo Tablets
At Any Cost

Such is the statement of Mr. A. O. Norton, of Boston, the largest Jack Manufacturer in the world. His voluntary testimonial regarding ZUTOO follows:

286 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

"I have been a sufferer from Headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all the so-called 'cures' on the market. Some months since my attention was called to Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a 'sick' or 'nervous' headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effects. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur It Brings Back Its Beautiful Lustre at Once.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

A woman will have her own way even if it is a roundabout way.

REDUCES PERSONAL ESTATE ON WHICH HE PAYS TAXES TO THAT AMOUNT.

New York, Dec. 13.—Is John D. Rockefeller determined not to die poor, or have excess profits, income and other post bellum taxes proved such a burden to the Rockefeller millions as to prompt their owner to practise retrenchment in regard to his usual $5,000,000 personalty assessment on which he has paid a tax for years to the city? That question arose when it was learned that the attorneys for the head of Standard Oil had appeared before the tax assessors and sworn off personalty holdings sufficient to reduce the $5,000,000 assessment to $1,900,000.

Although the time for swearing off taxes expired some time ago the city authorities apparently were satisfied to keep the Rockefeller assessment under cover. In this attitude of the city officials may be found the real reason for Mr. Rockefeller's change of heart.—It was pointed out that Mayor Hylan had frequently in public taken occasion to denounce the Rockefeller Foundation, particularly in regard to its supposed influence in school matters, and that the Mayor and other members of the Board of Estimate capped the climax by refusing buildings offered to the city by the Foundation for a hospital for drug addicts.

When the city authorities some months ago were having difficulties in finding suitable hospital quarters for the addicts the proffer of the Rockefeller buildings was made. Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner, favored the acceptance of such a public spirited offer on the part of Mr. Rockefeller, but the project died in the Board of Estimate.

It is the first time in many years that the Rockefeller assessment has dropped below the $5,000,000 mark. Several years ago the Department of Taxes and Assessments doubled Mr Rockefeller's assessment on personal property, making it $10,000,000, but his counsel had it reduced to $5,000,000, declaring that he was willing to pay the tax on that amount but no more. It has remained at that figure ever since until this year. When the personality assessement roll was being made up for the first time under the present city administration Mayor Hylan sent emissaries to Cleveland to look up Mr. Rockefeller's holdings. Despite the Mayor's caution the figure remained at $5,000,000 last year.

The tax rate for 1920 while not yet officially announced, is estimated at about 2.60. With this estimate as a basis the loss of $2,000,000 in assessment on the Rockefeller personality would mean a loss of $78,000 in taxes to the city.

Sturdy Old Italian Dame.

The women of the lower classes in Italy are indefatigable workers. They have to be, and do all sorts of laborious and unwomanly tasks, according to our American ideas. In fact, the traveler in Italy is almost convinced that the women do all the work, while the men do the talking. Age is no barrier to feminine activity, for one old crone at least eighty, to judge from her wrinkled face and tottering steps, was photographed carrying an immense basket of fagots, all alone, across one of the busiest streets in lovely Lugano in Italy.

HUGE PROFITS MADE BY OCEAN VESSELS

ONE SHIP EARNED $800,000 ON 110 DAYS AT WAR RATES

Washington, Dec. 13.— Profits made by ship-owners during the war were "fabulous" and "unbelievable," John H. Rosseter, former Director of Operation of the Shipping Board, told the Senate Commerce Committee in testimony made public by Chairman Janes. The board realized enormous profits in some ships, he said, but the earnings of privately owend vessels were even greater.

One ship owend by a company with which he had been connected, he said, operating under the Board as a cargo carrier between San Francisco and Calcutta, earned in one voyage of 110 days more than $800,000. This netted the Board, he said, approximately $75,000 over the compensation allowed to owners and other expenses.

The Quistconck, first ship built at Hog Island, on a voyage of nine-two days, under arrangements with the Italian Government, earned $597,622, Mr. Iosseter said. Net profits were $461,151 after taking care of $87,800 in depreciation and $78,900 in interest.

These earnings, however, were exceptional, and every ship did not yield such a profit, Mr. Rosseter said, but vessels under private management exceeded even these returns. The Board fixed a rate during the war period of $66 a ton to Europe, he added, while the British rate was $88.

Losses due to sinkings and other causes amounted to about $27,000,000 the witness said, which was charged against the Board's insurance division.

TORONTO AS FATHER CHRISTMAS

G. W. V. A. AND G. A. C. BOTH LIBERALLY TREATED BY THE CITY

Toronto, Dec. 13.—The Board of Control decided to give a grant of $200 to each of the ten branches of the Great War Veterans' Association in the city as a contribution towards a Christmas tree for widows and children of soldiers.

Con. Cameron suggested that instead of Christmas trees the city's funds should be devoted towards making happy the Yuletide of soldiers still in hospital.

It was pointed out by a member of the G.W.V.A. deputation present that the Red Cross were looking after the hospitals.

The Mayor suggested making the amount $250, as toys were much more costly this year. "This is the first Christmas since 1913 that all the soldiers have been home, and the city should do its part in bringing about a happy Yuletide reunion," he said.

$100 For Another Tree.

As soon as the G.W.V.A. request had been dealt with the Army and Navy Veterans came along, stating that they intended to hold a Christmas tree on Jan. 16 for 600 women and children.

Con. Cameron protested against overlapping. The board, however, decided on a grant of $100.

Then the Grand Army of Canada came forward and explained they had eight branches. The board suggested that the two organizations might unite under one Christmas tree, but this wouldn't work.

The board decided to give the G.A.C. $1,000.

CITIZENS LIBERTY LEAGUE

were the evil effects of prohibition, Mr. E. A. Pocock, of London, quoted many figures to show the increase of drug consumption. Prohibitionists had said that temperance would prevent labor troubles, strikes, family quarrels and crime, would empty the jails and bring about a better feeling among mankind, but, as he viewed it, "there has been the opposite harvest, the churches are more empty than ever before, there has been sickness, and the dope traffic has increased." As to the latter, Mr Pocock read what he stated were figures from a Government blue book, to show that in 1915 the legalized importation of cocaine was 50 ounces, while in 1919 it was 12,333 ounces; in 1915 the import of morphine was 259 ounces, and in 1919 it was 30,087 ounces; while the importation of crude opium had increased from 7,248 pounds in 1915 to 34,263 pounds in 1919. The illegal distilleries had increased from 15 to 613, "and even at that, the police say they are not getting one in ten." The above he declared to be one of the by-products of temperance, and in addition he pointed out that Ontario's 10,000 doctors, being entitled to issue 100 prescriptions each per month for liquor were able to distribute some 3,000,000 gallons in Ontario in a year. Mr. Pocock also attacked the "trick ballot," and the method of enumerating, declaring some 100,000 voters had been robbed of the right of the franchise. "And in spite of those methods," he added, "they go about waving the flag of victory."

More "Oppressors."

Mr. Gaspard Pacaud, of Windsor, referred to the present situation as "a creeping paralysis curtailing our liberties while we were busy winning the war." Mr. Pacaud referred to the troubles of Windsor's Liberty League, reciting what he termed "absurdities" in the programme of the "oppressors." As an illustration, he stated the newsboys are forbidden to sell American papers on the streets of Windsor on Sunday, though Windsor citizens may cross the river, buy papers, and bring them back to Windsor openly.

A resolution proposed by A. F. Healy, called for the termination of the War Measures Act prohibition of the importation of liquor from other Provinces, on ground that it is "causing great dissatisfaction and unrest among the people, and the Government's action is subversive of all British democratic principles." A further resolution from Charles O'Donnell was adopted, calling for the abolition of Provincial censorship on moving pictures, this to be replaced by a National Board of Censors.

IS ICE-COLD WATER BAD FOR RHEUMATISM?

A BRITISH SEAMAN'S EXPERIENCE

This story of Wm. Rogers, a seaman in the Mine Sweeping Branch of the Royal Navy, is absolutely true and can be readily verified.

At Niagara Camp, in 1914, Rogers contracted Rheumatism. He was sent to the Toronto General Hospital, where for over 19 months he was a patient, finally being discharged as incurable. In despair he took a friend's advice and tried Templeton's Rheumatic Capsules. The results were astounding—in a short time he was able to pass the medical examination set by the Navy and became an A.B. in the Mine Sweeping Branch.

For 7½ months he did service in the North Sea. On three occasions he was blown into the sea and remained in the ice-cold water as long as eleven hours at a stretch. Despite these hardships Rogers had no return of his previous trouble. Think about it. If T.R.C.'s did so much for Rogers—will they not do the same for you?

RETURNED MEN OFFERED $3.50 A DAY AND BOARD TO WORK IN LUMBER WOODS

Plenty of Outside Jobs Offering for Those Who Will Take Them, Excellent Chances too, in Other Well Paid Line.

Reports given by officials of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, show that there is plenty of outdoor work still to be had for returned men who will take it.

Openings for several hundreds of men can be found in the open air life of the woods at the rate of $3.50 per day with board. At Port Arthur 20 per cent of the employees, Canadian Car Foundry Company are returned men. One hundred returned men have recently been placed here in the shipbuilding trade, earning as much as 95 cents per hour. Ship building and the car works provide the greatest number of openings in this vicinity. Work in the freight sheds has absorbed another one hundred, and in the line of temporary work many are at present employed upon construction and in the grain elevators.

It was in the vicinity of Port Arthur that the first railway section gang to be composed entirely of returned men was organized. Here some forty or fifty men worked on construction, the head of the gang being a returned man and every worker down to the least a veteran.

Men Willing to Work.

Returned men who have enlisted from this vicinity, are in many instances, setting an example in the manner in which they have come back willing to fit into any job pending opportunities in their won line rather than wait to swell the ranks of the unemployed. In many instances, they have been rewarded by receiving better pay than they anticipated.

A clerical worker looking for some executive position was offered a salary of $80 per month in a local office. It was not as much as he expected, but as at the moment it was the only thing in sight which fitted into his line of experience, he set out to try it. He had only been a few hours in the office, when he was informed that his salary would be $125 per month instead of the $80 previously offered. This was a case of real appreciation of the value of this returned man.

Another, a former bank clerk who could not live upon his pre-war salary took a job on an engine which operated to roll the roads. It was not exactly his line of work by any means; but he went to it and thereby gained practically double the amount of pay he would have received in a clerical position.

Situation at Fort William

At Fort William one of the greatest aids of local co-operation with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment in the work of placing the returned man is afforded by the Advisory Committee established in connection with the local employment office. The chairman of this Advisory Committee is president of the Trades and Labor Council, and meeting with him are representatives of local industries, the pulp mills, building trade, ship building and other employers, as well as, representatives chosen from among the workers. Meetings are held once a month to which different unions are invited to send representatives. Here local matters regarding scale of wages, working conditions and misunderstandings are freely discussed, and the advisory board kept in touch with local opportunities and openings suitable to returned men.

In many instances the activities of this board have been instrumental in raising the scale of wages paid in various lines to meet the need of the employee.

Veterans Given Preference

In the Port Arthur ship building plant about 300 returned men are employed, F. J. Sage, superintendent of this industry, offering every opportunity to veterans who wish for such work.

A large number are also employed with the Hydro-Electric Company both in outside work and in the power house.

There is no doubt, however, that the establishment of the advisory committee, before mentioned, through which the representatives of both employers and workers may meet to discuss freely all aspects of local co-operation, had done much to bring about the splendid feeling which exists in this city towards the returned men.

AT THE GRAND

A beautiful life-story, picturing the final victory of a soul that clings to the white star of an ideal, was screened at the Grand last night in "Fighting Blood." William Farnum takes the part of a big and splendid man who fights that most fierce and desperate of battles—the battle with his own natural faults. Strung with a golden thread of that happy elation which follows upon conquest and with a finely conceived and satisfying sequence, this is a play that cannot fail to please. It embraces all the elements of appeal that naturally sound a responsive chord in the hearts of the theatre-going public. But that public has, of late, become so fickle as regards its likes and dislikes that it is hard to tell just what will please.

Often during the scenes it occurres to one that the writer of this story must have possessed a fine knowledge of the things of which he wrote—a person of deep understanding and comprehensiveness—the sort of a person you would like to know.

There is happily a marked absence of the minor irritating depictions, such as strained scenes, etc., which mar so many otherwise excellent productions. Beautiful scenes—scenes frought with touching emotion and inspiration there are in number—but perhaps the ones which leave the most lasting impression are those in which the little white-haired mother's devotion for her stalwart son is depicted. Sad indeed is the scene of parting, but sadder still is that scene where she receives the cruel blow to her trust—so sharp as to server the thread of life.

"Fighting Blood" is one of the most nearly-perfect productions of its kind, and one which reflects credit on artists and author alike.

CAN. MILITIA IS REORGANIZING

MEETING HELD AT KINGSTON CONSIDERS MATTERS OF LOCAL INTEREST.

Col. T. W. H. Young, officer commanding the 57th Regiment, has returned from Kingston, where he attended a meeting of the commanding officers of the various units of the district. He reports a very enthusiastic meeting and is confident that the name of the 57th Regiment with its traditons will be retained by the local unit.

The re-organization board, consisting of Gen. Sir Wm. Otter, K.C.B., Gen. Sir W. Morrison, K.C.B., Gen. W. G Gwatkin, C.B., C.M.G., and Brig.-Gen. McNaughton, met with the object of reorganizing the militia with a view to perpetuating the fighting units of the district. It is understood that they are in accord with the plans made by General Williams for reorganization.

The local officers in attendance at the conference were: Col. T. J. Johnston, Col. T. W. H. Young, 57th; H. Fee, R.D., C.E.F., Omemee, and Col. C. H. Ackerman, 2nd and 247th Battalions, Peterborough.

ROBBING PETER TO PAY PAUL

(New York Herald.)

According to a despatch from Pittsburg the residuary estate of the late Henry Clay Frick, which he bequeathed to charities — munificient sum of $50,000,000—may be reduced to about $11,000,000. This is owing to the enormous federal and State taxes that will have to be paid. There is a provision in the will that such succession of other inheritance duties should be met from that remaining part of the property.

So that here we are face to face with a peculiar and ironical situation. A man of great wealth, desirous of doing good to his fellowmen is only interesting to the tax collector the moment the breath is out of his body because of the levy which can be made on his possessions to swell the income of the State or of the nation for the year.

In the case in point this money was to have been applied to public uses, anyhow. But the federal and State governments, through their representatives, step in and interfere with the specific bequests, in a perfectly legal way, of course, and in the line of their duty. Yet at the same time it all looks very like the famous process known to the schoolmen as robbing Peter to pay Paul.

In view of the recent riot of taxation it is not surprising that men of extensive means should give away large sums in the course of their lifetime, which they have a perfect right to do. It is only thus that they can avoid complications that may arise when they are no longer in the world to look after their own interests or those of the persons whom they desire to benefit.

In directing the death taxes to be paid out of the residuary estate, Mr. Frick did a very wise thing, for in that way he prevented confusion. He also saw to it that, outside what he left to his family and servants, his gifts to his family, the Frick museum in New York, Princeton University the Massachussets Institute and other special objects of his generosity should not be interfered with.

Taxing big estates has become such a passion with legislators in America that if the process goes on for fifty years we shall find ourselves in the position of Great Britain. Over there so heavy are the imposts that the death of three successive heirs to a property in anything like a short space of time is sure to reduce it to a condition of financial insignificance.

Confiscation by the public of what was intended for the public is no more a profitable process than taking money out of one breeches pocket and putting it into another.

HEIGHT OF HUMAN MALES.

Tallest Race in Europe Is Found In Scotland.

Habitually we think of Japanese as small men, and imagine a Russian to be a tall man in a big greatcoat. The Englishman, according to popular opinion, is supposed to be taller than a Frenchman, much in the same way that a dog of the St. Bernard or mastiff breed surpasses a terrier or a poodle. The common idea is not so very far wrong, for measurements made by scientists show that differences exist between the average height of races of mankind. Generally, stature varies between 5 feet 4 inches and 5 feet 10 inches. Of really dwarf men, under 5 feet in height, there are few, chiefly the bushmen of South Africa, the dwarfs of New Guinea, and the Laplanders.

The tallest race in Europe is to be found in the United Kingdom, in the southwestern corner of Scotland, where the average height is 5 feet 10 inches. Scotsmen, on the whole, are a tall race, and on the average measure about 5 feet 9 inches. This height is only equalled by the tall Polynesian and American races.

Among the shortest men are the South Italians, Sicilians and Sardinians, where the usual height is as low as 5 feet 2 inches or 5 feet 3 inches. The lowest average in England is found in the southwestern parts and in Wales, ranging from 5 feet 6 inches to 5 feet 7½ inches. In Nothumberland it rises to 5 feet 8 inches, and among the burly Yorkshiremen it even goes as high as 5 feet 9½ inches.

This leaves the nearest rivals on the continent far behind. Even the North Germans, Danes and Scandinavians, who are classed among the tallest people there, only range from 5 feet 5 inches to 5 feet 7 inches. Frenchmen are generally smaller, measuring about 5 feet 5 inches, and the Spaniards an inch shorter.

Stature depends a good deal on climate. The Bushmen live in the great Kalahari Desert, the tall Polynesians on the Pacific Islands, and enjoy all the advantages nature can bestow. The Hottentots, of the same race as the Bushmen, but inhabitating more fertile country, are appreciable taller.

On higher ground the people are usually shorter, so that the Swiss and Central Europeans generally are stocky rather than tall. Sometimes stature varies with the class of men. Early emigrants to America before things were made easy by the steamship companies, were always taller than the races from which they had sprung. They were picked men, full of physical vigor and courage. Stature varies also according to profession. About half the professional and ecclesiastical classes are tall men, but only about one in ten of the cobblers, weavers and tailors reach the height of 5 feet 7 inches.—Tit-Bits.

Grapevine to Feed Many Soldiers.

To visitors, one of the most interesting sights at Hampton Court Palace, the historic royal residence by the Thames that was built by Cardinal Wolsey and occupied by Henry VIII, has always been the monster grape vine, planted as long ago as 1768.

This famous vine, which won the silver medal of the Royal Horticultural Society as recently as 1909, bears hundreds, if not thousands of bunches yearly, and 500 pounds of grapes from it have just been purchased by the Dowager Lady Wolseley for distribution among maimed British soldiers and sailors.

Lady Wolseley, who is the widow of the late Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, one of Britain's greatest fighting men, is one of only two women to occupy a whole house in the grounds of Hampton Court Palace. The house, which forms a part of the palace itself is a Tudor building, and its exterior gives no idea of the comfort and spaciousness of the rooms within. It was Queen Victoria who granted to Lady Wolseley the tenancy of this house for her lifetime, otherwise she would have been compelled to vacate it on the death of her husband.

By permission of King George, Lady Wolseley was allowed to convert an alcove in the drawing room into a shrine dedicated to the memory of the great field marshal, but indeed the whole house is a memorial museum. Preserved in perfect order are the dead soldier's robes as a peer of the realm, his swords, his presentation portrait togeher with an album of new-cut things relating to his career; truly a labor of love.

Mixed Metaphors.

"Begorra! some of the best Irish bulls are English," said an Irish M.P. not long ago, and he was right.

When the Gladstone umbrella was all the rage, an opposition candidate was heard to declare: "We, too, have an umbrella, and its voice will soon be heard; and when it speaks, it will speak with no uncertain sound."

Quite as good was the assertion of an M.P. who said: "I see a vision before mine eyes, I see the car of progress rolling along in its majesty, gnashing its teeth as it rolls."

A better-known M.P. is credited with the statement that "the British lion, whether it is roaming the deserts of India or climbing the forests of Canada, will not draw in its horns nor retire into its shell," while another speaker averred that "all along the untrodden paths of the future we can see the hidden footprints of an unseen hand."

It was a politician, to, who some time ago declared that "the Government keep cutting the wool off the sheep that lays the golden eggs."

Another speaker once stated that the Union of England and Ireland would turn barren hills into fertile valleys.

But one M.P., speaking on total prohibition, rather overstepped the mark when he said: "The glorious work will never be accomplished until the good ship Temperance shall sail from one end of the land to the other, and with a cry of 'Victory' at each step she takes, shall plant her banner in every city, town and village of our country."—Tit-Bits.

HEAD OFFICE OF NEW DAIRY COMPANY SHOULD BE SECURED FOR PETERBORO

Suggested That the Board of Trade Take up the Question Further Progress Made in Work of Organization at Meeting Yesterday.

Is Peterborough doing anything as yet to land the head office of the proposed big amalgamation of cheese factories for the city? As it is intended to, from an amalgamation of the cheese factories in the three adjoining counties the head office of the big company will presumably be located somewhere in this district. If so why not in Peterborough? It promises to become a company that will soon do an enormous business and it would appear as though Peterborough's live Board of Trade should be busy on the job.

Indications that the amalgamation is likely to go with a swing were furnished yesterday at a meeting held in Picton by the representatives from the cheese factories in that county. The meeting was a representative one, factories in practically all parts of the county being represented, about 70 dairymen being present. The meeting unanimously endoresed the proposed amalgamation and nominated as provisional directors, R. W. Ireland of Wellington, President of Cloverdale Factory, and Mr. Walter Clark of Allisonville the president of Ben Gill Cheese Factory. Both these men are prominent in their respective localities and are the largest milk producers in their factories. Mr. Ireland is the county director of the U. F. O. This enthusiastic endorsement by the dairymen of Prince Edward County, which for years has claimed to have the best cheese factories and to make the best cheese in the province, is going to mean a good deal to the proposed company.

The principle speakers in Picton yesterday were Mr. John Kennedy Vice-President of the United Grain Growers of Winnipeg, who gave an inspiring account of the success achieved by the United Grain Growers in the export of their grain to Europe and Mr. H. B. Cowan, editor-in-chief of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, who described how it is proposed to effect the amalgamation of the cheese factories in the Central Ontario district. Other speakers included, Mr. Jones, manager of the Molson's Bank, Belleville and Messrs M. M. Empey of Napanee and Mr. James R. Anderson of Mountain View. These last two men formed part of the delegation that was sent to Western Canada last winter by the Dominion Department of Agriculture to investigate the cooperative farmers' companies on the prairies. Both of them spoke enthusiastically in favor of the proposed company.

Mr. Jones, on behalf of the Molson's Bank, made one of the most effective speeches of the day. He said that last winter he had attended a meeting of representatives from the cheese factories in Hastings County at which the proposed amalgamation had been explained by Mr. Cowan and had listened to the discussion.

After he had come out from that meeting he said the conviction struck him just as sharply as though he had been hit by a bayonet in the face that the farmers had got hold of a real big idea and one that was eminently practical. He said he had taken it up with his head office in Montreal an old established bank that for sixty years had been closely connected with the export trade, and had received assurance from the manager that this bank would be glad to place the benefit of its banking facilities and knowledge of marketing and shipping conditions at the disposal of the proposed farmers' company. He said he would not see any reason why the proposed company should not prove a distinct success, provided the farmers succeeded in engaging capable managers. So unanimous was the meeting in favor of the proposal that one of the dairymen simply asked what form of resolution was required to show their support and said they were ready to pass it. The desired resolution was then outlined by Mr. Cowan and carried unanimously.

A meeting of the provincial directors will be held in Toronto next Friday at which two dairymen from Peterborough County, who are directors will attend. At that meeting arrangements will be made for securing a charter for the proposed company and it is understood that a decision will have to be reached as to where the head office of the company will be. This is why Peterborough should get busy. It is likely that many factories in Peterborough County will join the amalgamation.

CARPENTIER'S CHANCES ARE BETTER BECAUSE DEMPSEY IS NOT HUGE

In an Eight or Ten Round Bout He Would Possibly Outpoint the American, While Dempsey's Ruggedness Would Aid Him in 20 Round.

Jack Dempsey exploded the theory that bulk is the main factor in the ring. When Dempsey was matched with Willard he said he would far rather meet a big bulk like Willard than a fast, clever man, of his own size. Dempsey's whole record shows that he meant what he said, and that he was not merely talking for effect. The giants of the ring, such as Willard, Morris, Fulton and men of their type, were easy for Dempsey. He had no trouble standing flat footed and hitting them as hard as he could swing his fists. But Dempsey found the smaller men more difficult to handle. Billy Miske and Willie Meehan are the only men who have been able to go the limit with Dempsey since he became a top-notcher, and both weighed less than he.

In theory at least Carpentier should be able to put up a far more interesting battle than any of the big fellows did with Dempsey. It is perfectly true that any one of the terrific swings that Dempsey landed on Willard would put Carpetier to sleep for more than ten seconds, but Dempsey does not figure to land those kind of wallops on a fast boxer with a good pair of legs.

Frenchman is Fast.

In fact it is a sure thing that when Dempsey gets into the ring with the Frenchman the champion will not start to swing from behind his back, as he did with Willard. Dempsey will have to be up on his toes and when he gets an opening it will be for only a fraction of a second, so that he will have no time to put his full strength behind the blow.

If Carpentier were well advised he would come over here and meet Dempsey in an eight or ten round affair instead of a twenty round battle in England or France. In a short bout Carpentier's speed and science might enable him to go the limit with Dempsey and he might even win on points. But in signing for twenty rounds the Frenchman will throw away his best chance of emerging from the struggle with the honors in his favor

Judging by the results of Billy Miske's two rounds with Dempsey, Carpentier would be able to make a respectable showing in eight rounds. Carpentier probably is a better hitter than Miske. The Frenchman showed that he could hit when he knocked Joe Jeannette flat on his back. Any boxer who could do that deserves respect.

Carpentier probably is a better boxer than Miske also and Miske's science certainly puzzled the hard hitting Dempsey. In that six-round affair in Philadelphia Dempsey was not able to land once squarely on the jaw. However, he did land several glancing blows and they carried so much force that Miske was wilting fast in the closing rounds.

Can He Take It?

Carpentier's chances in a short bout would depend on whether he can take a reasonable amount of punishment. Dempsey hits with such force that he does not have to land on a vital spot to get results unless his opponent is unusually rugged. Carpentier is not built to withstand much punishment and his record indicates that he is no tougher than he looks.

THE PARIS OF THE BOULEVARD.

An Unsavory Mixture, Having Nothing Really French.

Paris attracts more foreigners than any other city in Europe. It is in this respect a true cosmopolis. Around these visitors—for them and thanks to them—a big business of luxury and a profitable traffic in pleasure have grown up; imposing restaurants, brilliant cafes, elegant shops—all of them places that the Frenchman hardly knows and never frequents. It is in this artificial world of the "boulevard" that the theatre industry has developed. We already possessed the "espirit du boulevard," which was not the true French spirit, or was, at any rate, only a very small part of it, says Firmin Roz in the Yale Review. Then there was added to this a certain boldness of language, a tendency to freedom in expression—for it is the French way to be outspoken. Imperceptibly this boldness became the worst sort of license, where grossness too often took the place of wit. It is this unsavory mixture, having nothing really French, which strangers are shown and by which they are to judge our race. This is the memory they take away with them from Paris—from the Paris of the Sainte-Chapelle, of Notre Dame, of the Louvre, of the Invalides, and the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile; the Paris of history and art, of libraries and museums, of great schools and the oldest university in the world; the Paris of Boileau, of Moliere, and Voltaire; the Paris of the seventeenth and eighteenth century salons; the Paris that has in all times inspired kings, statesmen, scholars and artists.

Progressing Rapidly.

For the fourth time a new baby had arrived at the home of Robert's sister Nellie. When informed of the event one of his aunts told him in an impressive manner that he was now an uncle for the fourth time. Rather awed, the little fellow answered: "Goodness me, if things keep on I'll soon be a grandpa."

Childhood's Wish.

Barbara wanted a piece of apple, but while grandfather was getting it for her sleepiness almost overcame her and her eyelids began to droop. It was bedtime, but she winked and blinked and at last exclaimed: "I wish they had made the eye hinges a little tighter."

KEPT NEWS FROM DYING SIRE

Belleville, Ont., Dec. 13.—"The evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones." The above epigram is just as true today as when Shakespeare wrote it. Incidentally, it might serve as an epitaph for certain deceased directors who guided the destinies of the old Hastings Loans and Investment Society, which, after two mergers, finally wound up in the Standard Reliance wreck.

Rev. Alexander Martin, for the past 23 years a resident of this city, died here Thursday morning. After preaching the Good Tidings in no less than sixteen Methodist parishes, he accepted superannuation and settled in Belleville.

The savings of nearly forty years in the ministry, which Rev. Mr. Martin brought here with him, were invested in the Hastings Loan and Investment Society, and he looked on the investment as a sure prop for his declining years, as well as a safeguard against want for his wife and the remaining daughter left in his house when death visited him.

Bad News Withheld.

Mr. Martin passed away in his 89th year, in the firm belief that his savings were still drawing interest from the Standard Reliance. He died without the knowledge, mercifully withheld from him, that the money meant for the sustenance of loved ones had turned to dust and ashes!

HOW HAMILTON CONTROLLERS DEALT WITH PETITION FROM PETERBOROUGH

Reason Given by the Majority for Retaining Magistrate on Police Board is That He is in Touch With the Situations.

The Hamilton Herald gives the following account of the session of the Board of Control in that city when the petition from Peterborough, to the Legislative, with a request for endorsation, was dealt with:

A communication was received from the city clerk of Peterboro asking the support of Hamilton's city council in a petition to the legislature to amend the municipal act regarding the appointment of police commissions, so that they should consist of the mayor and two other members elected by qualified voters.

Controller Halcrow—We have seen the evil of having an independent board over the police, now that the firemen are back after more pay because the police got more.

Mayor Booker—I think that the magistrate anyway should be a member of the board.

Controller Halford—For what reason?

Mayor Booker—He's in touch with the situation all the time.

Controller Halcrow—Don't forget that the teachers of the lower classes are not getting the remuneration they should, neither are the employees of the city getting what they should. Independent boards are taking the money for their own purposes are not leaving the council enough money to pay what they should. They all should be under one head. That standardization has got to come.

Controller Jutten I'm in favor of the present board. The police should be under an independent board.

Controller Halford—I'm always in favor of the people having a say regarding the personnel of all these boards.

Leave Judge Off.

Controller Halcrow—I move that we amend the resolution so that the police commission should be comprised of the mayor, police magistrate, and one elected member.

Controller Halford—You don't think the judge should be on it?

Controller Halcrow—I don't see what connection he has with it.

Controller Halford—I'd rather see the commission composed of three elected members, but your amendment seems fair; I'll second it.

The board passed the Peterboro resolution as amended by Controller Halcrow.

CELEBRATE FAMOUS RAID AT COLONNE

MEMBERS OF 21st. BATTALION WILL GIVE DINNER AT EMPRESS MONDAY

At the meeting of the 21st. Overseas Battalion, it was decided to have a dinner at the Empress Hotel, on the night of December 15th, to commemorate the famous Colonne raid, of January 17th, 1917. This raid, which was one of the biggest 'stunts' in the raiding time, pulled off by the Canadians, took place at the little village of Colonne, between Cite St. Pierre and Bully-Grenay. The 21st. scored a signal victory here, capturing a large number of prisoners, and holding the ground captured against a stiff counter attack.

Brigadier-General W. P. Hughes, who is the Hon. President of the club has been asked if it is possible for him to attend.

Members have the privilege of bringing lady friends if they wish.

Ten new members were enrolled last night. The club also decided to hold a bowling tourney. Comrade D. Stewart will be in charge of the bowlers. The practice matches will be played on Wednesday night at the Water street bowling alley.

She will first be attracted to Red Rose Tea by the name which will remind her of the "Red Rose" of "Old England".

And when she tries it she will again be reminded of the "Homeland", for she will find Red Rose Tea the same kind of Tea that she has used at home—a rich, full-flavored blend, consisting chiefly of ASSAM tea grown in British-owned plantations in northern India.

FARMERS AFTER A STORE AT LINDSAY

VICTORIA COUNTY CLUBS IN FAVOR OF MOVE AND TAKE STOCK

Lindsay, Dec. 13.—That the U. F. O. of Victoria County will start a store in Lindsay is almost an assured fact. For some time past it is understood votes have been taken in the various clubs and the majority appear to favor the establishing of a store. Farmers will be asked to subscribe for stock.

As yet no store on Kent St. has been secured, but it is stated that negotiations have been made for the store on the corner of Kent and Lindsay streets, at present occupied by Robertson & Padget, and that Mr. Robertson is spoken of as manager.

CITIZENS OF THAT TOWN COMPLAINING THAT COST IS TOO HIGH

Lindsay, Dec. 13.—It is understood that Mr. D. Cinnamon, chairman of the Fair Price Committee in Lindsay, and acting for the Board of Commerce, has received a complaint regarding the price of coal in Lindsay. Reference is made particularly to the price of hard, or anthracite coal. A few weeks ago the price was raised to $13.00 a ton.

Report says that coal is selling for less in other places, and that there is no hold-up at the mines, or scarcity in town. However, conditions vary in different places.

DRURY MINISTERS ARE ELECTED

ONTARIO TEACHERS WILL INTERVIEW THE NEW MINISTER OF EDUCATION

Will Demand a Minimum Salary of $1000 for Every Teacher WithPermanent Certificate and Representation to School Board in Nearly all Centres.

Important conclusions affecting thousands of school teachers throughout the Province of Ontario were arrived at on Saturday morning, when the executive of the Ontario Educational Association's special salary committee met in Toronto. Briefly stated, the unanimous decisions reached by the executive are: (1) To interview the Minister of Education with a view to securing a $1,000 minimum salary for every teacher throughout Ontario who holds a permanent certificate. (2) A minimum salary of $800 for the first year and $900 for the second year for teachers holding interim certificates. (3) To form a business federation of Ontario teachers for the purpose of protecting their interests. (4) To press for the appointment of a teacher to the Board of Education in municipalities of less than 1,000 population.

The decisions cited above were arrived at only after long and serious discussion, and they will be pressed with the full vigor of the association. Every effort will be made to secure an interview with the Minister of Education this week and to urge upon him the necessity of securing early legislation to better the conditions of school teachers throughout the province. The salary question was the cause of much debate, but after a number of suggestions had been offered, some advocating higher and some lower salaries than the one decided upon, the two minimums mentioned received the unanimous endorsation of the meetings.

Case of Rural Teachers.

The case of the rural teacher came in for severe criticism, the executive using as a basis for their attacks on the present system, the salaries offered in the advertisements for rural teachers now appearing in the columns of the daily press. After a detailed comparison of these salaries had been made, it was found that the average salary offered to a rural teacher is between $500 and $600. This, the committee considered a criminally low salary, and one which makes it impossible for the teacher to live according to her or his social position under the present cost of living conditions.

The hundreds of teachers who have failed to secure permanent certificates were strongly criticized by the committee, the consensus of opinion being that in the case where a teacher, after a reasonable lapse of time, failed to secure a permanent certificate, he or she should be expelled from the teaching profession. No definite agreement was come to one this matter, however, and it will receive further consideration at a later date.

The federation of teachers was most favorably received. Such an organisation has proved successful in the Western Provinces and in England, and all the members of the executive were unanimous in their opinion that the teachers of Ontario should give the scheme a trial.

The deputation, which will ask for an interview with the Minister of Education, will comprise the president, secretary and treasurer of the O. E. A., Miss Arbuthnot, of Toronto, as well as any of the representatives of local teachers who may care to attend.

The executive, which held the meeting, was composed of the following:—Chairman, Mr. W. H. Moore of Dundas, who is also president of the O.E.A.; Inspector Henry Ward B.A., of Toronto, treasurer of the committee; Mr. C. G. Fraser, secretary; Mr. J. Munro, B.A., of Hamilton; Miss Arbuthnot, of Toronto; Miss Mackenzie, of Hamilton; Mr. W E. Foster, of Brantford; T. A. Reid and Martin Kerr, of Hamilton, and . A. Short, of Swansea.

MILITIA SERVICE TO BE COMPULSORY

GENERAL MEWBURN, HEAD OF DEPARTMENT MAKES STATEMENT

PLAN FOR NAVAL DEFENCE

ARE ABOUT READY BUT NO OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT YET MADE

Montreal, Dec. 15.—An intimation of some form of permanent compulsory service for Canada, both in the permanent force and the Canadian active militia, was given Saturday evening at the banquet tendered Major-Gen. E. W. Wilson, C.M.G., on the occasion of his retiring from the post of general officer commanding military district No. 4, which be held during the whole war period until demobilization with conspicuous success. This announcement was made by Major-Gen. Mewburn, Minister of Militia. It was immediately followed by a definite statement from Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, Minister of Marine and Naval Defence, that he was considering a definite scheme on naval defence for Canada, along the lines of the advice given by Admiral Viscount Jellicoe during his recent visit to Canada, when the famous admiral had many conferences with Hon. Mr. Ballantyne.

The latter stated that the plans had not advanced far enough for a detailed announcement, but he promised that some concrete plan would be submitted to the Government and Parliament, and that, whether it was great or small in extent, the scheme to be submitted would follow the advice of Lord Jellicoe, that whatever ships should be built would be the last word in efficient naval construction.

It was announced by General Mewburn that an order has been passed permanently appointing Brigadier General C. J. Armstrong as general officer commanding No. 4 military district, in succession to General Wilson.

ALMOST A TRAGEDY IN MIDLAND STORE

FLOOR CROWDED WITH CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS GIVES WAY FIFTEEN INJURED

Midland, Dec. 15.—While a Christmas crowd was shopping in the departmental store of W. E. Preston, Limited, a section of the second floor collapsed and fell, carrying with it a number of children and others who were near the Santa Claus' cabin. The wires of the cash carrier temporarily checked the falling floor, which fell in one piece, and by tilting against the shelving on the street floor, enabled those below to escape from the debris.

Broken legs, sprained limbs, with one case of concussion of the brain, were the worst injuries inflicted. The injured were: a son of Wm. Howard, foot injured; a son of Mrs. Wesley Boyce, abdominal injury; a daughter of David Nicholson, sprained ankle; Mrs. Stark, back sprained; Mrs. Wm. Hopkins, of Tiny, spine and head injured, a daughter of Mr. Wilbert Wilson, bruised; a son of John Offord, ribs crushed; a son of Alfred Robinson, leg injured; a niece of Mrs. C. Wright, leg injured; Elsie Hill, leg and back injured; a son of Charles Lavigne, back injured; a son of David Chalk, concussion of the brain; a son of A. W. Cripps, leg broken, Mrs. William Shakelton, elbow sprained; a daughter of Mr. Pearce, leg broken.

The building is a four storey structure, and there were probably two hundred people in the store when the accident happened. All of the employees escaped injury. Some of the injured were taken to wards to their homes.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN IS FORCED TO RESIGN PREMIERSHIP ON ACCOUNT OF ILL HEALTH

Semi-Offical Announcment Made in Ottawa Journal This Morning That He Will Retire Immediately After New Year—Hon. Arther Meighen is Mentioned as Successor Likely to be Selected by Unionist Party.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 15.—The Ottawa Journal, which is published by P. D. Ross, always regarded as a close personal friend of Sir Robert Borden, says this morning: "Sir Robert Borden is retiring from Canadian public life. His resignation from Premiership will be officially announced immediately after the New Year and a Caucus of the Unionist Parliamentary party summoned in Ottawa to select his successor. The Prime Minister's decision to retire, made known to his colleagues last week, is due to his impaired health."

The paper speaks of the Premier's work during the war and at the Peace Conference, stating that it was expected a few months' rest in the South on his return would completely restore his health. It continues: "This expectation, unfortunately has not been fulfilled. Last week while in Montreal he consulted the best available medical advice and his decision to retire has been taken as a direct result. It may be well to make it clear that Sir Robert's condition is in no way critical nor even serious. It is simply that he is not in a position to continue the heavy duties and responsibilities of the office without incurring grave danger."

In conclusion, reference is made to the holding of a Caucus to appoint his successor and the name of Hon. Arthur Meighen is mentioned as the probable new Premier.

FIVE MINISTERS TO RETIRE.

The Journal this morning says: "The re-organization of the Cabinet, which had been under consideration by the Premier, is now likely to be left to his successor. It is understood that at least five Ministers, Sir George Foster, Sir E. Kemp, Hon. A. I. Sifton, C. J. Doherty and Martin Burrell will retire. It is understood Sifton's resignation was given to Premier Borden some days ago.

MAY CALL PARTY CONVENTION.

The date of the Ministerial Caucus at which a successor to the Premier will be chosen has been left in the hands of Sir Robert himself. It is thought that a Caucus may be summoned of ministerial members of Parliament or a general convention of the Unionist Party may be called.

PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH HAS FULL POWER UNDER THE STATUTES.

ORDER IN COUNCIL PASSED 1913

TORONTO CITY COUNCIL TO DEAL TODAY WITH THE SMALLPOX SITUATION.

Toronto, Dec. 15.—The Provincial Board of Health has authority to quarantine the city. Dr. J. W. S. McCullough displayed this morning an order-incouncil which was passed in 1913 by the Provincial Government, providing this power. By this order all unvaccinated persons can be prohibited from entering or leaving the city, and in case of another communicable disease, where no prevention like vaccination is available, the city can be totally quarantined.

It is not intended at present to quarantine the city. But if the City Council does not pass today, an order making vaccination compulsory, the courts will be asked on Tuesday for a mandamus compelling them to do so.

Not to Close Buildings.

Although, the public libraries are to be closed there is no possibility of churches or theatres being compelled to close.

"Why, you might as well talk about closing the public stores," said Dr. Hastings. "While everything must stand aside to safeguard life, yet the rule of all public health departments along that line is that there is a preventative measure afforded. Even if there was not vaccination, I have no authority to close up institutions."

"But you ordered children not to be admitted to theatres during the 'flu.' epidemic?"

"Yes, because there was no preventive measure and the schools were closed."

On the questions of books conveying smallpox germs, the doctor disagreed with the authority quoted by Librarian Locke. "Books are a source of germ carrying," he said.

The M. O. H. denied that the spread of the disease was due as much to lack of efficient quarantine as to non-vaccination.

GAMBLING ON LORD'S DAY IS UNPROFITABLE

FOUR MEN EACH FINED $20 AND COSTS BY MAGISTRATE DUMBLE

Two wandering policemen found their way into the office of a livery stable yesterday and as a result four men were fined $20 and $9.10 costs each at police court this morning.

They were caught in the act of gambling over a game of dice, and it happened to be on the Lord's Day, which is contrary to the laws of the land. They were placed under arrest.

"The law is based on Christianity," stated Magistrate Dumble, in imposing the fines. "There is an old statute against this foolish habit of gambling. It is a waste of money, and as such is immoral. If one does wish to gamble, it is very unprofitable to do so on the Lord's Day," he stated, as he imposed the $20 fine on each man.

INSECT POWDER KILLS POOR FARM INMATES

COOK USED IT IN PANCAKES IN MISTAKE FOR BAKING POWDER

Kalamazoo, Dec. 15.—Four aged inmates of Kalamazoo County poor farm died in terrible agony, two others are dying and thirty-five are seriously ill from the effects of an insect powder which had been accidentally mixed in pancakes prepared for supper at the institution.

A can of insect powder taken from the kitchen by one of the patients was accidentally placed on a shelf in the pantry among the cooking ingredients. In mixing the batter for pancakes Walter Baker, the cook got hold of the can of poison instead of baking powder, and used the contents liberally in the mixture.

J. G. GUISE-BAGLEY FINED $600 FOR BREACHES OF INLAND REVENIEW ACT

Pays $500 Costs for Having a Still and $100 for Using it Waives the Hearing of Evidencc in Other Cases, and Goes up for Trial.

J. G. Guise-Bagley was fined on two separate charges at Police Court this morning to a total of $648.10. These were charges made against him for a breach of the Inland Revenue Act when be had in his possession a still, worm, rectifier and all the parts thereof required for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. For this he was fined $500 and costs.

The second charge was for using a still without first receiving permission from the Inland Revenue officials. For this offence, upon pleading guilty, he was fined $100 and costs.

Mr. Kerr, on behalf of the accused, urged that it was unfair to press those two charges when it was apparent the one charge of using the still could be the only offence. "How could a man make liquor without having something to do it with?" he asked.

Mr. Kerr compared it to a boy being charged with smoking. Then, if he pleaded guilty to that charge, it would not be fair to charge him with having tobacco in his possession.

Mr. Hatton explained that he could not withdraw one charge because he had been instructed by the revenue officers to press them both.

In default of payment of these fines the accused must spend six months in the county jail on the first one and two months for the second being eight months in all.

Wide-spread Interest.

At the opening of the court there was the same wild stampede up the outside stairs for spectators to gain good seats, that has characterized the different hearings of this case. It is long since such long-drawn-out court proceedings have caused such wide-spread interest in this city.

On all the charges, except those for liquor, the accused waived the hearing of evidence and was committed for trial. His solicitor informed the press that this does not in any way indicate that Mr. Guise-Bagley is confessing guilt on all the charges, but wishes them all disposed of at one time at the higher court.

At this stage the court was adjourned, the chief being under the impression that the accused and his solicitor were content to go up for trial on all the charges. Mr. Kerr, however, withdrew his former election in the case of the liquor charges. He elected for a summary trial and pleaded guilty on behalf of his client with the result as stated above.

UNIFORM DRESS AT COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE HAS PROVED A SUCCESS

The Girls, by Adopting a Simple but Neat Attire, Have Set An Example That May Be Adopted By The Offices In The City

Silks and satins should be done away with among all working girls. This is the conclusion that many are drawing after watching the girls of the local Collegiate Institute wear regulation uniforms for the past three months. The result has been more successful than anticipated, and the modest but neat uniform worn by the girls of that institution is a delight to pupils and teachers alike.

The uniform consists of black shoes and stockings, black or navy blue skirt and a white middie with a black collar, around which a tie may be worn.

The old idea of "keeping up with the Joneses," which, although not particularly noticeable among the school girls was present to a certain degree, has totally disappeared with the adoption of the uniform dress. Also, it is stated by those who have had experience in the class rooms, that the appearance is much more pleasing since than before. The numerous colors worn by the different pupils that were not intended to blend with one another, and which did not blend, were far from pleasing to look at. Now the one quiet color, neat and smart, prevails, and the appearance is neither strikingly noticeable nor does it strike the eye with that peculiar vivid blur that is the result of many bright and flaring colors striking it at one time and from one direction.

It is stated by teachers and pupils alike that they greatly enjoy wearing these uniforms, and the girls take a certain school pride in them, which is also recorded as one of the advantages.

But does the action of these pupils illustrate any principle or set an example that might be followed by others? It is certainly a system that might well be looked into among the employers of stenographers and office help. Only recently was one of the prominent business men of this city complaining of the manner in which one of his stenographers was attired. He knows her salary, and from domestic experience is also aware of the cost of dress. He declared from observation that he was sure that young lady was spending every cent she earned upon her clothes. It also has an annoying effect upon her companions in the office. Sometimes there are girls who are just as fond of fine clothes as the former, but on account of substantial board bills, etc., are unable to go to their work as gorgeously attired as the girl at the next desk. There springs up that old time longing to "keep up with the Joneses." This occasionally leads to disastrous results, and at the very least someone is made feel uncomfortable where it is possibly not necessary.

It has been advocated for a long time to adopt a uniform style of dress among people in the same station in life. The ready acceptance of this suggestion by the girls of the Collegiate may lead to more far-reaching results as some of the business men are regarding its consequences with interest. A three months' trial has been given the uniform dress at the Collegiate, and its success has been beyond expectations in all desired results.

THE CARE OF INDIGENT PARENTS.

THERE IS A SAD CASE in this city in which an indigent father has been thrown upon a charitable institution, although he has children who are well able to provide for him. The managers of the institution in question are naturally anxious to know if there is not some way in which the children can be compelled to take care of their father.

Some time ago an article in these columns stated that there was such a law in existence, but several lawyers in the city, including the legal adviser of the Board in question, declared they knew of no such statute. The Review recently wrote the inspector of prisons and charities at Toronto, asking if there was such a law in force in Ontario. On Saturday last a reply was received stating that the solicitor of the department bad been consulted and that he stated there was no such law.

The answer is by no means satisfactory, and The Review has written to another department in Toronto, as we are convinced that our contention is right. The best argument that can be used in support of our position, as showing clearly upon what ground we base our claim, is the following editorial which, under the heading "Hope for the Aged," appeared in these columns on May 18, 1912, and which was based on the report of a case at that time before a Toronto court and which ended as here set forth. So far as we have ever heard, there has been no such case before the Toronto or any Canadian courts since that time. The editorial was as follows:

> Two Toronto young men, with ample means to do so, were charged in Toronto with refusing to support their aged and indigent mother, and the case was to come before a court in that city in a few days. In this matter a most interesting legal question was involved. Canada has on its statute books no law to compel children to support their parents. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth such a law was passed in England and in 1791 it became of effect in Canada by adoption and has never been repealed. It was under this law that the case in question was brought, but the matter is not, it seems, to be ventilated now, much to the disappointment of all interested, for the defendants have agreed to contribute to the support of their mother, and the case has been dropped. It is noted, however, that the charity workers of Toronto propose to make an attempt to secure some legislation so that many an unfortunate father and mother may yet be saved or rescued from the poorhouse.

DUPLICATING STEAM ROADS.

PREMIER DRURY, who is nothing if not practical, announces that, while be is on general principles in favor of radial railways for Ontario, he is opposed to the construction of such roads in direct competition with steam railways already in operation.

There is justification for such a precaution. The duplication of which Premier Drury complains has already been carried out to an extent in Western Ontario. The C. P. R. road from Toronto to Detroit is double-tracked and the service has always been excellent. The road is amply equipped to take care of all traffic offering, freight or passenger. A radial line starts from Toronto at Sunnyside, and runs westward, closely paralleling the C. P. R. as far as Streetsville. Passengers on either steam road or radial between these two points can see the competing line for almost the entire distance, and the stations at Streetsville are not more than half a mile apart, the chief difference being that while the patrons of the C. P. R. are taken to the central part of the village, the radial passengers are dumped at a cross roads in the country. At Streetsville the radial branches off in another direction and takes up a new line of competition, paralleling the Grand Trunk line from Georgetown to Guelph, a line that is now practically under State ownership. Thus two public utilities will be in direct commercial opposition to each other.

Western Ontario certainly does not lack for steam roads. If those lines are under private ownership they are at least subject to State control in the matter of setting rates for all branches of traffic. Nothing can really be gained by the State building electric roads in direct competition with them. That is Premier Drury's view, and the majority will be ready to declare that the Premier is right.

No one can deny that in the matter of hydro power Western Ontario is getting all the best of it. Hence the combination of business men in the eastern section of the Province, representatives from which waited on Premier Drury the other day, when he made the announcement above quoted. And there has been duplication in Western Ontario, notably in the case of the electric road from London to Port Stanley, which forced another established line into bankruptcy. That was one transaction by the Hydro Commission which explains the recent defeat of Sir Adam Beck at London. Few men are willing to meekly accept the necessity of mortgaging their homes in order to test the theory of public ownership.

Electrifying the steam roads already in operation is a matter which will adjust itself. The issue cannot be forced. When it is demonstrated that from a business standpoint the proposition is commendable the change will be made. Even private enterprise can be depended upon to adopt the plan which promises the best returns. A radial line from this city to Lakefield has been frequently suggested, the promoters of the idea being in no wise discouraged by the fact that the steam road which operates between the two places has not been a heavy dividend earner. Once it was proposed to purchase and electrify the Lakefield branch, but the idea was abandoned as the initial cost was held to be prohibitive. Now that the line is practically public property, the chance is excellent for testing the faith of Sir Adam Beck that the electrification of branch lines is the solution of the transportation problem.

BUY IN CANADA.

THE PEOPLE OF CANADA have for years been urged to purchase their supplies in Canada. The plea is justified. Everything that the ordinary mortal requires can be found right here in Ontario. This Province could be isolated from the rest of the world, and the people could still live without suffering for the essentials of existence, able to secure anything in the way of foodstuffs except, possibly, tropical fruits. A substitute for coal as a fuel would have to be found, but that substitute is not as remote as some people appear to imagine.

It is bad enough to be under the necessity of purchasing coal in the United States. Every consumer in this city who uses a ton of coal helps to pay the State tax in the American State in which it was mined. The commonwealth imposes a tax, in some cases as high as a dollar a ton, on every ton taken from the mines. The coal mine owner does not regard this as a burden, but simply adds the per ton tax to the price charged the consumer, and the latter pays without a murmur.

There are, unfortunately, too many people in Peterborough who send their money to the mail order houses in Toronto, instead of patronizing the local merchants. Ther is no possible excuse for this method of securing supplies, as the local stores carry everything in stock that humanity really requires and can easily compete with the prices quoted by the outside dealers, when the quality of the goods offered is taken into consideration.

No sane resident of Peterborough would deal with a mail order house in Toronto if the dealer in the latter city insisted on a 25 per cent. discount on every dollar sent in by the outside consumer. The Americans refuse to accept the Canadian dollar at par, and that should have the immediate effect of stopping Canadian trade with the United States.

The Canadian Government should set the masses of the people an example in purchasing at home, and even the Hydro Commission should change their policy by securing all equipment from established industries in this country rather than patronizing those across the border, as was done when two new street cars were procured for the service in Peterborough.

ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY.

A SHORT TIME AGO Peterobrough had an excellent opportunity to secure for this city the elevator established by the U. F. O. in Ontario. No action was taken either by the City Council or the Board of Trade, and Toronto, without an apparent effort, walked off with the prize.

The cheese factories of the district are to be amalgamated. This is a company that will most surely do an enormous business, and it would be easily possible for Peterborough to secure the head office of the concern, instead of letting the plum fall into the lap of some of the towns not so desirable as to situation for the purpose. The matter is respectfully called to the attention of Peterborough's live Board of Trade.

THE REAL TROUBLE IN MEXICO.

THERE IS ALWAYS FIRE where there is a constant cloud of smoke. In any country where there are perennial uprisings against the government, the warring element must have some real grievance. The native savagery and love of fighting in most men, even at this late date, is not sufficient to account for the trouble that exists in Mexico today. Give the rebels a fair hearing. Let their case be investigated.

The grafting greed of the government of Mexico accounts for the disturbances of that unhappy country, which, under different circumstances, should be one of the most peaceful and happy nations on earth. Mexico is rich in natural resources, but the mines and timber wealth of the country have been in effect stolen from the people and sold to speculators from the United States. Mexico has been despoiled shamelessly for years. The raw material, gathered largely by American labor, is shipped out of the country to the United States. The government officials, who for their own gain traffic in the natural wealth of Mexico, are unable to extend to the American investors the necessary protection. The rebel party maltreat the foreigners and drive them out of the country. The result is a protest from the Administration at Washington and the constant menace of war hanging over the two countries. It was the selfishness of the foreign owner of the diamond mines that caused the South African war. If the armies of the United States and Mexico ever actually come to close quarters the affair will furnish another historic parallel.

Any American citizen has a right under the international code to the protection of his government while sojourning in a foreign country, so far as his life and liberty are concerned, provided he complies with the laws of the alien country. While at home this protection is given his business enterprises. No citizen, however, who elects to invest his money in a strange country has a right to demand protection from the home authorities. If the government with which he does business is unable to guarantee him such safety, then it is up to him to move out. A manufacturer in Peterborough is protected by the local police. If he moves to London it is only right that he should look to the authorities of that city for the same measure of security which he enjoyed here.

EVEN WITH THAT cut in his official salary, Premier Drury should be able to buy turkey and other luxuries for his Christmas dinner.

TEACHERS SALARIES ELSEWHERE

(London Advertiser.)

The school teacher's salary is rapidly becoming one of the livest issues of this province and with the spread of unionization of the profession, the exercise of the right of collective bargaining with the employing municipalities, and the possibility—as yet mentioned only very guardedly—of strikes to enforce the wage-earning pedagogue's demand, the issue is one that is bound to get the consideration that should have been given to it long since. The conditions which have brought about this uprising of the teaching profession are by no means peculiar to Ontario. Quebec, our French Canadian neighbor province, which rather prides itself in its boast that it avoids Ontario's mistake, is having a similar problem to face, while as far as the United States is concerned the question has become national in its scope.

In New York State legislation has just been passed which fixes the minimum salary of all grade and kindergarten teachers in the cities of Buffalo and Rochester at not less than $800, and the annual increments of $100 each must not be less than eight. The same law provides that high school teachers shall not receive less than $1,200, and the number of annual increments shall not be less than eight. Salaries of principals in public schools range from $1,800 to $3,500, according to the size of the school, while salaries of principals of high schools range from $2,200 to $4,600.

St. Paul is another American city which has but recently readjusted the salaries in its schools. High school teachers are to receive $1,500 in their third year of experience and go by increases of $50 to a maximum of $2,100. Grade teachers and kindergarten directors will go from $1,000 in the third year of experience by $50 increases for each year of teaching to $1,500. Kindergarten assistants will be raised from $850 to $1,200 by similar increases.

Racine, Wis., has adopted a new schedule which fixes public school teachers' salaries at from $900 to $1,500, kindergarten assistants at from $850 to $1,100, and high school teachers at from $1,000 to $2,000. As an encouragement to teachers to advance themselves in their profession the Racine Board of Education offers to pay one-half the total expenses of any teacher attending a summer school.

"School Life," the official publication of the United States Bureau of Education, draws attention to the fact that while here is a widespread movement to increase teachers' salaries there is a marked disposition to ignore the fact that the cost of living has doubled since 1913 and that anything in the way of salary increase which does not accord with that increase leaves the teacher in worse plight than before 1913. The comment is added that "if there is any surer way of destroying the teaching profession than by the present method of starving the teachers it is not clear what it is. Men simply will not go into a profession that forever bars them from the possibility of normal family life and a decent living; and as the opportunities of women grow greater, increasingly few really capable women will enter upon teaching."

MUST SELL WOOLWORTH RESIDENCE IN ORDER TO MEET THE HEAVY TAX BILLS

Inheritance Tax on FortuneFeft By Merchant Prince Amounts to Over Eight Million Dollars.

New York, Dec. 15.—In papers filed in the Supreme Court on an application for permission to sell the Fifth avenue home of Mrs. Jennie Woolworth, founder of the chain of five and ten cent stores. Hubert T. Parson, committee of her property, gave figures showing that almost $8,000,000 will be collected as an inheritance tax from the estate or the merchant.

Of this large sum the federal government will receive $6,800,000 and New York state $1,050,000. Under the [illegible] provisions of the laws both in the State and nation approximately one-fifth of an estate is to be paid over in taxes. This levy would indicate that Mr. Woolworth left a fortune in the neighborhood of $40,000,000.

Mr. Parson said in his petition, which was submitted to Justice Newburger, that it was necessary to sell the residence at No. 990 Fifth avenue to meet these taxes and preserve better income producing properties comprising Mrs. Woolworth's legacy. He explained that a fair market value of the Fifth avenue house was $460,000, but did not reveal whether a buyer is ready to purchase it.

Yearly Income $45,000

As the residuary legatee under her husband's will Mrs. Woolworth has an income approximating $450,000 a year, chiefly derived from $5,000,000 worth of stock in the Woolworth Corporation, of which Mr. Parson is the head.

From her income Mr. Parson stated he pays $10,000 a month for her living expenses. Added to this item are the heavy expenses of operating an estate so large and the inheritance taxes charged as debts.

Mr. Parson said it was necessary to have ready cash to meet the obligations, and the income from the real property taken with the personal property was insufficient to meet the debts. Mr. Parson also declared that the interests of Mrs. Woolworth would be best promoted by the sale and that he had reached this decision after a careful study of the resources of the estate.

Mrs. Woolworth has been legally adjudged incompetent and her property is in the care of Mr. Parson, who was long associated with her husband. He has asserted that his proposal would tend to preserve the income producing assets after the obligations were paid and leave enough to insure for Mrs. Woolworth every comfort she has been accustomed to.

Country Estate Worth $852,666

Mr. Parson's petition showed that Mrs. Woolworth owned besides the Fifth avenue property a country estate at Glen Cove, L. I., known as Winfield Hall, where her husband died and which has been appraised at $852,666.

She also is the owner of property in Market street, Philadelphia, worth $800,000, according to the petition; the Woolworth Building in Lancaster, Pa., appraised at $425,000, which yields $30,000 a year in rentals; land at Deal Beach, N. J., under contract for sale at $24,600 and No. 229 Jefferson avenue, Brooklyn, having an estimated value at $11,000.

Justice Newburger appointed Abraham Stern of No. 31 Nassau street referee to inquire into the application, and directed that Mr. Parson give a bond of $10,000 before the sale is made.

Detroit, Dec. 15.—More stringent regulation to prevent the spreading of the smallpox epidemic raging in Ontario were put into effect by immigration officials here yesterday. The restrictions imposed several weeks ago applied only to persons coming to the border from the interior of the province.

Mainly About People

Field-Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., one of the most distinguished officers in the British Army, whose death is reported from London, was born at Cressing, near Braintree, in the county of Essex, England, on February 9, 1838, the youngest son of the late Rev. Sir John Page Wood, Bart. Receiving his education at Marlborough, he entered the Navy in 1852, and served as a midshipman in the Crimean War. While taking part in siege operations, he was seriously wounded, but for his gallantry he was mentioned in despatches, received a medal with two clasps and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor, Medjeidie, with Turkish medal. This ended his service in the Navy. Entering the Army in 1855, he became a cornet in the 13th Light Dragoons, was promoter lieutenant the following year. Exchanging into the Seventeenth Lancers, the "Death or Glory Boys," in 1857 he saw service in the Indian Mutiny, where he greatly distinguished himself. His life from this on was one of great activity. He participated successively in the Kaffir war, the Boer war, the Transvaal war, and the Egyptian campaign, winning fresh distinction as he progressed. On his returns from Egypt he was given the Aldershot command, afterwards being appointed, first Quartermaster-General, then Adjutant-General of the Forces. Later he became Colonel of the Royal Horse Guards. After his retirement from active service, he became chairman of the London Territorial Forces Association, and took an active part in the organization of the new branch of the service. He was named constable of the Tower in 1911. He wrote a number of books, including his autobiography, "From Midshipman to Field Marshal."

SCOTLAND'S OPPORTUNITY

(Daily Chronicle)

In the clash of arms is seems to have been overlooked that Scotland will next year have an opportunity of becoming "dry" if it feels so disposed. By the temperance (Scotland) act of 1913, which comes into force on the first day of June, 1920, the municipal electors are given the power of dealing with the liquor trade. Upon the demand of one-tenth of the electors in any area a poll shall be taken, and they can vote for (1) no change; (2) closing one-fourth of the public houses; (3) prohibition. In speculating on the possibilities of this situation it must not be forgotten that the women electors are almost as numerous as the men.

EXTENDING CENSORSHIP IN KANSAS

(Topeka Capital)

Because they persisted in gossiping over the telephone lines, several prominent society women and a preacher in Emporia had their phones disconnected, according to W. W. Finney, manager of the Emporia Telephone Company. Several days ago the phone company ordered its patrons to use the phones for business calls only, because of the power shortage, which made it necessary to cut down the service. Yesterday twenty persons were caught gossiping and today their phones are read, Mr. Finney said.

Many a misguided man imagines he is engaged in a game of flirtation until he wakes up and finds himself no longer a bachelor.

THE PERFECT LOVER

Way down the ages comes the fashion of lovers. The types vary much the same as do the styles of raiment.

Every woman at sometimes in life, has in her mind an ideal lover, according to her notion of the same.

The perfect lover is attentive, but consider's his lady's pleasure first.

The perfect lover is attentive, but does not monopolize his lady's time. He knows when to come and when to go.

The perfect lover has a due amount of self-respect and is at the same time a natural human being.

His kisses are few but fine. He who kisses most does not always kiss best.

THOUGHTS ON LIFE

Don't simply see how you can "put in the day." See how much you can put into the day.

Make sure the prize you choose is worth the price.

When in a fix, sweating will get you farther than swearing.

Let mules do the kicking.

Honking your horn doesn't help so much as steering wisely.

Don't expect poor work now to lead to brilliant work hereafter.

You have no idea how big the other fellow's troubles are.

It's alright to aspire to control others, but have you begun with number One?

Over Two Thousand Men Placed In Positions by Department

The Employment Service of the Department of Labour of the Ontario Government reports for the week ending December 6th, 3002 applications for work, 2514 men wanted, and 2010 applicants placed in positions. Of these, 337 men were transferred through the Clearance House in Toronto.

This report shows a slightly increased activity since the preceding week though fewer vacancies were notified by employers.

COAL GOES UP

Price Affected by the Adverse Exchange With U. S. A.

The price of coal advanced twenty-five cents a ton in Toronto Saturday as the result of the increased rates on Candian exchange. One dealer stated that the increase will not affect the city at present, as the quantity of coal arriving is very small.

COAL PRICES GO UP

Ottawa, Dec. 15.— The price of coal to the consumer in Ottawa has gone up twenty-fice cents a ton and threatens to go still higher unless the prevailing abnormal rate of exchange between Canada and the United States rights itself very shortly.

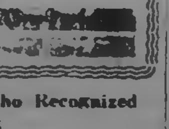
THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)



In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general.

Underwear and Hosiery Are Hulce's Sole Lines

By concentrating on underwear and hosiery alone, Earl A. Hulce, of Toledo, Ohio, has been able to build up one of the most successful businesses in this line in the country, recently opening the first exclusive underwear and hosiery store in the United States.

Concentration, says Hulce, is the secret of it all. Not a day passes but that some salesman tries to persuade him to put in shirts, and other men's and women's furnishings. But Hulce has stood firm in his policy to "do one thing well."

"If I put in a small stock of shirts," he explains, "and a customer came in and could not find what he wanted in my necessarily limited shirt selection, he would judge my underwear stock to be in the same condition—whereas it is, I believe, extremely complete. Last summer I carried 103 distinct lines of men's underwear. In this way I stand for something. If I added other lines of merchandise, people would say, 'See, he couldn't make a success of an exclusive underwear and hosiery store.' But after sixteen years of building up, this new store is my proof that I could and have."

The Hulce newspaper advertising, though small, has always been distinctive. His regular space is four inches every business day in the year. He writes his own copy and his picture appears in each as to carry personality, as Mr. Hulce is known to the greater part of the store's customers.

On the occasion of the opening of the new store, Mr. Hulce took a space of thirteen columns in one of the evening papers. The centre of this space was used for the store's opening announcement and the balance was taken up by manufacturers whose lines Mr. Hulce carries.

The store carries a complete stock of men's and women's summer and winter underwear the entire year round, regardless of season.

$100 to Women Who Recognized Clerk

In addition to spending considerable money for printers' ink, Braunstein's, of Scranton, Pa., drew attention to their newly opened departments for shoes, furs, hosiery and children's wear, by handing out $100 in $5 bills to 20 women who spotted one of their clerks whom they placed outside the establishment.

On the Saturday evening in question they promised all the women shoppers of the town that their clerk would not be more than 100 feet from the store entrance. She would be simply dressed and all they had to do would be to say to her "Are you from Braunstein's?" to get the $5 bill.

What was the result?

Almost every woman in Scranton who wanted to get a spare V dropped in at Braunstein's to look over the clerks and get a line on their faces, so they could spot the lady with the money on the Saturday night that the $100 was handed out. Braunstein's conducted their fall opening that week and the rush to take in the showings of styles, as well as to get goods, was something that broke records.

Who Wouldn't Sell Old Clothes to O'Donnell.

Just because you are an ol'clo's man is no sign that you should not advertise. "O'Donnell the Gentile," of Buffalo, N.Y., believes, as witness his advertisement run daily in the classified columns of the local papers. And if some purist shall bring forth the argument that the ad isn't dignified, we shall simply remind him that the ol'clo's business isn't dignified either.

It's a safe bet, however, that those who had old clothes to sell sold them to O'Donnell; that is, if they had any breath left after reading the ad.

Here's a sample of O'Donnell's one-sentence style:

"Are you rich or otherwise? Either way, looking at it directly from a business standpoint, do you consider it a good policy to let that collection of discarded suits, overcoats, odd pants, odd coats, boots, etc., of which every home in Buffalo has its share, lie absolutely worthless to you, a victim of time and the moths when I am willing to take it all off your hands and give you in exchange real American money; rich or otherwise, you cannot possibly afford in these days of high prices to not permit yourself realizing on virtually worthless articles; remember the money I pay you for your discarded clothing will go a long way toward buying you some new, useful clothing; think this over and you will realize I am right; and as I am a recently discharged soldier, just recommencing business, anything you can do for me will be especially appreciated and as now is the time I want this clothing get busy at once, pick out from your wardrobe everything you wish to dispose of and phone or write me; and listen. I will save you every inconvenience by calling at any time and at any place agreeable to you and take goods away in my car; give me a trial, anyhow, it won't harm you and may benefit us both; on the quiet the cash return on a minute invested in notifying me to call will surprise you, and I, oh! I am O'Donnell, the Gentile, Seneca 6819, or 107 East Genesee street, upstairs.

Atmosphere Adds Much to Attractiveness of Toys.

At last the kiddies have come into their own. Little Miss Six-Goi'-on-Seven, in quest of a "doll an' a carriage, an' a doll crib," can now make her selections and do her buying in a store devoted exclusively to dolls and "what goes with them"; located on Amercia's most famous fashion boulevard—Fifth Avenue, New York.

If ever there was a child's paradise, it is surely to be found in this store, located at 309 Fifth Avenue, owned and operated by Mrs. Georgene H. Averill. The "doll store" is on the street level and presents to the passerby a perfect riot of light and color. The entire window is filled with dolls, but these dolls are not ararnged as the ordinary storekeeper would arrange them. The average dealer would be interested only in showing each dool's face. Mrs. Averill thinks this theory all wrong. If one doll is placed in a high chair, facing with its back toward the window and its hands resting on the arms of the chair. The position of every doll in the window is carefully studied and each one is placed in some attitude that a live baby would naturally assume.

The salespeople inside the store are all young girls attired in nurse's costumes and seem to be happiest when demonstrating a doll to a delightful little prospective buyer.

Dolls of all kinds are on sale, from the little Kewpie, small enough to carry away in a coat pocket, to the lifesize walking doll, dressed in everything that a baby wears and able to say "ma-ma" to its little mistress promptly on demand.

Watts' Garrett.

The problem of how to remove and preserve intact the garret in which James Watt, the engineering genius who made the steam engine a practical proposition, pursued his mechanical studies, is now, says the Glasgow Herald, puzzling the James Watt Centenary Committee, which arranged elaborate centenary celebrations at Birmingham recently.

It is proposed, if possible, to take this garret from its position at the top of Heathfield Hall, the old manor house at Handsworth, where Watt spent his last years, and to re-erect it intact in the central memorial buildings to be provided in the heart of Birmingham.

The difficulties of removal, however, are very great, and the house of which it is a part is at present in occupation. The garret is still in exactly the same condition as when Watt worked in it.

The piece of iron Watt was last engaged in turning lies on the lathe. The ashes of his last fire, where Watt used to do his own cooking because of his wife's objection to seeing her husband looking like a blacksmith, are in the grate; the last lump of coal is in the scuttle, the Dutch oven is in its place over the stove and the frying pan in which he cooked his meals is hanging on its accustomed nail.

A dish on a shelf contains a withered bunch of grapes. On the floor in a corner is a trunk containing Gregory's school books. Gregory was the youngest son of James Watt, who, to his father's infinite grief, died young and at the commencement of a most promising career.

Young Oxford Graduate Who Led 200,000 Arabs Against Turks in Syria

SOMEHOW, overdone with soldiering, popular fancy has all but missed its two romantic figures, Allenby and Lawrence. Allenby's capture of Jerusalem, his gift of organization, his wonderful strategy in Northern Palestine, and his way with Orientals, exhibit him as perhaps the one soldier-statesman of the war. But Lawrence, save for his masterly squiring of the Emir Feisul at Paris, has remained almost unknown. Yet we must look on this small chetif figure as on a Clive of the twentieth century. With one qualification. Clive kept the Empire he won; Lawrence will have to surrender a good part of his to France. It was all very thrilling; a feat of moral conquest no less than of arms, a proud witness of the living genius of Britain.

Col. Thomas Lawrence — Shereef Lawrence is endowed with an unusual grace of modesty, and we are told that, when he discovered he was to receive decorations in Egypt, he jumped into an airplane and followed the Israelites across the deserts of Sinai, no doubt singing to himself, "Oh for the wings of a dove." Some tell us that modesty is the mark of genius. In Col. Lawrence we seem to find the combination, and the quality of his genius is of peculiar interest to English people.

We are told that he was a young Oxford man, whom the beginning of the war found pottering about the Euphrates, studying archaeology and Arabic, of which, indeed, he was already a master. A small man (5 feet 3 inches in height), beardless, easily passing for a woman in Arab dress, but so careless of appearances that, even when he got into British uniform, he neither knew nor cared how many stars he had on his shoulder straps, nor whether he had three on one strap and none on the other. Entirely ignorant of military art, yet possessing such knowledge of the Arabs and their country that some general, who must have been gifted with an almost inconceivable genius for disregarding War Office etiquette, resolved to put him to use in the service, and apparently sent him down to Arabia proper.

There the Arabs made him a "Prince of Mecca," which is as high a title as it sounds and has never been given to a foreigner before. He was attached to the staff of Emir Feisul, and gathered a random army of 200,000 men, Bedouins and other Arabs. A random army, indeed, it must have been, if we may judge from the pictures of the white-robed hosts wandering in haphazard crowds, without any attempt at formation, over the rocky hills. But somehow or other he led them up through Petra to join Allenby in the north of Palestine, occupied Damascus under his command, and ruled it as governor. In any case, it was a remarkable exploit for a young Oxford student.

But the most remarkable part of the story is the young man's personal influence over an untamed, half-barbarous, and exclusive people. It has lately been the fashion to extol the Arabs as a noble race longing for freedom and self-determination, capable of unity and respectable self-government. Those who have known the Arabs at first hand do not speak of them so smoothly. Readers of Maj. Sandes' book, "In Kut and Captivity," for instance will remember that, however much the British soldier hated the Turk, he hated the Arab (even as an ally) twenty times more—hated him for his treachery, his meanness, his cruelty.

Yet it was among these Arabs that Col. Lawrence exerted so peculiar an influence that they served him as their king, regarded him as a prophet, and endowed him with something of supernatural power. His modesty, his indifference to dress and personal state, even his ignorance of military science (from the appearance of his army we must assume that he was incapable of saying "Form Fours"!)—all such things do not seem to have mattered in the least. There appears to have hung a magic "aura" about the man, a "daemonic" quality, something of that "authority" which even mad Lear retained.—The Nation, London.

Complicated Watches.

That the art of making complicated watches of high quality survive in London is shown by a clock and calendar watch which was recently submitted to the Kew tests, being the first watch of its class to be so submitted. In the first place it strikes the hours and quarters in passing, though it can be made silent if desired, and in the second it is a minute repeater. It has an elaborate calendar mechanism showing the name of the day of the week, the name of the month, the date of the month, and the phases of the moon. The date of the month is indicated by a pointer moving day by day round a semi-circular scale; an account is taken of leap year, the mechanism being constructed on a four years' cycle. The dial measures just over two and a half inches in diameter.

Sensible Wedding Gift.

In Hungary wedding presents are only given to poor couples to help them to get their home together. The girl friends of the bride show attention by making cakes of various kinds to be partaken of at the marriage feast. Other gifts there are none. And this is a custom that one could wish were more general. There is no wedding cake either, as we understand it, but each guest receives a kind of sweet cake of the substance of cracknel biscuits, made in the form of a ring about ten inches in diameter.

GRIFFITH IS IRISH LEADER.

He Was Originator of the Sinn Fein Idea.

Very little is known of Mr. Arthur Griffith, who is acting for Mr. de Valera while the "President of the Irish Republic" is in America. But to those conversant with Irish affairs he is the brains of the movement. He is the originator of the Sinn Fein movement. Most Irish people laughed at his policy when he first propounded it. The old parliamentarians treated his proposals with contempt. Yet to-day the men who laughed to scorn his proposals are his staunchest followers.

The son of a compositor, young Griffith became a member of the same trade. When I first met him, about 23 years ago, he was a proofreader on a Dublin morning newspaper. He was then about 25 years of age. A quiet, reserved man, he seldom spoke and never of himself. I worked with him for some considerable time before I discovered that this short-sighted, student-like young man of medium stature, but of strong build, held quite a reputation in the Dublin gymnasium as a weight-lifter. Then for a time he disappeared from Dublin. Between his departure and his return some years later little was heard of him. The clue to his whereabouts was received in a long letter from South Africa, and its publication was probably the first time that anything from his pen appeared in a Dublin paper.

Not long after his return to Dublin, he founded a paper called the United Irishman, which he edited. It was afterwards suppressed by the authorities. Later he published Sinn Fein, followed by Nationality. His writings attracted attention at once.

He also published a book outlining what has since become known as Sinn Fein, and he urged the adoption of the methods employed by the Hungarians against Austria. Abstention is one of his cardinal points.

The policy at once claimed some adherents. Its literary side attracted ardent dreams, and quite a number of young intellectuals became associated with the movement. But the mass of the people laughed at his ideas. From the outset he attacked the parliamentarians. He wrote the majority of the articles in his paper, and James Stephens, the litterateur, then a solicitor's clerk, was a constant contributor to its columns.

Griffith's power lies in the pen. He fails with the spoken word. That is why de Valera supplanted him in the leadership. Florid oratory appeals to the Irish crowd. But his mild voice and lack of passion do not impress. He speaks slowly and softly and generally from notes. Nevertheless he is the power behind the throne.

But he has never been really a "blood" revolutionary. His weapon is the boycott. He would burn everything from England except her coals. He will never trust that country, and sees a snare in every conciliatory suggestion.

Griffith has been charged with not "being out" in the 1916 Easter Week outburst. But he has never claimed that his program can be carried out by force of arms. He is far too clever to do so.

He Told the King So.

"I am not a Bolshevist, but I would rather waste five years in prison than sacrifice the right to strike." It was typical of the frankness of "Jock" Brownlie, the chairman of the executive council of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, that when King George sent for him for "an absolutely frank expression of views" on the labor situation, he should thus express himself.

And there is a twinkle in his eye as he tells you some of the humors of strikes. An "incident" which appeals to him concerns an employer who arrived at his factory to find all his hands on strike. "What's your grievance?" he asked one of them.

"Dunno yet, sir. We ain't heard from the gentleman in Lunnon yet."

Dentistry 1,500 Years Ago.

An antiquarian has discovered that 1,500 years ago, the Aztecs had perfected dentistry to an art. They filled cavities, made crowns and bridge work. Aztec dudes had conspicuous holes in their teeth filled with gold or turquoises — as perfect fitting a job as you could get to-day. They left records showing that they even used cocoa, from which cocaine is extracted, as a local anaesthetic.

REPORT OF DAIRY INSPECTOR WARD

Gentlemen,—

With your pleasure I will now give a report of work and conditions for season 1919, as well as requirements needed before starting operations in 1920.

Cheese factory operations began this season as usual about the first of May. A few factories made some April's and realized good prizes for them.

The supervision of the work was conducted along very much the same lines as in former seasons. There were 32 factories under my charge—four less than for season 1918. Maple Leaf (Victoria County), North Ops, Mount Pleasant and Missing Link were not operated.

These 32 factories have 1414 patrons, supplying milk from 9,960 cows. The cheese made from this milk sold for $652,000.00. This is an average of about 28 cents per pound, or $461.00 per patron, or $65.00 per cow.

Now, I wish to specially emphasize the fact that the average return from each cow is not by any means what it should be. At the price received for cheese this past season an average of $65.00 per cow represents milk production of less than one Standard (3,000 lbs.) per cow. This average is away too low. A cow that is giving a proper return should produce at least two Standards (6,000 lbs.) during the cheese-making season. If only such cows were kept the farmers of this section would have received during the past season an average return of not $65.00, but $130.00 at least from each cow, or nearly $1,500,000.

This surely is a great object lesson to the dairymen of this country and shows, as nothing can, the need for improvement along this line if the business is to be made a more profitable one. It has been said if a man were able to make two blades of grass grow where only one had formerly grown he could never hope to be a greater benefactor to his country.

There was received in this section during the season just closed over $20,000.00 for whey-butter and whey-cream, while about $12,000.00 was spent on factory equipment and improvements.

In performance of my duties I paid 233 visits to the factories under my supervision and tested 220 samples of milk. Am pleased to be able to say none were found adulterated but am sorry to say the average per cent. of fat in the milk shows signs of growing less from year to year. The average loss of fat, however, in whey this season was .21, which is quite satisfactory.

There are about 26 milking machines being used by the patrons of this section and 28 new silos have been erected this season. Of the 32 factories under my charge, 21 pay for milk by the pooling system, 6 by straight test and 5 by test plus 2. I would strongly advise that all milk be paid for by test.

Our season opened with very wet, cold weather and continued so until the 28th of May. It then turned dry and very warm, which condition prevailed day and night for weeks. This resulted in a large percentage of the milk being delivered in very bad condition, causing serious loss, both in quantity and quality, of the cheese produced. The summer has been dry, but a good growth in the latter part of the season helped out, and on the whole, there has been a very good production in this section as compared with other years.

At opening of season's work most of the factories were in very good condition, and for the most part, this state of affairs was maintained throughout the season

Some of the makers have not been as careful and pains-taking as they should have been and, to my mind, this is a natural sequence as a result of the high prices, strong demand and careless, lax inspection of the cheese. I would strongly recommend that all cheese be graded and sold on their merits, for, I believe, that we will never obtain the results that we should, as regards improving the quality of the cheese, until this is done.

In concluding this report let me strongly urge every patron to make a careful and intelligent effort to try and increase his production of milk per cow. If he has not already done so, he should also make arrangements to provide himself with ice or some cold-water arrangement for cooling the milk, as it is highly important that the milk be delivered at the factory in the best condition possible. Early delivery is also an important factor in improving the quality of the product, and the more strictly these rules are observed the more profitable will be the business to the producer, as in this way only, can more and a better quality be obtained.

In the way of advice to the owners of factories and makers, I would suggest that all boilers, fixtures, machinery and factory equipment be over-hauled and put in perfect order. Furthermore, all factories and surroundings should be in perfect sanitary condition, and in such shape and repair that they can be kept in that condition throughout the entire season. Flies should be excluded from the make and curing rooms, and there should be available a sufficient and pure water supply. The law, in regard to perfect sanitation and a pure water supply, is very strict, and the Government expects factory owners and managers to comply with same. If the provisions of the Act are not complied with it is necessary to enforce them, as the consumer who buys our dairy products is entitled to protection in this regard.

At present there is a strong demand for milk for condensing purposes, but am very pleased at the way it is being secured in this section. The factories are being left intact, and are being used, also makers' services are being retained and used in connection with the business. If conditions and prices should change and warrant going back to cheese making, you are in a position to do so. But in what ever way you may dispose of your milk I would strongly advise retaining the dairy cow, for the benefit derived from them have been many. The fat, milk, cheese, cream and butter cheques are not the only consideration, for mixed farming is the best method of retaining soil fertility, which is the great underlying principle of successful agriculture.

I desire to thank and express my gratitude to each and every one who has assisted me in any way in performance of my duties, which have been carried out to the best of my ability and with the sole object in view of trying to improve the dairy industry.

VISCOUNT GRAY CALLED HOME

FREE VACCINATION MAY BE PROVIDED FOR THE PUBLIC OF PETERBOROUGH

An Opportunity to Take This Precaution Will be Given the School Children on Wednesday.

Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., is planning to supply free vaccination for all the pupils of the schools on Wednesday. Three more cases of smallpox have been reported over the week-end and the disease is apparently spreading rather rapidly.

In case its progress continues as it has in the past couple of weeks arrangements will be made for free vaccination for the general public. A central building, probably the city buildings, will be chosen where any person desiring to take the precaution to avoid smallpox may go and be vaccinated free of charge.

The matter of compulsory vaccination is not yet being considered and if the citizens can see it their duty to accept this offer of the medical authorities it will not become necessary to resort to the power which the law provides.

LAKEFIELD TO VOTE ON HYDRY BY-LAW

PROPOSED TO RAISE $33,500 BY ISSUE OF 30-YEAR DEBENTRES

(Special to The Review.)

Lakefield, Dec. 15. — A special meeting of the village council was held on Wednesday evening at which Mr. Ireland, a representative of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, was present and made arrangements with the Council to submit a hydro-electric bylaw to the freeholders of Lakefield at the elections in January.

The total cost of installing hydro power in the village would be $33,500 which includes the reconstruction of the present distribution plant, its purchase from the local electric light company, and the installation of motors in all the houses and stores at present served. That amount will have to be raised by the issuing of thirty-year debentures.

The estimated revenue received from the system would be sufficient to provide for the retirement of the debentures, interest charges, depreciation, maintenance, etc., and at the end of thirty years the village would own the plant. A commission of three citizens would handle the utility.

The cost per horse power has been fixed at $36.00. Norwood will pay $30 per horsepower, and Havelock $36. Norwood being more favorably situated to obtain power than either Havelock or Lakefield.

RETIREMENT OF PREMIER BORDEN COMPLICATES THE SITUATION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 15.—It is frankly admitted in Government circles that the change in the Prime Ministership at the present time is a matter beset with many complications. If the retirement of a number of ministers results from re-organization, their successors in office will have to seek re-election. Under the provisions of the bye-elections Act passed at last winter's session of Parliament, it takes at least forty days to prepare new lists in constituencies where contests would be held. Should there be several new ministers awaiting a verdict of their constituents the government would in all probability not be prepared to meet Parliament and the session would be delayed until spring months. The decision to leave the matter of the choice of a successor to Sir Robert to a Unionist Caucus makes speculation at this time more or less full. Should Sir Thomas White be in the running, however, it is believed that his chances would be good as it is realized that his leadership of the Unionists during the absence of Sir Robert gave general satisfaction to the rank and file.

West Opposed to White.

The Journal expresses the opinion, however, that Western Unionists would not favor Sir Tromas because they think he looks upon all questions "Through Toronto Glasses."

Plenty of Candidates.

In political circles at the capital today nearly half the members in the Cabinet are mentioned for leadership. They include Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, Hon. N. W. Rowell, Hon. J. A. Calder, Sir George Foster and Sir. James Loughed. The first named has been regarded by many of his friends as the prospective Premier, but the retirement of Premier Borden coming before he has had an opportunity to gain parliamentary experience, may militate against his chances.

There is a considerable tendency to speculate on the effect the coming resignation will have on the Unionist Party and the Government. Many are inclined to the view that the retirement of the man who organized the Unionist Government will put everything in the political melting pot. The caucus quite conceivably will settle the question of the permanency or otherwise of the Unionist party.

The general impression is that the Cabinet may remain intact or practically so until the new leader is chosen and Sir. Robert's resignation is in the hands of the Governor-General.

There are times when it is better to be "never" than late.

Sir Wiltrid Laurier Said:

"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance.

As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

FAVORS LUNCHES FOR PUPILS IN NEW YORK

DELEGATION OF WOMEN URGE BOARD OF EDUCATION TO CONTINUE SYSTEM.

New York, Dec. 15.—A communication from the Board of Education requesting an appropriation of $50,000 for school lunches was brought before the Board. A representative of the Women's Civic Club spoke and argued that the Board should not give up the lunch system. She maintained that the children should not suffer because of an error that had been made by the Board of Education in not including the item in the annual appropriation. Controller Craig explained that the situation that had arisen was entirely the fault of the Board of Education in that it had not been included in the 1920 budget.

"It is not our fault," said Mr. Craig "that the appropriation is not in the budget for 1920. Now the educational authorities have got to find some way to raise the money. It may take an act of Legislature."

Mayor Hylan, commenting on the situation said:—"If Ettinger, Cook and Company would mind their own business and attend to the educational part of the system and not try to run the finances of the department we would not be in this trouble." The Mayor added that there was not a member of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment who was against proper school lunches. The entire matter was referred to the committee on Finance and Budget.

UNITED STATES URGED TO FIGHT TO SECURE HOME RULE FOR ERIN

Delegation Before House Committee on Foriegn Affairs Favor Armed Strife With Eng'and if Erin's Freedom Can be Secured in no Other Way.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The exertion by the United States of all its influence to bring about home rule for Ireland and recognition of the "Irish republic," even to the extent of armed conflict between England and America, was urged by friends of Irish freedom during an exciting hearing before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on a resolution introduced by Representative Mason, Republican, of Illinois, looking toward the acknowledgment of the Irish people as an independent nation.

Judge Daniel F. Cohalan, of the New York Supreme Court, headed a delegation of Irish-Americans who spoke in favor of the adoption of the resolution. The delegation was representative of virtually every Irish organisation in this country, and included Frank P. Walsh, American spokesman of the Irish cause before the Paris peace conference; W. Bourke Cochran, Judge James E. Deery, national president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and others. Representative Thomas F Smith, Democrat, of New York, a member of the committee, clearly indicated his sympathy and active support for the proposed recognition of Ireland.

"Ulster" Opposes Measure.

The hearing room was packed to the doors with ardent lovers of the Irish cause and those who opposed the recognition of the republic of Ireland faced a hostile audience, which repeatedly jeered and hissed at statements reflecting upon the justice of their cause or the inherent loyalty of the Irish race to legally constituted government.

Feeling ran high at all times, and the speakers favoring the legislation were constantly interrupted by frenzied applause, which reached a high point when the possibility of war against England for refusing to grant self-determination to Ireland was mentioned.

Warn of "Conspiracy."

Opponents of the resolution denied that there was a defacto government, headed by De Valera, insisted that Ireland and England should be allowed to settle the matter between themselves; urged caution upon the Foreign Affairs Committee lest their action should lead to war between this country and England, and asserted that the formation of the Irish republic was the outgrowth of a conspiracy, hostile to the allied cause, and was in the interest of and actively supported by Germany and the Central Powers.

In opening the discussion in behalf of the proponents of the resolution, Judge Cohalan was closely questioned by Representative Conally, Democrat, of Texas, about the possibility of provoking war between England and the United States should this country recognize the De Valera government.

"Do you think recognition of the De Valera government by this country would be a cause of war between this country and England?" asked Mr. Conally.

"No, because public opinion in England would compel the governing class to grant Irish freedom," replied Judge Cohalan.

"As an American citizen, would you be willing to go to war in the cause of Irish freedom?" asked Mr. Conally.

Would Fight for Ireland.

"As an American citizen I would support this government in a just cause," replied Judge Cohalan.

"But would you be willing to see the United States go to war with England in behalf of Irish freedom?" persisted Mr. Conally.

"Yes," replied the Judge. A burst of cheering greeted this reply, and proceeded for several minutes, while the excited audience stood up and waved the flags of the Irish Republic together with the American flag. As the applause subsided Judge Cohalan continued:

"At the same time, I say, that in my opinion war between the two countries never would be forced, as England would yield."

Representative Smith of New York, reminded the witness that England was the principal rival of this country in the development of our merchant marine and agreed, with the Judge that it was dangerous for any nation to control the seas.

"Did England exercise her power of control over the seas during the war, and thereby, illustrate how it might be a menace to the interests of this country?" asked Mr. Smith.

Would Abolish "Navalism."

Judge Cohalan said this was a matter of history, and urged that 'navalism," as well as "autocacy" should be destroyed, if all the fruits of victory in the European war were to be realized.

The final appeal on behalf of Ireland will be made by Burke Cochran.

A STRANGE SITUATION

(Toronto World.)

The report from Ottawa that failing health may compel the retirement of Sir Robert Borden as prime minister draws attention to the fact that we have in this country no adequate machinery for carrying on a general election. The war times election act, which established a federal franchise lapsed on July 31 last. The election act now in force is based upon provincial franchise. Although parliament has declared in favor of votes for women, they are not enfranchised in all the provinces and they could only vote at a federal election by virtue of a new federal franchise act. The provincial franchise in the western provinces would enable all naturalized citizens of enemy origin to vote, and everyone admits that there should be some restrictions in this regard by means of federal legislation.

If there is to be change in the government at Ottawa the announcement should be made, not to a party caucus, but to parliament. No cabinet coterie or any other clique can name Sir Robert Borden's successor. He must be satisfactory in the first place to parliament and in the last analysis to the people of Canada.

Parliament should, therefore, be convened at an early date for the purpose among other things of establishing a federal franchise and a new election act. There must be a definition of citizenship which will determine what naturalized citizens are to be entrusted with the ballot. Parlament must also effectively enfranchise the women of the country and determine what naturalized women of enemy origin shall vote. This will necessitate some statuory provision, for the enumeration and qualification of voters, the making up and distribution of voter's lists, the hearing and adjudication of appeals and so forth.

Women who voted at the last Dominion election, because they were soldiers' kin, no longer have a vote on that account. The Dominion by-elections act passed a few months ago was a clumsy temporary measure and would not apply to a general election. Parliament should, therefore, at once pass an election act which of necessity must be based on a federal franchise.

No person under quarantine was allowed to leave his premises, under a penalty of anywhere from $5 to $100. Tradesmen are allowed to call at quarantined houses only to deliver goods, but are not allowed to take anything out of the home.

Where Germs Lurk

The general impression that smallpox lingers in a house after disinfection was not "a fact," according to the doctor, who, however, admitted that there was a possibility of a "germ lurking in a dark corner." "If all drapings were taken down, all the windows thrown open and the house was flooded with sunshine, every germ could be destroyed in a short while," he added.

Improvement in Figures

Twenty-six cases of small pox were reported in the city during the 24 hours ending midnight, while 39 patients were discharged as cured.

Altogether 1,278 cases have been reported, and of these 83 are in hospital; 542 are quarantined at home, and 653 have been discharged as cured, leaving the present number of qvictims at 625.

The number of houses under quarantine is 576, and exposed persons quarantined total 1,673.

Outbreak at Orillia

An outbreak of smallpox has occurred at Ontario Hospital, Orillia, where 31 boys were found to be suffering from it. Vaccination was immediately applied to the 1,200 persons who were exposed to the disease, and although 10 more cases developed, the spread of the disease was stopped short.

BERT LYTELL COMING IN RATTLING COMEDY

HANDSOME STAR IN "EASY TO MAKE MONEY," AT THE EMPIRE.

The feature of the Empire theatre program on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is a mirth-provoking comedy entitled "Easy to Make Money" with the handsome Bert Lytell in the stellar role supported by a cast of the usual strength found in all Metro productions.

The aim of this offering is bright clean entertainment, with the inimitable Lytell in another of his remarkable character creations which have made him one of the most popular stars of the screen today.

The story is one of a young fellow who, departing from the paths of speed and spending, embarks on a newer and cleaner life in a most unusual manner and with the most unforseen results.

Jimmy Slocum (Bert Lytell) is the young man-about-town who is called to account by his Dad for the life he is leading. It shows that Jimmy has been arrested many times for breaking speed laws and disturbing the peace, and when Dad brings him up on the carpet, he conceives a novel idea of reforming and making money at the same time. He bets Dad that he will only be arrested once during the ensuing year and makes such a bet that is well worth his while to collect.

It is the manner in which Jimmy goes about making good on the wager, and collecting the stakes that offers the hero a store of opportunities for humorous scenes in and out of jail on the road to success.

New Rails for Old.

Relaying has had to be delayed, notwithstanding that the traffic has been immense and severe during the war. The wear of railtops varies according to locality and the straightness of the line, since on a curve there is more friction, due to the slip of the wheels in going round the curve.

Rails that are not worked very hard nevertheless suffer from rust, which cuts down their life. It takes about twenty-five million tons' weight of traffic to wear down a rail one-tenth of an inch.

The popular idea that rails are turned upside-down in their chairs, to use the bottom side for a fresh lease of life, is not correct. By the time the top is worn out, the hammering of the traffic has indented the bottom upon the chairs and injured its structure too much to allow it to be used for a running surface. The rail may, however, have further life in sidings, or put to some other use.

When laying rails the platelayers interpose a piece of metal of a certain thickness between the ends at the joint, before bolting up the fishplates, afterwards removing it and leaving a blank. This is done to allow for expansion and contraction in summer and winter, otherwise the rails would buckle so much that the trains would be derailed. — London Answers.

How Darkness Is Photographed.

Until quite recently cinema scenes that were supposed to happen in darkness were really taken in broad daylight, but before being thrown on to the screen the film was dipped into a large tank containing deep blue dye; that produced the required effect.

But the difficult problem of night cinematography has at last been solved. In a recent production there was presented a camp setting in which the fire cast an eerie glow over the darkness. There were also excellent silhouettes of the players. These were taken one moonless night, the middle of the camp being illuminated with a strong violet flame for just two minutes, which lighted up the surrounding country.

A second example was a battle subject taken at night-time. In this there appeared such details as bombs bursting over fields, with intervals of blinding flashes of light, while balls of flame were pouring forth from the discharging cannon.

The first problem was to determine the composition of ammunition which would not only be sufficiently explosive, but produce a powerful light as well. The director had to manufacture a special kind of flashlight powder, which he succeeded in doing after many experiments. On a wintry night, when it was pitch dark, the man at the switchboard had a busy time, for it was his duty to explode 3,000 bombs. These were manipulated separately in no less than 40,000 feet of electric wiring.

Source of Paper Pulp Supply.

When we thing of Holland, we are little inclined to think of anything except a flat, treeless country, cut up by canals, and exposed to constant threat of overflow. It is true enough that all Holland is flat, that portions of it are below sea level, and that it is about as highly developed, industrially and agriculturally, as any section of the world.

The fact is, there is enough timber in Holand to form the base of a considerable paper industry. About Amsterdam, the northeastern arm of Holland, and down in the projecting elbow of Limburg, which the allies had some idea of taking away from Wilhelmina, are to be found centres of pulp manufacture. The trees, to be sure, are not from natural forests, but from plantations.

In normal times, Holland uses up all her own paper and more besides. But during the extraordinary period through which the world has just been passing this state of affairs, like most others, has been turned upside down; England and France have looked to the little kingdom of the Dutch for a part of their paper supply, and on occasion the Netherlands has actually been able to help out the American market.—Family Herald.

Purest Music In World.

The song which Japanese workmen sing when raising the rooftree of a new building ranks with the purest music in the world, according to Henry Eichman, a Boston composer, who is spending a year in Japan studying Oriental music, says the New York Evening Post. He said in Tokio: "The Orientals have evolved by the process of elimination a perfect philosophy, a perfect art and a perfect music. If we could think as Orientals think we would realize the absolute simplicity and perfection of art life." As he goes about Japan he takes notes on the sound of temple bells, with their beautiful overtones, with the view of making them themes for his compositions.

The American Army.

An English captain who had heard that American troops were in France, but as yet had seen none in his sector, passed one night by an abandoned dug-out. Hearing movements within, he at once thought of German spies, drew his pistol and leveled it at the entrance. "Who's in there?" he called. A flash of white teeth showed in the darkness and a soft voice answered, "Dis am de American army, suh!"

Large Parts of England Swallowed Up by the Sea And Lost to the Nation

As you sit in your deck-chair on the beach and look out over the silver sea, it probably does not occur to you that you may be looking at what was once a large city, the ruins of which lie buried under the ocean, says London Answers.

On the east coast alone we lose a piece of land as large as the Island of Heligoland every year, and during the last century we have had to forfeit to King Neptune a piece of land equal in size to the County of London.

If you are at Aldeburgh, Felixstowe, Cromer, Sheringham, or indeed anywhere on the east coast, it is possible you may pick up on the beach some relic of a once prosperous city, or the fossilized remains of some animal from a long forgotten forest covered by the sea.

If you could see a map of the time of Henry II., you would find in Suffolk a large town called Dunwich—on your map it would probably be spelt Donnywitch. This city was the most important in East Anglia, far larger in its day than either Norwich or Ipswich.

You will look in vain on a modern map for even a mention of Dunwich, for the whole of that great city, with its fifty churches, its literature and art, its wealthy institutions, royal palaces, and its mint is now reduced to a few tottering ruins, a handful of cottages and a score of villagers.

Some idea of the size of Dunwich may be gained from the fact that the town gave £133 6s. 8d. towards the marriage expenses of the daughter of King Henry II., while Ipswich gave £53 6s. 8d. It was during the reign of Edward I that Dunwich was at the height of its prosperity. Magnificent churches were built, spacious mansions erected, and the trade of the whole of Eastern England flocked to the town. The first church was built by Felix, the first bishop of East Anglia, after whom Felixstowe is named. It was at its greatest power wwhen the relentless ocean marked Dunwich for its own.

By 1350 a huge portion of the town, with more than 400 houses and numerous shops and mills, was swept away. The magnificent churches of St. Felix, St. Leonard, St. Martin and St. Nicholas were devoured by the sea, and by 1385 all the land up to the Blackfriars was engulfed, and during the following century one church in every ten years fell into the hungry sea until by 1550 not a quarter of the city was left. By this time the inhabitants had recognized the uselessness of waging war upon so relentless a foe.

During a great storm the inhabitants gathered on the stone walls of the city and the roofs of their houses, and, with clenched fists, loudly cursed the sea.

It was during comparatively recent times that what remained of the once noble city of Dunwich was swept away. In December, 1739, a gale from the northeast continued for several days, creating mighty seas, which tore away huge portions of the cliff. Buildings were hurled down like dolls' houses, furniture and effects were washed out to sea or smashed to bits on the wrecked buildings.

Hills were levelled to the surrounding country. Graveyards were exposed, and skeletons and bones of the long dead of Dunwich were scattered as the surges carried them. Thus perished the chief town of East Anglia.

Gone are its fair buildings, its churches and palaces. Gone are the brazen gates of the great city; its abbots, lords, knights, Templars and kings of former days, as well as its wealth and merchandise, are but a mournful memory.

We know that Lowestoft is now the most easterly point of England, but it was not always so, as you may see if you will examine an atlas of even 150 years ago. You will find a place called Easton much farther east than Lowestoft. It has now been forced back over two miles, and nothing remains of the ancient town.

Both Aldeburgh and Southwold can tell a similar tale to that of Dunwich. Aldeburgh was once more than half a mile east of its present site, and Southwold was being devoured by the sea until the advent of wealthy residents made it possible to build a seawall and other defences, which have done much to save the charming little resort.

At Cromer, too, they will tell you that where once were smiling valleys and peaceful villages now the blue waters roll, and here and there rocks and parts of ruined buildings remind us of bygone happy days. On the rocks, now far out to sea, which may be seen at low tide, stood Cromer Church, which marked the centre of the town.

Sailors hereabout will tell you that even to-day you may row out to the site of the church, and hear the bells ringing in the turret beneath the sea.

Almost in a straight line off Cromer stood and flourished the important town of Shipton. Only a few years ago were to be seen at very low tides large masses of masonry, which were said to have formed part of Shipton Castle.

Visitors to Felixstowe, Harwich, and Dovercourt are probably not aware that centuries ago there once stood off Harwich a large and important town called Orwell. Not a trace of the town now remains, for it has been swallowed in its entirety by an ever voracious ocean.

When Orwell was doomed its trade went to Harwich, which grew and began to be popular; but the destruction of Orwell removed a barrier which broke the violence of the sea and protected Harwich, and now the constant washing of the tides has made the point on which Harwich stands a peninsula, and in a few years' time there is a grave possibility of its being converted into an island.

When you are at Hunstanton and look across the broad waters of the Wash, you are looking at what was once a great forest of comparatively recent date. You can, at times of very low tide, walk and examine this drowned forest. It extends right across the Wash to the coast of Lincolnshire, and is crammed with the trunks and stems of countless trees, some of them of immense size. There is a charm in wandering through this submerged forest where our forefathers hunted the red deer. A few years ago a stone implement was found sticking in one of the trees, and is now in Norwich Museum.

A scheme for reclaiming the whole of the Wash, draining it and converting it into a new county, was set on foot sixty years ago. The promoters even went so far as to christen the county-to-be, which was to be called Victoria.

CLOTHING REFORM.

If it be true, says the Manchester Guardian, that the soft collar is passing out of the wardrobes of young men in this country, we may be sure there are reasons which go deeper than that a ban has been put on it at one of our public schools. The soft collar came in long before the war, and was not the result of anything so fortuitous as a mere shortage of starch. And men are no more to be dictated to on a point of dress than women; the notion that it is only women who attend to the fashions is wrong.

Until quite recent times, indeed, men, and not women, were the leaders of fashion. In the Plantagenet period woman changed her attire much less frequently than man; again, the ruff in the Elizabethan period was man's invention. Women, in fact, were inveterate conservatives about dress until the middle of last century. They opposed innovations touching not only their own wardrobe, but also that of men. Was not the Duke of Wellington on a famous occasion forbidden by the ladies' committee of Willis' rooms to take part in a dance because he was wearing the then unfamiliar long trousers instead of knee breeches?

The point to bear in mind, though, is that fashion with man has never been the capricious thing it so often is with woman; when he changes his dress there are usually deep reasons for it.

More than twenty years ago George Bernard Shaw discovered signs of a sartorial revolution going on in the country, and announced the doom of "boiled and ironed linen." And the modern soft collar is simply the point of nodality in a garb which came in with the ideal of the simple life, with the spread of golf, cycling and tennis. If it is about to be discarded we may be sure there will be no reversion to primitive type in man's dress, even if its complements, the sports coats and the flannel trousers, go with it. In France, significantly enough, many young men are wearing the Byron collar or handsome scarfs, and they are thinking of knee breeches again. That may be one reason why in this country there is some readiness to let the soft collar go—to make way for something even more free and easy. Fashion is contagious the world over, and it is fairly certain that clothing reform has come to stay.

England Selling War Towns.

While the United States is selling its war towns and industrial centres intact, England is disposing of her surplus from the war with a double purpose in view, first to realize as much as possible from these accumulations, and second to assist the rent-payer to solve the increasing rents, which have become a problem in that country as vexatious as it is in this country. Thus when the English landlord approaches and announces that the rent for the coming year will be jumped the rent-payer is expected to follow the new slogan and "Buy a War Hut."

The disposal board of the Ministry of Munitions has taken the double task of selling the surplus war huts and assisting the gouged tenants. The board has placed on exhibition in London a war hut made into a peace-time abode. This type is sixty feet by fifteen feet and approximately eight feet high. Partitions have been made in the hut and it provides a living and dining-room combined, three bedrooms, kitchen, pantry, bathroom, and space for storing coal. The hut sells for $500 and will accommodate a family of six. A similar house, if built new, it is estimated in England, would cost $1,625.

The war hut can be taken to the country and made into a home there, the salesman of the disposal board says, but explains that the cost will be greater, for an asbestos lining as proof [illegible] must be provided. Then roofing and other materials must be purchased at an increased cost of $1,[illegible]. But with these additional expenditures the war hut in the country can be made into a home which would cost approximately $3,500.

A Nice Cushy Job.

What is the most popular name in the country? Bradbury. A London paper says it is the name on every pound and ten-shilling note issued from the Treasury. But the signature will soon be changed to Fisher. Sir John Bradbury, who has hitherto been permanent secretary to the Treasury, having given way to Sir Warren Fisher, in order to take up another appointment.

Perhaps the funniest Bradbury story concerns a coster, who said to his pal, "Blimey, Bill, who's this bloke Bradbury? He's got a nice cushy job, signing these 'ere notes all day. Bet he's got a few million of 'em stowed away. He's a fool if he ain't."

First Overhead Trolley.

The first practical overhead trolley line was built in Kansas City in 1884, in which double overhead conductors were used with a trolley wheel riding on top of the wire. In 1885 a third-rail line was constructed in Baltimore and the Van de Poele system was installed in Toronto, Canada, and the next year in Scranton, Pa. Prior to this time experimental systems had been in use in Chicago, New York and Boston.

Gretna Green to be Forgotten

GRETNA GREEN seems about to revert once more to a figure of speech. London despatches tell of the closing down of the vast cordite plants built there early in the world war.

To most Canadians the words may never have meant much more than a nickname for any rendezvous of eloping couples, but there is a real Gretna Green. Twice has it been conspicuous among English towns, once when its chief industry was matrimony and again when, as a wag remarked, it started making a new kind of high explosive.

Now it is about to sink into obscurity, with the end of its war contracts, which represented an investment of some $60,000,000 in our money and the employment of more than 6,000 workers.

Gretna Green is a village in Scotland, tiny except for its munitions boom, less than a mile from the river Sark, which marks the England-Scotland boundary line in that vicinity, near the Solway Firth, and about nine miles northwest of Carlisle. Upon its proximity to the border line rests its first claim to fame, for the English marriage laws sent eloping couples to Scotland just as the divorce laws of some 47 of the United States make Reno desirable for would-be divorcees.

Before 1754 Fleet Prison was the figurative "Gretna Green" of England. Until that time the English law recognized marriages as valid so long as they were performed by clergymen of any denomination, but it imposed a fine upon clergymen who would perform the ceremony for couples who had not proclaimed their intentions either by banns or license.

Such fines had no terrors, of course, for clergymen imprisoned in Fleet for debt, and some of them undertook to marry couples who wished to avoid the expense of the customary public ceremony. Less scrupulous persons soon took advantage of this example, and tavern keepers fitted up places where they brought couples to be married by the "Fleet parsons," and in some cases young women of the underworld lured men there for marriage as an easy means of compelling their husband-victims to pay their debts.

These abuses were checked by the famous Hardwicke act of 1754, which made unauthorized marriages voidable, and thereupon Gretna Green became the romance spot of the British Isles. All the Scotch law required was that two persons should declare their intention to be married in the presence of witnesses; and the British law then, as now, recognized marriages as legal so long as they conformed to the laws in the places they were consummated.

At Gretna Green, as in Fleet Prison, were persons who exercised cupidity at the expense of Cupid; and innkeepers, ferrymen and tollhouse tenders exploited the couples who fled to Gretna Green. Any witnesses would have served, but the "professional witnesses" there, like the "marrying parsons" of some American towns, engaged "touts" to bring couples to them, and when the railroad from Glasgow to Carlisle started running the station platform at Gretna Green thronged with these obnoxious "commission men."

A pioneer of this unique industry was John Linton, formerly a valet to Sir John Gresham, described as a "man of fine presence and manners," and another, a Mr. Beattie, was a personable adventurer. But later traffickers were ne'er-do-wells and town drunkards.

According to popular legend, blacksmith shops were favorite meccas for eloping couples, but authority is lacking for the stories of smithies who would pause while shoeing horses to help legalize marriages. Many famous Englishmen were married at Gretna Green, among them Lord Eldon and Lord Brougham, both of whom later became Lord Chancellor, and Lord Erskine, while he was Chancellor; Charles Manner Sutton, who afterward was Archbishop of Canterbury, and Lord Westmoreland and Miss Child, the latter a daughter of the man who founded Child's Bank.

During the three decades when Gretna Green flourished there were more than 7,000 marriages recorded there, nearly 800 of which were performed in 1855, the year before Scotland enacted a law which made a three weeks' residence a requisite to marriage.

Marriage by declaration still is legal in Scotland, and it is interesting to note that our own marriage laws deviate from the English common law in respect to marriage, and the provisions of most of the states in the United States follow closely the Scotch law in this respect. As in Scotland, every state has made some provision for previous residence, obtaining a license, or registration, but there is the widest leeway permitted for the form of the actual ceremony.

Only seven years ago publicity was given the marriage of two young people at Cambridge, Mass., who wrote their own marriage service and had it repeated to them by a Justice of the Peace, whereupon that official pronounced them man and wife thus, "Since you wish to unite in marriage, and have notified each other of the same before me and these witnesses, I now, by virtue of the authority vested in me, pronounce you man and wife."

Explaining Geysers.

In a word, the whole secret of the intermittent geyser lies in a subterranean reservoir, the contents of which are forced out by steam expansion every time it gets filled up. The Yellowstone park is a region which not so very long ago was fiercely volcanic. In that role it has ceased to play an alarming part, but locally the earth's crust is extremely thin. A very literal hell rages not far beneath the places frequented by tourists, and thence is derived the heat that causes the outbursts of the geysers.

Cobble Coasting Has Thrills.

Cobble stones may not appeal to the uninitiated as ideal for coasting purposes, but they admirably serve the purpose. It all depends on how steep is the hill the cobbles pave, ventures an exchange. In other words, it isn't the material that makes the "slide," but the pitch of the slope.

Those of us who are accustomed to sliding down snow-clad hills or tiny ascents made slippery by ice know little of the thrill a slide may possess. For some measure of the delight in the sport is frequently minimized by the frigid air that rushes past our tingling faces and some measure of the enjoyment is entirely lost by the chills that grip our shivering bodies.

Imagine—if you can—the thrills of coasting down a hill so steep that your "sled" flies over the cobbles as much as it would speed over crusted snow or an ice glare. Instead of icy air that almost chills you to the marrow at the thought picture yourself in springtime raiment and fanned by summer breezes.

If you can imagine such a situation you will have enjoyed at least some part of the sport of coasting in an island where there is no snow or ice. Down the cobble-paved road the "sled" flies. For ten minutes you flash along in breath-taking rush, then you begin to grow accustomed to the speed and novelty of the sport and you take time to look about you. But — like most other enjoyments — just as you're beginning really to enjoy it to the utmost your coast ends.

Where is this extraordinary slide? On the island of Madeira, which belongs to Portugal, and lies in the Atlantic ocean, off the coast of Morocco.

Anzac Not a Trade Name.

Use of the term "Anzac" by manufacturers and dealers as a trade name has been interdicted by Great Britain and all its colonies, and a few American concerns which had adopted the word have been requested by the Australian commission in the United States to discontinue its use. As is well known, the word is formed of the initials of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps. The wonderful deeds of that organization in the war have given the coined word a most sacred significance to [illegible] ends, where the thought of commercializing it is extremely distasteful.—Popular Mechanics.

Brass is perhaps the best known and most useful alloy. It is formed by fusing together copper and zinc. Different proportions of these metals produce brasses possessing marked distinctive properties. The proportions of the different ingredients are seldom precisely alike; these depend upon the requirements of various uses for which the alloys are intended. Peculiar qualities of the constituent metals also exercise influence on the results.

JAKE SOLOMAN, Preprietor

O'ROUKE BIDS HIGH FOR CHAMPION FIGHT

OFFERS $200,000 FOR BOUT TO BE HELD BEFORE NEXT JULY.

Tom O'Rourke has rejoined the ranks of box promoters with the following offer of a purse of £50,000 sterling, which is nearly $200,000 in American money at the present rate of exchange:

"Understanding that there is no other alternative or a prospect of securing a match between Jack Dempsey and Fred Fulton since the outcome of the Carpentier - Beckett match in London, I have concluded to promote boxing again and will top the bid of C. B. Cochrane, the London promoter, who has bid £35,000, which at the market exchange is $136,000 for Carpentier-Dempsey match.

"I will give them £50,000, which in American money is nearly $200,000. This amount to be split sixty per cent. to winner and 40 per cent. to loser, the match to occur in America, between the present time and next July. The amount of money I am offering is far in excess of any promoter's offer in this or any other country. Besides they all insist upon the contestants boxing twenty rounds, which I do not, as both Carpentier and Dempsey are both quick finishers. I think that my proposition will more than likely meet with their approval.

"It is understood, however, that the principals, both Carpentier and Dempsey, must each post $10,000 with some reputable man to bind this agreement when signing articles, and I will do likewise.

"The only proviso being that the winner, should it be Carpentier, shall meet an opponent inside of nine months. Should the winner be Jack Dempsey, he shall meet an opponent inside of six months, as he has already held the title six months the opponent of either man to be Fred Fulton, who is the legitimate contender."

Widowers, like tumbledown houses, should be repaired.

CARPENTIER HANDS DEMPSEY A CHALLENGE

BOUT FOR WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP MUST NOW COME OFF NEXT SUMMER.

The direct challenge issued by Georges Carpentier to Jack Dempsey to fight for the world's heavyweight championship virtually assures a match during the coming year. The American title holder has expressed his willingness to face the French boxer and there remains only the agreement on the terms and conditions to govern the contest.

When the articles of agreement finally are signed it will be found that all former purses and similar inducements given to championship heavyweights in the past will have been dwarfed into insignificance by the sums to be handed to the boxers for the first international ring battle of importance in many years. Johnson and Jeffries divided $101,000 for their Reno bout and the Willard-Dempsey purse at Toledo amounted to almost $150,000. Dempsey and Carpentier are quite likely to battle for a purse approximately twice as large as that offered for the Willard-Dempsey match. The division probably will be arranged upon a sixty and forty per cent. basis, the larger share to go to the winner or the present title holder, as the agreement may call for.

Several American and European fight promoters of strong financial standing are already endeavoring to sign the two heavyweights to binding contracts. The contest to secure their signatures promises to be a bitter and exciting struggle in which sums running into hundreds of thousands of dollars will be offered in turn by rival promoters.

The date of the bout can be set down for midsummer but the location of the ring is a matter of much speculation. Shrewd ring followers express doubt that England would supply the huge gate receipts necessary to successfully finance such a match, as neither of the contestants would have the drawing power of a Briton. Owing to the intense French pride in the ring achievements of Carpentier, France probably would supply a record gate, but there is some doubt whether Dempsey would agree to box Carpentier there unless certain restrictions were placed in the articles of agreement.

JOHNSON APPEALS MAKES INJUNCTION

LEAGUE LEADER FILED PROTEST AT LAST MOMENT AND CONTINUES FIGHT.

New York, Dec. 15.—It developed Saturday that Ban Johnson did file an appeal from the decision of Justice Robert Wagner in the Carl Mays injunction proceedings, despite the announcement on Thursday to the contrary. It was filed after court hours that evening, and Charles H. Tuttle, the Yankees' lawyer, did not learn of that fact until late yesterday afternoon. The time limit for appealing expired Thursday, but Johnson had until midnight to take such action, and he kept everybody guessing by waiting until almost the last minute before leaving for Chicago.

As a result the argument of Johnson's appeal will be heard in the Appellate Court early next month, about twenty days being granted by the court for preparation of affidavits. Should the Court of Appeals uphold Justice Wagner's decision favoring the Yankees, Johnson still will have the privilege of carrying the case to court for trial, for the appeal just concerns the matter of making the injunction permanent, and an injunction even after appeal is only a temporary restraint.

In answer to a statement made by some of Johnson's "loyal" five that the Yankees had broken up all attempts at peace on Wednesday by serving Johnson with several subpoenas, the lawyer for the New York club pointed to the fact yesterday that the new suits were not started until after the meeting had concluded. "Another attempt to shift the blame and camouflage the situation," said Colonel T. L. Huston.

Herrmann's Successor.

John Heydler, the National League head, had nothing to announce regarding the informal meeting of the National Commission here on Thursday beyond the fact that only routine matters were disposed of. Asked how a successor to August Herrmann as chairman of the commission was to be chosen, Heydler replied that he did not see how one could be named until the American League straightens out its affairs, which he hoped would be soon. A joint committee of both leagues is supposed to recommend a successor to Herrmann, but the American League end of that committee is just at present disorganized. The constitution gives Heydler and Johnson final authority to pass on the committee's recommendations. Unless the tangle is ended by the time the commission holds its annual meeting—the first Monday in January, according to the constitution—the commission may get along without a chairman or may prevail upon Herrmann to prolong his stay in office.

ARMED TRUCE IN AMERICA

COMISKEY DECLARES NOTHING CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED BY COMPROMISE.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—Whatever peace may exist in the American League as a result of the meeting in New York may be described as an "armed truce," Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the Chicago Americans, said today on his return from the East. Comiskey is a member of the faction opposed to Ban Johnson, president of the league.

The business of the league is at a standstill and another meeting will have to be called to lay plans for the 1920 season, according to Comiskey.

"We have no Schedule Committee, nor have we transacted any other business usually cleared up at the December meeting," Comiskey said. "I have not changed my mind in any way about the American League, and I am convinced it will do no good to talk compromise. What will be done hereafter remains to be seen.

"I have been quoted as having suggested a peace proposition. I never did any such thing. Neither did I vote for myself as vice president of the league."

UNIVERSAL FINGER-PRINTS

Such a System Would Make Mistakes of Identity Impossible.

"Identification is of supreme importance in many fields far removed from crime and criminals, and it is not too much to say that it is desirable to have on file somewhere the fingerprints of every man, woman and child. Such a universal fingerprint collection would make mistakes of identity impossible."

The opinion is that of an expert who believes that the system is bound to become universal at no distant date. It is unfortunate indeed that the modern use of fingerprints for identification has begun with the detection of criminals, as the association is now so close that the taking of finger-prints is regarded as a disgrace.

Yet the finger-prints of every soldier and sailor of the United States are on record, and the same is true of most bank employes, says Tit-Bits. In Argentine it is true of every civilian.

In cases of unidentified dead, of kidnapping, of loss of memory, of babies exchanged in hospitals, of forged documents of masqueraders and pretenders for romantic or criminal purposes, consider the value of the finger print. It is scientifically conceded now that the little ridges at the tips of your digits afford the most conclusive system of personal identification known, and that in all human probability they are infallible.

Miss Gertrude Meredith Sullender, the only woman finger print expert holding a civil service position in New York, says: "Finger printing has been valuable chiefly in the detection and conviction of crime, and people as a rule think that it is all it is good for. As a matter of fact, it is valuable as much for protection as for detection. It has saved criminals, for instance, when they were falsely accused on account of their bad records.

"I remember when I was finishing my studies at Washington, in the Navy Bureau, a man came in and asked that his finger prints be made. He was going to the Far East, and thought something might happen to him there. It was an unusual request in those days, long before the war, and it happened that the man had no occasion to identify himself; but it was evidence even then of an intelligent attitude towards the system.

"We hope some day to see a general appreciation of the advantages of the system. If documents were signed with the finger prints as well as the name, for instance, forgeries would become impossible. It was so that the Chinese used them. A Chinese when he was ready to make his will would call in all the beneficiaries and read it to them, and then ask them to finger-print it as evidence that they acquiesced in its terms. It was a kind of ritual, but it was an identification also."

A remarkable case of dual identity in the Federal prison at Leavenworth is recalled. Will West, a negro housebreaker, was taken to Leavenworth Prison, while William West, convicted of murder, was serving there, and identified the murderer's photograph as his own. The Bertillion measurements, registered in milimetres (the milimetre is about one twenty-fifth of an inch), so closely tallied that the men could not have been distinguished with certainty thereby. That is, having photographs and the Bertillion measurements, either negro might have been convicted of a crime committed by the other. But their fingerprints were strikingly unlike.

Flowers That Tell the Time.

A clock composed entirely of growing plants and flowers has been made by a botanist. The dial of this clock, which is to be seen in a glasshouse at the Botanical Gardens just outside Paris, is simply a large circular flower-bed with twelve divisions, one for each hour of daylight. In each division a certain plant is growing, and so precisely has the selection of suitable plants been made that it is possible to tell the time of day by the opening of any one flower. The plants are arranged in the following order: 1, rose; 2, heliotrope; 3, water lily; 4, hyacinth; 5, convolvulus; 6, geranium; 7, mignonette; 8, carnation; 9, cactus; 10, lilac; 11, pansy; 12, violet. The originator claims that a botanist can tell the time by this means to within a few minutes. In Brazil there is a variety of magnolia which, for a few weeks in the year, opens and closes at the same hour every day, regardless of both light and temperature. Certain of the natives, who know neither clocks nor watches, invariably gauge the time by the flower.

Same Old Circus.

'Member the old farmer woman with the umbrella and the funny clothes who wanders round the ring just after the show begins, looking desperately into the audience calling "Al-bert, Albert, where are you, Al-bert?" And the policeman tells her to move on and she beats up the policeman and her wig and petticoats come off (down to the red-flannel one) and she isn't old or a lady either, after all? Well, she is still there.—Everybody's Magazine.

THE SULTAN'S THRONE.

He Wanted It to Be Like a Dental Chair.

When the French assumed control of Morocco and arranged a settlement with Mulai-Abd-el-Hafid, the Sultan who abdicated the throne in 1912, a host of his creditors appeared. The most difficult claim to settle, writes W. B. Harris in Asia, was that of the Spanish dentist who had purchased a lion for the royal menagerie and had not been paid for the beast.

The dentist's claim involved complications. The ex-Sultan had admired the dentist's chair and had ordered and paid for a throne that was to be constructed on the same mechanical principles. The throne had never been delivered; so Mulai Hafid had a counter-claim. An interview was arranged between the ex-Sultan and the dentist. Each was coached in the part he was to play; the dentist rehearsed plaintive appeals to the generosity of the former sovereign, and Mulai Hafid rehearsed a "gracious" reply.

Mulai Hafid was seated on a divan studiously reading a book when the dentist entered and made his obeisance. The obeisance, polite, but not very deep, did not meet his Majesty's approval. Instead of smiling, as arranged, the ex-Sultan continued to read half-aloud in a singsong drawl.

A long pause followed. Then one of the suite said: "My Lord the King, the dentist is here."

Without raising his eyes from the book, the ex-Sultan asked:

"Has he brought my mechanical throne?"

Now, that was not on the program at all. There was to have been no mention of dentist-chair thrones or lions—simply a reconciliation. A sum of money was to have been promised to the dentist and an abandonment of claim and counter-claim was to have followed. But before anyone could intervene the dentist shouted:

"Pay me for my lion!"

The fat was in the fire. The atmosphere boiled with vituperative allusions to lions and dentist thrones, until Mr. Harris restrained the infuriated potentate and attendants removed the struggling dentist from the presence chamber.

By dint of great exertion Mr. Harris brought about a settlement. The ex-Sultan did not get his throne, nor did he pay for the lion, which had died in the meantime. The dentist received a certain sum of money in payment of all his claims.

The Cannibal King.

While writing a book at Northampton, Mass., and a neighbor of Prof. Whitney, Raphael Pumpelly tells in his reminiscense, Miss Alice Whitney told him the following at once humorous and pathetic story:

"They had had as guests staying with them a missionary and his wife from the South Seas. The woman was tall and of stern aspect; the man, her second husband, was a small and timid creature. One evening, in an attempt to introduce a little liveliness into the solemnity, Mrs. Whitney asked her sons, just home from college, and her daughter to sing some college songs. So gathering around the piano, with their backs to the audience, the young people began "The King of the Cannibal Islands." As the song progressed the missionary lady grew more and more erect and severe, and when it came to the serving up of roast missionary she rose in anger, and with her black silk skirts rustling she walked solemnly out of the room, followed timidly by her shrinking little husband.

"Then Mrs. Whitney burst out with: 'Oh, children, children, what have you done? Her first husband was eaten by cannibals!'"

Speed of Ice-Cream Freezer.

"What are you running her in?" "High," comes the answer from behind the barn. You listen for the purr of a motor, but you don't hear any. Why? Because the men are running, not an automobile, but an ice-cream freezer. Wade H. Stemple, of West Virginia, has invented an ice-creame freezer that, like a Ford, has two speeds, high and low. As in the case of an automobile, high speed means that the shaft revolves rapidly while very little power is used, and low speed means slow rotation at greater power. It is operated very simply by means of two handles, one for each speed.

But why should an ice-cream freezer need two speeds? you ask. Compare its problems with those of an automobile. When freezing is started, the contents of the can are in liquid form and offer little resistance to the revolving blades. When the ice-cream thickens, more power is needed to turn the shaft.

Both of the gears may be used at the same time.—Popular Science Monthly.

Little Frederick, five, was visiting their neighbor across the way and noticed Mrs. Smith with a new pair of eye-glasses. "Oh, mamma," he exclaimed on arriving home, "I went over to see Mrs. Smith and she wears looking glasses on her eyes."

FATHER KILLS SON

Gun Discharged While Former Was Examining Weapon

Belleville, Dec. 15.—A fatal shooting accident occurred in Faraday Township, North Hastings, on Friday morning last on the farm of Albert Bierworth. It seems Mr. Bierworth had been out in the front yard shooting with a 22-calibre rifle when something went wrong. A shell failing to explode, Mr. Bierworth stepped inside the door to investigate the trouble. His eleven-year-old son, Wesley, happened to pass in front of him, and as he did the gun was discharged, the bullet passing through his arm and lodging in his body. In less than ten minutes Wesley was dead. His father was distracted when he realized he had shot his only son. A coroner was summoned, but did not consider an inquest necessary.

HYDRO RADIAL WORK STARTS NEXT SPRING

TORONTO-NIAGARA LINE WILL BE IN OPERATION IN 1921

Hamilton, Dec. 15.—Hamilton's railway entrance problems will probably be solved early in the New Year before February is ushered in. This question, it is expected, will be one of those settled at a conference between the Dominion Railway Board and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, to be held in the very near future. These are some of the assurances brought back from the recent Hydro conference held in Toronto by Controllers Jutten and Halcrow. The controllers also learned that work on Hydro radials would be started in the early spring of 1920, and that the railway from Toronto to the border would be in operation during the following year.

That connection will be made with the Grand Trunk line either across a bridge or fill at Carroll's Point, or back on the Grand Trunk level at the west of the ravine, where a bridge would not be necessary, was another bit of information gleaned by the local representatives at the conference.

CHANGES THE PLAN FOR TARIFF ENQUIRY

WRITTEN OPINIONS WILL BE SECURED FROM REPRESENTATIVE CITIZENS

Ottawa, Dec. 15.—International and economic conditions, which are not only far from normal but are much worse than one year ago, when the promise of a general tariff revision was made, or at any time during the war period, are responsible for a change in the government plans regarding a general tariff inquiry, according to a statement given to the Canadian Press by Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance.

"Inasmuch, however," says the Minister of Finance, in explaining why the change of plans is considered necessary, "as any general revision must be based upon as complete a knowledge as possible of the conditions and relations one to another of our various national industries and productive agencies and as it is also desirable to obtain the views of as many persons as possible whose practical knowledge and experience would be most valuable, it is considered advisable to begin the collection of information relative thereto."

Secure Written Opinions.

Instead of a commission being named for the purpose of touring the country, as had been anticipated, it is proposed now to get the preliminary information together by means of securing written statements from all interested, and these will be made the basis for a general public inquiry to be held throughout the country later, as indicated by Sir Thomas White.

DOCTORS PUT EMBARGO ON CHRISTMAS CHEER

PHYSICIANS AT WINDSOR WILL ISSUE "NO-LIQUOR ORDER" FOR PRESENT

Windsor, Dec. 15.—No more orders for "Christmas cheer" will be issued by local physicians until after the holiday season. This conclusion was reached following a week of steady inquiries from folk anxious to lay in a supply of joy water, and who expected to be able to do so through the prescription medium. A remarkable feature in connection with the requests for liquor prescriptions was the unanimity of reasons given by applicants.

"We want it for Christmas pudding," was the plea used most frequently. The doctors say that if all the requests had been granted, enough "pudding sauce" to supply the world would have been made in Windsor.

Bottles of acid exploded in a drug storefire at Coffeyville, Kan. Two firemen were overcome and burned to death.

APPEALS FOR LOWER PRICES OF FOODS

T. TOOMS, M.L.A. RECEIVES LETTER FROM ONE OF HIS CONSTITUENTS

Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., has received the following letter from one of his constituents:

Dear Sir,—In writing this note I wish to appeal to you to do something to make life more bearable as regards the high cost of living. I want to tell you right now the poor working people are really hungry. For example, the butter we have to buy at 72 cents per pound is so bad that it cannot be used. It is polluted with gasoline or some other mixture with an awfully rank taste. The appearance of the Peterboro Creamery is good, also the Central Smith, but the taste is far from being good. I know hard working, delicate people who pack their dry bread before daylight, and work on the strength of that until night. It is pretty hard to swallow dry bread at noon for lunch and at the same time know there are profiteers at our doors hoarding money at the expense of our health. Is it possible that a few selfish profiteers are going to run everything as they please by continuing to raise prices every time they feel like it and laugh up their sleeve because they are allowed to do it?

Why do not the men in authority do something to cut down and keep down outlandish food prices? If they cannot, why have government at all? We all know that food prices are higher now and foodstuffs harder to get than in war time, and what plausible excuse can be passed on to the poor labor man?

Now, look at the price of bad butter, potatoes, meat, apples, sugar and milk, and then think of the awful cost of coal, wood, dry goods, taxes, rent and doctor bills, without any raise in working people's wages, and so much sickness everywhere. What has become of all the products of the past year? Are not the cold storages bulging, while little children, old people, delicate working girls and men are forced to be in need? In the name of common sense, what is going to become of us if a change is not made in prices? Why is there not a fearless controller, who cannot be bought by money or excuses, given authority to open the storehouses, and, despite the hoarders, put the goods out for sale?

There will have to be some law framed for the good of the people, or the state of affairs in Russia is sure to exist here. Now, Mr. Tooms, if you will do something to remedy the above trouble, which will be of boundless benefit to the workingmen and women, who knows but you will be our Canadian prime minister? One sure fact, you will have the good will and blessing of thousands of sufferers.

You may show this note to whom you please, or put it in the papers. Every word is true.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

Will Be Subject of Address by Rev. Dr. Chafer Tonight.

"What Takes Place at the Coming of the Lord," is to be the subject of Dr. Chafer's address tonight in St. Paul's Church. This is to be his last address. He and Mrs. Chafer return tomorrow to their home in New York City. His preaching throughout the week has been largely cast in the mould of teaching. He was for a number of years a teacher and lecturer in the Philadelphia School of the Bible, an institution a good deal after the pattern of our Toronto Bible Training College.

His address last night was a powerful evangelistic appeal. He took as his subject, "How May One Know That He is a Child of God;" At the close of the service a number pressed into the after meeting and definitely decided to accept Christ as their personal Saviour. The subject tonight is naturally one that interests every true believer. He will want to know what takes place in his experience in that moment spoken of by the apostle in the Epistle to the Thessalonians: "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive that are left shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Each one will want to know just where he is to be in the events here described. A cordial invitation is given to the public to attend. A thank offering will be received at the evening's service.

MAY APPOINT WOMEN AS MOVIE CENSORS

DELEGATES FROM NATIONAL COUNCIL HAVE INTERVIEW WITH PROV. TREASURER.

Toronto, Dec. 15.—One subject and one only came in for emphasis by the Provincial Committee of the National Council of Women in their interview with the Cabinet at Queen's Park. The subject was the movie censorship.

Provincial Treasurer Smith declared that he would be willing to enlarge the board of censors, and to admit women to it as members, but he would not agree to the abolition of the Appeal Board.

It was desired by the ladies that a moving picture with a moral entitled "The End of the Road," should be shown to audiences of both sexes over 16 years of age for educational purposes.

"I have seen the picture," demurred Hon. Mr. Smith, "and I would not let my own sons and daughters see it." But Mrs. A. M. Huestis, Mrs. H. W. Parsons and Dr. Stowe-Gullen expressed the opinion that the picture would have sound moral effect.

The intentiion of the Provincial Treasurer is to prevent the exposure of suggestive posters in theatre and movie house entrances. In many cases the scenes shown on the posters are eliminated from the actual films as shown.

FIVE MEMBERS, NOT SIX, WILL BE ELECTED TO BOARD OF EDUCATION

Vaccancy Caused by the Resignations of Mr. Gordon and Mr. Eastwood, Must be Filled by Choice of Board

The question troubling many of the electors at the present time is whether five or six are to be elected to the Board of Education. (The answer is five. The Act states that in case a member of the Board resigns, a majority of the remaining members shall elect a qualified person to fill the vancancy until the expiration of the term of office.

Mr. Gordon was elected to the Board last year for a two-year term, therefore his term of office would not have expired until the end of 1920.

On his resignation it was expected that the defeated candidate next in order would be chosen to fill the vacancy, in which case Mrs. Morris would have been appointed. The Board declared to follow this custom, and elected Mr. V. Eastwood to fill the vacancy. He was chosen for his past faithful and efficient service as a member of the Board for many years.

At the last meeting of the 1919 Board Mr. Eastwood resigned giving as his reason that he thought it was fairer for the public to choose a successor to Mr. Gordon at the poll on election day. This is impossible, according to the law, and it will be a matter of choice with the members of the 1920 Board, whether or not the choose the highest defeated candidate to fill the vacancy. At any rate at the conclusion on the elections on New Year's Day, there will still be a vacancy on the Board of Education, due to the resignation of Mr. Gordon and Mr. Eastwood.

WORK ON BRIDGE IS BEING DELAYED

COUNCIL IS ANXIOUS TO FINISH WORK ON EAST SIDE OF BRIDGE

WILL EXPEDITE OPERATIONS

ANTICIPATE THAT THIS STEP WOULD SAVE TWO MONTHS IN SPRING

Mr. F. Barber, engineer of the Hunter Street bridge has stopped the laying of all concrete on the structure with only about six days work remaining on the east side of the river. It is anticipated that that will cause considerable delay in commencing work in the spring so the Council met last night in order to endeavor to take some step that would lead to the completion of that part of the work.

It was stated that if the work on the east side could be completed the forms from that side could be taken off and placed in position on the west side. This would prevent a delay of approximately two months in the Spring it was said.

Ald. Turner informed his colleagues that he had looked into the matter carefully. Although finishing that wall might save money and expediate operations, from the information he had gained, he did not think it would be advisable to go ahead with the work. He explained that each wall was built to sustain a certain weight and must be examined by the Railway and Municipal Board before any additional weight, such as the railway wall above is put on it. In the case of the north side this has been done without that permission. He thought the January thaw could be utilized to take the wedges out of the expansion joints and finish the six days' work.

Ald. Edgar moved that the chairman of the Special Bridge Committe place the matter before the engineer and see if it is not possible to go on with the work as desired. He pointed out that any action must be by the order or consent of the engineer.

The Mayor thought Mr. Barber or his representative should be on the job at all times and then he would know what was needed and be there to carry on his inspections. He hoped next year's council would see to it that Mr. Barber's contract was carried out.

Widened Platform

Plans were received of the widened platform as requested by the Quaker Oats Company. The Council gave the Mayor and Clerk authority to sign them, on being approved by the Quaker Oats Company.

Threatens Action.

A letter was read from Gordon & O'Brien, solicitors for D. LePlant, giving notice of action for $500 damages for closing that part of Water street that was sold to the McDonald estate.

Another letter from the same source was read offering to sell the property for $300.

Mayor's Supper

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mayor Duncan extended an invitation to the aldermen and press, to attend a supper on Wednesday evening at 6:30 o'clock. The invitation was enthusiastically accepted.

ELECTIONS IN AUSTRALIA.

Opposition Forces Have Secured Only Twenty-Nine Seats.

Melbourne, Dec. 16.—Virtually complete election returns received here show that the Liberal and the Nationalist Labor parties, who support the Government, have won 35 seats in the House of Representatives and the Farmers' party, also a supporter of the government on some questions, 11 seats, while the anti-governmental factions and the Laborites have secured only 29.

ELECTION OF WOMEN.

Trend of Opinion Shown by Elections in London.

Women came off fairly well in the election, which affects London's municipal housekeeping. In Bermondsey, out of ten women standing, six were elcted; in artistic Chelsea, out of fifteen standing, ten were elected; in Lambeth seven were elecated and seven defeated; in St. Marylebone, eight were elected and five defeated. This shows that public sentiment in England is undergoing a change with regard to women holding office.

VACCINATION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The Board of Health of the city has decided upon voluntary and free vaccination in order to avoid the danger of a smallpox epidemic.

The principals of the Public schools have received notice that doctors will visit each of the schools tomorrow (Wednesday), at 3.30 p.m., to vaccinate all children whose parents desire it.

The voluntary and free nature of the matter has been fully explained to the pupils. In order to avoid misunderstanding, the kindergarten, primer and book I. pupils have been instructed to bring notes from their parents. None of these pupils will be vaccinated unless their parents' notes signify their desire or willingness to have it done.

The older pupils will not be required to bring notes as they are quite capable of carrying out the instructions of their parents.

The above precautions have been taken to avoid all possible misunderstanding. Parents are to instruct their children what course to pursue, and in the case of the younger pupils to send notes with them, if they desire to have them vaccinated.

A. MOWAT, I.P.S.

SUGGEST TEMPORARY SUCCESSOR TO TAKE PLACE OF THE PREMIER

Sir Robert Could Take up His Duties Again if a Rest Restored Him to Health—Election of New Leader Subject of Much Discussion at Ottawa

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Dec. 16.—How and when a successor to Sir Robert Borden will be chosen is still undetermined, Premier himself, although he declines to make any official statement, it is understood is taking no active part in the arrangements. A strong wing of party apparently favors the idea of calling a Parliamentary caucus to choose a successor. That this course has not been formally decided is evident from discussion of situation with members of Government at Ottawa.

A Successor Pro Tene.

Fully a month will elapse before the situation created by the decision of Sir Robert to retire from active political life can be met, his successor can be appointed, the new Government reorganized, and the future of the Unionist party determined. So far there has been no official confirmation of the statement that the Prime Minister has resolved to lay down his present onerous responsibilities in order that his health may not be further impaired. On the other hand, the report has not been denied, and that fact is regarded as significant.

In one reliable quarter it was said that yesterday's unofficial intimation of the Premier's decision was "unauthorized." It was admitted, however, to be substantially correct. It was suggested that a formal public announcement on the subject might not be made until Sir Robert communicated his plans to his Parliamentary following next month. Numerous messages expressing regret that the Prime Minister should be obliged even to contemplate forsaking his present high position have been received here. There has, moreover, been a suggestion, emanating from Montreal, that if Sir Robert's former vigorous health can be restored by rest and by abstention from participation in public affairs, his followers should show their loyalty by leaving the way open for his return to his duties through the nomination of a locum tenens.

In the meantime, gossip is busy with the two questions, who will succeed Sir Robert Borden, and how shall his successor be selected. In the discussion there seems to be some confusion as to the constitutional procedure. It will be Sir Robert Borden's function when he presents his resignation of his office to the Governor-General to suggest the name of a man to be called to the Premiership. The real point is, whom will the Prime Minister consult before deciding upon his recommendation to the Governor-General. In some quarters, it is suggested that Sir Robert should be guided in his choice by the views of his colleagues in the Cabinet. In others, it is recalled that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was elected leader of the Liberal party in succession to Hon. Edward Blake by a caucus of Liberal members of the Senate and the House of Commons, and that Sir Robert Borden was himself appointed to succeed Sir Charles Tupper as Conservative leader by a Conservative caucus.

From such precedents it is argued that a party leader should be nominated before a new Prime Minister is recommended to the Governor-General. To name the leader, the caucus of Unionist Senators and Commoners, it is said, will be summoned because, for lack of a complete party organization throughout the Dominion, it would be difficult to call at short notice a convention of the Unionist party.

The Unionist caucus has already been promised an opportunity to discuss the formulation of a policy upon which present political alignment can be perpetuated. It may be, therefore, that the Parliamentarians, numbering 160, and including some 45 Liberals, may find themselves confronted by a double task when they are convened. Reconstruction of the Cabinet, which Sir Robert Borden has had in mind for many months past, will doubtless wait upon the appointment of his successor. Who that successor will be is a matter of speculation.

MUST FURNISH PROOF OF VACCINATION

OTHERWISE VISITORS FROM ONTARIO WILL BE BARRED FROM MONTREAL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Dec. 16.—On account of the smallpox epidemic in Ontario, the local health board has issued an order forbidding the entrance into the city from the neighboring province of any who cannot prove they have been successfully vaccinated during the past seven years. The order also announces that no one will be allowed to leave Montreal for Ontario points over the Christmas holidays and return here who cannot submit a similar proof.

It was stated that a reply would be made after further examination of the document.

Food For Austria.

Initial measures of relief for Austria were taken by the Supreme Council today, after that body had heard a lengthy representation of his nation's difficulties by Dr. Karl Renner, the Austrian Chancellor. It was decided that as the first step in relieving the Austrian food shortage, thirty thousand tons of food should be despatched to Trieste to be shipped thence into Austrian territory.

DEFENCE AT WINNIPEG PROMISE SENSATION

Winnipeg, Dec. 16.—Charges of a sensational character will be made by the defense at the trial of R. B. Russell in the form of a motion of an affidavit this afternoon, according to a statement made by the counsel for the defense today. TRENT CANAL SHOULD BE ADVERTISED

SENATOR BENNETT SUGGESTS IT IS OPPORTUNITY FOR TOURISTS

Orillia, Dec. 16.—Senator W. H. Bennett addressed a largely attended meeting of the Orillia Board of Trade last evening. He laid before Orillia the great tourist opportunities offered by the opening of the Trent Canal which will be navigable to 35-foot boats throughout its entire length from Lake Ontario to the Georgian Bay during the coming summer. He urged that Orillia, in co-operation with other towns along the route, should join in a publicity campaign and suggested the holding of a motor boat regatta at Orillia next summer. It is probable that steps will be taken to act on that suggestion.

BRITISH CAPITAL IS RENDERED SAFE

LONDON TIMES APPROVES PURCHASE OF GRAND TRUNK BY GOVERNMENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Dec. 16.—The Times anticipates that a meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway stockholders will be held in January to ratify the agreement with the Canadian Government. The Times says nobody will pretend that the government has been generous, but the terms are better than at one time seemed probable. On the whole the arrangement must be regarded as satisfactory for it renders safe something like 70 to 80 millions of British capital invested in Canadian railways.

ALD. EDGAR DRAWS WORD PICTURE OF THE FUTURE RIVERSIDE PARK

Has Vision of a Playground Cut up by Canals With Rustic Bridges—Can be Made an Ideal Spot if Electors Authorize the Proposed Purchase.

The retiring City Council is anxious that the Riverside Park by-law shall receive the support of the electors at the polls on New Year's Day. They feel that the opposition that has been raised to spending the money on this park, is due partly to the fact that people do not fully realize what it will mean to the city.

Ald. Crowe suggested last night, that the city engineer be requested to make drawings of the park as it will appear after being cared for and properly fixed up. He further suggested that these be placed in conspicuous places to give the public an opportunity to see what they are voting on.

The suggestion was taken up by the other aldermen and Ald. Turner added to it that Mr. F. S. Boy be requested to make photographs from the engineer's pictures and slides made from these to be shown at picture theatres at each performance.

Then Ald. Edgar rose and made a vivid word picture of the park in the future, probably when none of the 1919 council are here to see it. The grounds will be all bevelled off. The beautiful structure of the bridge will appear to the north. Tiles can be driven in a straight line from the southern extremity of the present Riverside Park to a point immediately east of the C. P. R. bridge. This can all be filled in with small canals left for boats to go in and out from the boat houses on the shore. Over these canals can be built small rustic bridges that will appear as natural as possible. Then those two islands will be denied of underbrush and the same type of rustic bridges will join them with the shore. This is a great opportunity that the citizens of 1919 can give to the future citizens to have a park in the heart of the city for which Peterborough will be famous.

Ald. Edgar was elected to confer with the City Engineer in preparing the pictures of the future park to be shown to the public.

Ald. Phelan favored this plan and desired greater publicity from every point of view about the park project.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1919.

PREMIER BORDEN'S RETIREMENT.

IT HAS LONG BEEN known to the public that Sir Robert Borden was suffering from ill health, and the information occasioned no surprise when the terrible strain under which he has worked for the past five years was recalled. His announced retirement early in the New Year, while it will occasion regret among his followers, was not entirely unexpected. Following his frequent enforced sojourns at health resorts, no other outcome was to be looked for.

Sir Robert Borden enjoys today the distinction of being the only premier in the British Empire, or in any of the Allied countries for that matter, who was in office at the beginning of the war and in that official capacity took part in the deliberations of the peace conference. He made frequent trips to Europe during the progress of the war, going more than once as far as the fighting line, where he came into personal touch with the Canadian soldiers. The load of responsibility which he carried ever since August, 1914, was tremendous, and it is little wonder now that he finds himself on the verge of a physical collapse.

Without a shadow of justification for such a charge, the detractors of Sir Robert Borden have alleged that he was a weakling and that he was swayed in his administration by outside influences. If he had a fault as a servant of the public it lay rather in the opposite direction. All through the war he was inclined to govern by order-in-Council rather than by the old parliamentary methods, the exigencies of the times being his excuse. There were many legislative surprises for the people in war time. One order-in-Council followed another in quick succession. The country was placed under wartime prohibition. Conscription was put in force, both of these departures, however, being sanctioned by the majority behind the Premier. Certainly Sir Robert Borden cannot justly be accused of following in the rut of precedent during the war.

Sir Robert Borden not only stood alone among all his British compeers by holding the premiership of this country all through the war, but his administration during that crucial period of the nation's history was overwhelmingly endorsed by a vote of the people in 1917. If he appealed to the country as the leader of a coalition party, that fact alone does not explain his success. He would have been returned to power if Union government had never been organized.
